*Newsletter of
The Inter Faith Network for the UK*

Issue 1, May 1996

The Newsletter

Over 70 organisations with a commitment to helping build good relationships between Britain's different religions are now linked through The Inter Faith Network. Informally the Network also keeps many other organisations and individuals in touch.

Many of you have asked if it would be possible to have a newsletter which lets you know about developments at the Network, in each other's inter faith programmes, and more widely on the UK inter faith front. We plan to issue a simple and economical newsletter on these lines three times a year.

The newsletter will evolve to respond to your comments and suggestions for improvement. We look forward to hearing from you.

Harriet Crabtree

National Issue Updates

Collective Worship in Schools

Since 1944 the law has required state schools to provide collective worship for pupils and the Education Reform Act of 1988 added some complex provisions about collective worship. There has been considerable unease about the effect of these recent provisions, particularly about the way they have been interpreted by the Department for Education and Employment in its guidance to local authorities and to schools.

The Network has joined together with two other "umbrella" bodies, the Religious Education Council, and the National Association of SACRE's (Standing Advisory Councils on Religious Education) to sponsor a consultative project on the complex and sensitive issues surrounding collective worship in schools.

The first stage of the joint project has been to bring together views and suggestions which have emerged from recent debate within faith communities, teachers' unions, and educational organisations. The resulting material will provide background for stage two: a series of consultative conferences beginning this Autumn, exploring:

- * Whether or not a broad consensus can be established on what, if any, kind of provision for collective worship might be educationally appropriate for state schools in our society.
- * What changes, if any, to the present framework of law and Government guidance would be required to implement any proposed change.

The Inter Faith Network

The Inter Faith Network was founded in 1987. It works alongside its member organisations to increase mutual understanding and respect between the faith communities of the world religions represented in the UK today. It also works more widely within society to promote an appreciation of the importance of religious identity and inter faith understanding. To carry out these aims, the Network:

- Links member organisations including: representative bodies from Britain's nine major faith communities; national inter faith organisations; local inter faith groups; academic institutions and bodies concerned with multi faith education
- Acts as a central information and contact point for people wanting information or advice on inter faith affairs, or faith community contacts
- Provides a national forum for multi faith discussion of key issues
- Fosters local inter faith initiatives and organises meetings around Britain to bring together those working on inter faith issues
- Publishes materials to assist inter faith work around Britain
- Organises seminars on specific topics, such as religious identity and the law

Diary Dates

Thursday 4 July, Inter Faith Network AGM and Summer National Meeting in Peterborough. The topic for the national meeting is "Britain's Faith Communities: Equal Citizens?" and speakers will include Mr Sukhdev Sharma, Executive Director of the Commission for Racial Equality. Open to representatives of IFNET member organisations. Details from the Network Office (0171 388 0008).

Monday 18 November at 5.45pm. The Archbishop of Canterbury, Most Revd Dr George Carey, will give the Sir Francis Younghusband Memorial Lecture, "How far can we travel together - facing the real issues of inter faith dialogue". The event is to mark the sixtieth anniversary of the World Congress of Faiths (admission by ticket only). Tickets and venue details available from the World Congress of Faiths, 2 Market St, Oxford OX1 3EF.

Saturdays from May 25 onwards at the Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan in London, a series of talks on the Upanishads at 5.30 at the Bhavan, 4a Castletown Road, London W1. For more information, call 0171 381 3086.

Saturday 8 June Westminster Interfaith's Annual Multifaith Pilgrimage. This year's route includes ten places of worship in Acton, Ealing and Southall as well as a stop at the Ealing Town Hall where the Mayor will welcome pilgrims. Further details from Brother Daniel Faivre on 0181 843 0690.

This brief diary lists events with a specifically inter faith content which are of general interest. Events with a more local concern are already listed in the useful World Congress of Faiths publication One Family Newsletter. For information about One Family, and how to advertise both local and national events in it, contact: Mrs Jean Potter of WCF at 1 Ivy Lane, Teignmouth, Devon TQ14 8BT.

Religious Discrimination

For some time there has been debate about whether fresh legislation is needed to protect religious, as well as racial, identity against discrimination and abuse. Most recently this debate has been taking place in the context of the Inner Cities Religious Council working group on religious discrimination (with both Network and Commission for Racial Equality participation).

The CRE has now set up a special project team which is reviewing the evidence relating to cases of discrimination and analysing the options for possible legislation. The Commission held a meeting with faith community representatives in March to outline the planned work of the team. The Network will be focusing in part on these questions in its Summer National Meeting on 4 July, "Britain's Faith Communities: Equal Citizens?" at which Sukhdev Sharma, Executive Director of the CRE will speak.

Counting Up . . . . .

The next national Census is not due to be held until 2001. But already preparations for it are well under way and the timescale for agreeing on questions to be tested prior to final decisions on the content of the census is now surprisingly short.

One of the issues which is being examined is whether a question should be included on the census form about religious identity, perhaps in addition to the question about ethnic identity which was included for the first time in the 1991 census. The significance of religious identity in terms of meeting people's needs for public services and in other ways is being increasingly recognised.

The Board of Deputies of British Jews brought this particular issue to the attention of the Network's Executive Committee last Autumn, and the Network has been working with the Office of National Statistics and the Inner Cities Religious Council to ensure that the matter of a possible question on religious identity is properly examined and that all major faith communities have an opportunity to participate in the consultative process on this. A decision on whether to pursue the possibility of a "religious" question will be taken within the next few months.

Counting Down . . . . .

Those countries, including Britain, which have been shaped primarily by the Christian tradition, follow a calendar dated from the year in which Jesus is traditionally believed to have been born. Counting by this calendar, it is now only four years away from the second "millennium" (or period of a thousand years) from his birth.

The Churches in England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland have been considering how they should mark this event from a Christian perspective. In England, the Churches have also pressed the Government to recognize that the more general millennium celebrations need to have some spiritual and moral dimension. They have begun consultation with other faith communities about how the wider pattern of national and local celebrations and projects marking this significant date in the calendar, which is used by all of us for our public life together, can reflect and embrace the different facets of our society, including its religious diversity. Several members of the Network's Executive Committee, as well as Brian Pearce, were present at the initial consultation meeting in February chaired by the Anglican Bishop of Maidstone, Rt Revd Gavin Reid.

The Millennium Commission has substantial funds from the National Lottery at its disposal. It is responsible for overseeing the national exhibition now planned to be sited at Greenwich in London close to the 0° meridian. It will also be funding a wide range of capital and other projects.

Brian Pearce met in March with the Chief Executive of the Commission, Jennifer Page, to discuss its plans and funding schemes. The Commission's capital grants are only relevant for major projects since the minimum grant is normally £100,000 which must be matched by an equivalent amount from other sources.

However, the Commission is also entering into partnership with other grant making bodies, including voluntary sector organisations, to promote schemes to provide individuals with training and other opportunities to widen their experiences in ways which will be helpful to the community. It will fund up to 90% of these schemes with individual grants of £2,000 upwards. The Commission will also contribute towards an organisation's running costs for an approved scheme. Any organisation interested in finding out more about the Commission's funding schemes can contact them at 2 Little Smith Street, London, SW1P 3DH (Tel: 0171-340-2001).

The use of lottery money, even via the Millennium Commission, is controversial and there are divided views among and within Britain's faith communities about whether or not it is appropriate to use funds from this source. The Network hopes to provide an opportunity to discuss the ethics of lottery funding at an event later this year.

It may be that changing 1 to 2 at the start of the year on the calendars on our walls has little practical impact. But there is a general feeling that it will involve a symbolic turning of a large new page and a time for even more reflection and even more significant commitments for the future. So we need to be thinking in good time as a society about our "New Millennium's Resolutions"!

Christian Interfaith Practitioners' Association Launched

Last Autumn a new organisation was formed called the Christian Interfaith Practitioners' Association (CIPA). It developed, in part, out of the Association for Ministerial Training in a Multi Faith Society, and held its first meeting and AGM at Swanwick this April (at which Harriet Crabtree was a speaker, together with Michael Barnes and Paul Weller). It aims to link people working formally or informally on behalf of the churches in inter faith contexts and to offer a support structure and a place to reflect on such issues as training needs and theological questions.

Revd Dr Christopher Lamb of the Council of Churches for Britain and Ireland's Commission for Inter Faith Relations is a consultant to CIPA. The Secretary is Revd Andrew Wakefield and the Convenor is Revd Molly Kenyon. More information is available from Revd Wakefield at 47 Wilton Grove, Wimbledon, London, SW19 3QU.

Inter Faith Link Meetings

The Inter Faith Network held its North East England regional link meeting for inter faith organisers on 24 February in Leeds and its North West England link on 14 March in Blackburn. Participants brought news about their local initiatives:

North East England Link News

Bradford Concord Inter-Faith Society was represented at the meeting by Mr Bob Exon and Mr Mohinder Singh Chana. It is based at the Bradford Inter Faith Centre which helps with its mailing and hosts the annual programme of monthly meetings. In recent years, a multi faith walk has become a fixture in Concord's calendar and this takes place at the time of the Bradford Festival. Concord is working on a constitution for the group and has also been thinking about the question of whether or not Bradford needs a representative "council of faiths" to deal with public city issues.

Sheffield Interfaith was represented by Dr Debjani Chatterjee, Revd Sandra Howes, and Ms Shelley Littlefield. The group recently launched a newsletter and sponsors talks, events, and visits to places of worship. This year around 70 people attended its third annual conference which was on the theme of "Human Rights from a Spiritual Perspective".

Cleveland Interfaith Group was represented by Revd Richard Davison. Shortly after the link meeting, on 23 March they held a major meeting in Middlesbrough on social issues and how faith groups relate to each other in Cleveland. Brian Pearce and Mohinder Singh Channa (Bradford Concord) and Ishtiaq Ahmed (Director of Bradford REC) were the speakers and nearly 100 people came. CIG secured a grant of £500 from the Local Authority for the meeting.

Harrogate Inter Faith Group was represented by Ms Catherine Margham. Recently they have been approached by a link group for local teachers to give school presentations. They have also done a joint peace celebration event with the local UN group.

Kirklees and Calderdale Inter Faith Fellowship was represented by Mr Ranjit Singh Gill and Mrs Nancy Solomons. Last year the group organised a multi faith walk, which went well. They also organised their annual event at the Town Hall in connection with One World Week.

Leeds Concord Inter-Faith Fellowship was represented by Dr Peter Bell, Ms Dorte Haarhaus, Mr Manu Kokardia, and Dr Muhammad Turabi. Concord has been running a series of inter faith talks with people of different faiths offering personal reflections on such topics as prayer, scripture, and the understanding of the divine in different religions. It also has a programme of events particularly for women and has now added a well attended series for young people called "Young People Talking" which there are plans to develop into a conference called "Young People Speaking: Approaching the Millennium".

Concord has been developing a link with the Chaplaincy at Leeds University which is hoping to set up a student inter faith forum. The group also hosts a programme for A level students visiting Leeds from Torquay and arranges visits for them to local faith communities and places of worship. Leeds is also one of the local inter faith groups which has a developing link with its local Council of Christians and Jews.

Newcastle and Durham. Revd John Grice represented the North Eastern Network for Inter Faith Dialogue and the Tyne and Wear Racial Equality Council Inter Faith Panel. Among the initiatives he described was a Christian-Muslim meeting set up last year by Revd Andy Lie of the Diocese of Newcastle which was attended, among others, by Canon Dr Philip Lewis from Bradford and by Fuad Nadhi, Editor of Q News. A Christian-Jewish meeting is now planned which will involve visits to share the Shabbat meal in Jewish homes. Revd Grice is also involved in the Tyne and Wear Race Equality Inter Faith Panel which has representatives from the different faith communities and continues to hold occasional meetings. He mentioned, in particular, its "inter faith families" series where they visit members from different faiths at home and experience their faith as lived in the family environment, usually on a Sunday evening. A Gateshead Inter Faith Forum has also been established recently.

Shortly after the North East Link, Brian Pearce and Harriet Crabtree visited a number of inter faith practitioners from different faith communities in Durham, Newcastle, Gateshead and Middlesbrough to talk about developments in that area.

North West England Link News

Blackburn: was represented by Revd Colin Albin, Mr Abdul Hamid Qureshi, and Moulana Rafiq Ismail Patel.

Moulana Patel is a full time imam at the Troy Street mosque. He graduated around a year ago at the age of 21 from the Dar al-Ulum at Dewsbury. At that time he hoped to pursue further studies in Madina or at Al-Azar, but local people persuaded him to stay put! In addition to his duties in the community, Moulana Patel edits Unity/Al-Ittihaad. This is the magazine of the organisation Unity, which is made up of around twelve young Muslim scholars and religious personnel. It is mainly based in Blackburn but also has branches in Bolton and Preston. Unity focuses particularly on modern issues, morals, and etiquette.

Revd Colin Albin is the Bishop's Adviser on Inter-Faith Relations, for the Anglican Diocese of Blackburn and Mr Qureshi is Director of the Lancashire Council of Mosques (as well as a member of the Network's Executive Committee). They told the meeting about their work and, in particular about an important recent initiative, about which we asked for the special report on the opposite page.

The Preston Inter Faith Forum was represented by Ms Joy Sabour and Revd Peter Thomas. The forum is about three and a half years old and meets at the University. During the past winter period meetings have focused on how the different faiths in Preston regard the family. The last meeting was at the Gujarat Hindu Centre, and the next one will be at a Muslim venue.

Mr Suleman Kazi reported on the inter faith dimensions of his work in Preston where he is a development officer for the Lancashire Council of Mosques. This includes talking to the many groups and individuals who want to know more about the mosque and about Muslim life.

Mr Navekar and Mr Limbachia came from the Gujarat Hindu Society which has been established in Preston for 25 years and is well known across Britain. Mr Navekar sees inter faith matters as very important but warns that in that, as in most things, people often tend to want to leave things to the leaders. His hope is that it may be possible to interest a wider range of people. Mr Limbachia stressed the fact that relations between faith communities in Preston tend to be good anyway.

Accrington was represented by Father David Lyons who is working to increase local Christian-Muslim conversation and understanding. There has in the past been a dialogue forum but this rather fizzled out and he hopes people may be drawn back in through a well planned shared social or sporting event.

Revd Ron Lewis retired from his work as a United Reformed Church minister in Blackburn six months ago and has been taking a brief break from inter faith work. He is presently arranging a Christian/Jewish/Muslim "trialogue" for the URC in Upholland.

Pendle Inter Faith Group was represented by its facilitator Revd Sally Thomas and by Revd Noble Samuel. They report that the picture in Nelson is quite positive in many ways. The group has been in existence for just over two years and meets four times a year. They have been well supported by the local REC which has helped ensure wide representation (although less from the Muslim community than they hoped). Revd Thomas commented that group members have all become far more aware than they were in the beginning of the fact that every faith community contains a number of denominations or strands (sometimes not totally approving of each other).

Nelson has a sizeable Asian Christian population. Presbyterian minister Revd Samuel explained that his ministry involves, among other things, working with this part of Nelson's Christian community. He commented on the fact that there have not always been good relations between Asian Christians and Asian Muslims in the area. He hopes that mosques will join churches in trying to build bridges between communities.

Kendal Inter Faith Group was represented by Revd Brenda Willis (who is also the United Reformed Church's representative on the Council of Churches for Britain and Ireland's Commission for Inter Faith Relations). The presence of the nearby Buddhist Manjushri Institute has generated increased inter faith interest locally.

The Merseyside Inter Faith Group was represented by Dr Khan, who is also President of the local branch of the UK Islamic Mission. He and Canon Michael Wolfe have spent the last couple of years successfully regenerating the group. The City itself is very cosmopolitan and has a wide range of faith traditions and they hope to involve more people from all of them. At recent meetings, Hindus have presented on the origins of Hinduism and Muslims on awareness of Islam.

Special Report: Building Good Relations Between Christians and Muslims in Lancashire

The Lancashire Council of Mosques represents 50 mosques and madrassas in Lancashire and runs a project called the "Lancashire Muslim Community Development Project." One area of its work is to develop better understanding and good relationships within the wider community. The Church of England is also keen to develop understanding and tolerance between Islam and Christianity on a local level.

From this common foundation the LCM and the C of E (Blackburn Diocese) initiated a forum for discussing issues of mutual concern. It has met for the last five years and is chaired by the Bishop of Blackburn, the Rt Revd Alan Chesters. The members are honorary officers of the Lancashire Council of Mosques and Anglican clergy from various parts of Lancashire (which essentially covers the same geographical area as the Blackburn Diocese). The forum meets twice a year.

As a result of the growth of confidence and trust within this forum, it was decided that a number of joint projects could be tackled. Therefore, over the last eighteen months, various activities have taken place which have brought a wide range of Muslims and Christians together. The first activity which took place was a visit of Muslims to Blackburn Cathedral. Then, a large number of Christians attended a local mosque. Participants thoroughly enjoyed these events, which provided learning opportunities as well as the chance to talk freely with people of another faith. It has been generally agreed that such activities should continue on an ongoing basis.

The most recent and ambitious project, was a community relations initiative called "Building Bridges in Lancashire". Its three objectives were:-

1. To build mutual trust and understanding between Muslims and Christians;
2. To help forge links between people and organisations from the various communities of Lancashire;
3. To create an opportunity whereby various individuals, organisations and statutory bodies could form relationships, through which different community relations projects may develop.

The project team was led by Revd Colin Albin, Bishop's Adviser on Inter Faith Relations, and Mr Abdul Hamid Qureshi, Director of Lancashire Council of Mosques. They worked closely together to establish a regular consultation process to enable the Forum to organise an event this March which brought together over 150 people including leaders of the mosques and madrassas (evening schools) in Lancashire, leaders of the Church of England (Blackburn Diocese), leaders and chief executives of local council, mayors and mayoresses of the different boroughs, MPs and European MEPs.

The Bishop of Blackburn and Mr Rafique Malik, the Director of the Blackburn Community Relations Executive addressed the meeting and it was then opened for participant comments. Some excellent points were made, not least those concerning the special needs of young people and learning to live together in a multi-faith society. Afterwards, a substantial dinner was provided with a choice of foods traditional to the communities involved. The programme ended with a vote of thanks offered by both the Bishop of Blackburn and Mr Maulana Sidat, Chairman of the Lancashire Council of Mosques.

A significant amount of positive feedback and appreciation has been expressed by those who were present and the forum has decided to establish the event on an annual basis. To a very large extent, the project's objectives have been achieved and the unique initiative has demonstrated that there is great potential for future developments in Lancashire. Plans for meetings in the near future are already under way, including one this May where faith community leaders and local community leaders will explore possible projects centring on the needs of young people. (Report based on information provided by the project leaders)

Two other people passed their news on to the Network for inclusion at the NW link meeting. Revd Robert Lawrence reports from Bury that he hopes to develop links with the Muslim community as well as to interest members of other faiths in coming together to explore common concerns. The tradition of an annual mayoral inter faith breakfast for leaders of different faiths continues, and councillors working on it hope to involve young people in a similar event in the near future. Stanley Hope reports from Rochdale Interfaith Action that in December, RIA joined the local Quaker group in a candlelight vigil in the town centre to draw attention to the situation in former Yugoslavia. They helped to collect money and goods to send by road, to be shared with people of all religions. In January, RIA sent a letter to their MP about the Asylum and Immigration Bill.

Membership Updates

Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan (Institute of Indian Culture) in London has recently hosted a series of talks by its Director Dr Shastry on prayers, mythology, philosophy, messages and stories in the Rig Veda, as part of its ongoing programme to promote inter faith dialogues and mutual awareness between the various faiths in London.

The Calamus Foundation, which promotes good relations between Christians, Muslims and Jews, held a series of talks in February and March on the theme of Forgiveness and Reconciliation: A Muslim-Christian Dialogue. Talks focused on such issues as "Peace and Reconciliation: the case of Bosnia" and "Forgiveness and tolerance in a pluralist society."

Cardiff Interfaith and the Cardiff United Nations Association co-sponsored a meeting on 22 February at which the former Somali ambassador to the U.S and to Nigeria, Dr Yusuf Omar Al-Azhari, spoke on "Accountability - How to be Responsible for One's Own Nation". A former political prisoner in his own country, Dr Al-Azhari is among those who work in exile to further the peace and reconciliation process in Somalia. This was followed by a series of talks to sixth formers on "the path to reconciliation".

Coventry Interfaith Group members went on 18 April to meet with the Leamington inter faith group at the premises of SATKAAR, an elderly Asian women's group based in Leamington. A film about SATKAAR was followed by a talk by Mr Desai about his practical inter faith work in hospital.

International Association for Religious Freedom (British Chapter) staff member Helen Wuscher spoke on 31 March to the Annual Meeting of the General Assembly of Unitarian and Free Christian Churches about the IARF Congress to be held in Korea this summer.

The Northern Ireland Inter-Faith Forum hosted a special exhibition and discussion of Baha'i artist George Fleming's 30 oil paintings depicting the world's great religions in symbolic and historical representation. Speakers at the 12 March event in Lisburn were the Lord Mayor of Lisburn; Dr Mamoun Mobayed (Chairman of the Forum); George Fleming; and Revd Maurice Ryan (of the Forum). The exhibition is now on tour in the province.

Wolverhampton Inter Faith Group held its Annual Prayer for Peace in January at St Peter's Church. Around 100 came, including many young people. The theme was "the Vision of Peace". Young people gave presentations and read about peace from their particular holy books or prayed in the style and language of their faith tradition. A booklet of prayers and readings was produced (£1 from WIFG, 43 Princess St, Wolverhampton, WV1 1HD).

Network Funding: We have just heard that one of our major supporters since the start, has made a fresh three year grant at an increased level. This is a Trust whose usual policy is not to renew grants over a long period to the same organisations but in the Network's case they have re-affirmed the importance of inter faith work with this grant and with a letter of warm encouragement. We welcome members' suggestions for any trusts and individuals who may be willing to support the Network's inter faith programme and projects.

Rabbi Hugo Gryn 1930-1996

As many of you will know, Rabbi Hugo Gryn died on 18 August at the age of 66. There has been an outpouring of tributes from the many people who will miss him deeply.

After surviving the concentration camps of the Nazi Holocaust, he went on to become a much loved and respected rabbi, and a tireless fighter for racial justice and for better inter community relations. In the last few years, millions of people across the country came to know him through his contributions to the Radio 4 programme The Moral Maze.

Hugo was one of the earliest pioneers of inter faith dialogue and cooperation in this country. He was closely involved in the work of several of our member organisations. And he was, of course, involved from the earliest days in the planning of The Inter Faith Network itself. He served as Co-Chair from its establishment in the Spring of 1987 up to the Summer of 1994.

Rt Revd Jim Thompson, Bishop of Bath and Wells, served with Hugo as Network Co-Chair from 1987 to 1992 and shares some of his memories of him on page 3.

Suffolk Inter Faith Resource Autumn Programme includes 10 events with talks on topics as varied as "Green Burials" and "Devotional Hinduism and the Theory of Karma, Birth, Death and Salvation". For more details of the programme and of the annual Israel Study Tour, contact the Administrator, Deborah Hargreave on 01473 233447.

This brief diary lists events with a specifically inter faith content which are of general interest to people beyond the local area. Events with a more local concern are already listed in the useful World Congress of Faiths publication One Family Newsletter. For information about One Family, and how to advertise both local and national events in it, contact: Mrs Jean Potter of WCF at 1 Ivy Lane, Teignmouth, Devon TQ14 8BT.

The Shap Working Party on World Religions in Education Multi Faith Calendar 1996-97

Shap was set up in 1969 to encourage the study and teaching of world religions. Each year Shap produces a journal focusing on a particular theme of relevance to religious education: this year's is "Exploring Conflict and Reconciliation". The journal has just been published along with the latest issue of the invaluable Shap Calendar of Religious Festivals, covering August 1996 to December 1997. Copies of the Journal cost £6 and of the Calendar £3.50 (or £8 for both) from: The Shap Working Party, c/o The National Society's RE Centre, 36 Causton Street, London SW1P 4AU. (0171-932-1194).

Bishop Jim Thompson pays tribute to Rabbi Hugo Gryn

Bishop Jim writes: "To spend time with Hugo was to have a sense of hope and light, even where things looked dark and impossible. He triumphed in the strength of God - not only over Auschwitz but over racism, anti-Semitism and conflicts.

Although we were Co-chairs of the Network, in its early years Hugo carried with Brian Pearce the major weight of the work. I remember so many times in our work together in the Inter Faith Network, when potential conflict clouded minds, out of the mist would come one of Hugo's quite complicated stories and the laughter somehow healed the sore place and the human loving and trusting was restored.

Talking with Hugo was always fun and illuminating. I remember in Coventry Cathedral, in dialogue with him, learning the importance of reparation in any creed of forgiveness. I feel he was a rabbi to us all - marvellous in the pulpit - hardly taller than the pile of books he had brought with him - producing for Christians and for others, new and old, earthly and heavenly insights from God's word. To share the Passover with Hugo, Jackie and their family is something we shall never forget. As the great stories were told, as they included us with love and affection, we were moved by the way in which the ancient and the modern came together in a family and the sacred meal.

The trouble is that when someone has meant so much to us, a beloved person, a beloved voice, bringing sanity and light invisible to our lostness and our struggle to find the truth - we feel such a loss as though the world was darker, the laughter less loving, the good wisdom more fragile. But as we face into this real erosion of our will, I can just hear that familiar voice saying in my ear "There was a rabbi once..." and I can't help but smile and hope, and love the Lord who gave him to us."

May his memory be a blessing.

National Updates

Religious Discrimination

Earlier this year the Commission for Racial Equality set up a special project team to collect evidence of discrimination relating to religious identity and to analyse the options for possible legislation. As reported in May's Inter Faith Update, the Commission met with faith community representatives in March to outline the planned work of the team.

The CRE team's work is now under way after some delay caused by the illness of team leader, Mr Khurshid Drabu. The Network office has been keeping in close touch. A series of regional consultative conferences will take place in the coming months in the Midlands, the North of England, London, Scotland and Wales.

The team has also prepared a leaflet, to be published shortly in a number of languages, dealing with cases where religious discrimination might constitute indirect racial discrimination and therefore fall within the scope of the Race Relations Act 1976. For further information contact Mr Khurshid Drabu, Commission for Racial Equality, Elliot House, 10-12 Allington Street, London SW1E 5EH.

The Inner Cities Religious Council will be publishing, at the end of October, a general booklet on ways in which people who find themselves suffering discrimination on grounds of religious identity can seek redress. For information, contact Revd David Horn at the Department of the Environment, 2 Marsham Street, London SW1P 3EB.

The 1996 Asylum and Immigration Act

On 24 July Parliament passed the Asylum and Immigration Act. Many organisations had expressed their dismay at the Bill as it was going through Parliament. The Network's AGM in July, responding to a suggestion by the Birmingham Council of Faiths and the Board of Deputies of British Jews, unanimously passed a resolution expressing the strongest possible concern at important aspects of the Bill. Copies of the resolution were sent to the Home Secretary and the Secretary of State for Social Services and replies defending the provisions of the proposed legislation were subsequently received.

Lobbying by the many concerned organisations and individuals did lead to some small but useful changes to the proposed legislation. The Act, nevertheless, removes entitlement to benefits from any asylum seeker who applies for refugee status in-country and any asylum seeker who exercises their right of appeal against a refusal of refugee status.

Information on the exact provisions of the Act and on the changes that were achieved through lobbying can be obtained from The Refugee Council at 3 Bondway, London SW8 1SJ.

The new regulations are causing serious hardship for many genuine asylum seekers in the UK. The Refugee Council estimates that at least 10,000 people have no access to benefits and many are facing homelessness and destitution.

There is a serious need for:

- donations of money, no matter how small
- donations of clothing, food and toiletries
- use of premises for storage and distribution of donations
- volunteer help in London and in other areas of the country.

If you or your faith community or inter faith organisation thinks it might be able to help, contact Anne Thomas at the Refugee Council for further information or contacts in your part of the country (0171 582 6922).

Two other useful contacts are: Faith Asylum Refuge, 33 Seymour Place, London W1H 6AT, tel 0171 723 4404 (where people of many faiths work together on asylum issues in the Greater London area); Joint Council for the Welfare of Immigrants (0171 252 8706).

On refugees and asylum, see also the item on Tinsley House, near Gatwick under "East and West Sussex" on p7.

Hospital and Prison Chaplaincy and Civic Religion

On 9 September, members of Britain's faith communities joined the Archbishop of Canterbury, Most Revd Dr George Carey, at Lambeth Palace to discuss the recently published report "The Church of England and Other Faiths". The meeting was arranged in consultation with the Network.

The report was the result of two years of intensive research by Professor James Beckford and Dr Sophie Gilliat at the Department of Sociology of Warwick University.

The project was funded by the Leverhulme Trust with additional support from the Church of England. It looked in detail at existing arrangements for the spiritual care of hospital patients and prison inmates of different faiths and how civic religious events are arranged. In particular it looked at the extent to which the Anglican clergy are presently called on to facilitate participation of other faith personnel and how they and other faith personnel feel about the arrangements. The report analyses questionnaire data and site visits to show both the positive and negative aspects of the present situation.

Several of the participants at the Lambeth meeting were men and women with many years of experience in the fields covered by the research. There was a cautious welcome for the report as a first step in the process needed to move towards a situation where there is more adequate involvement of all the faiths in these sectors of our public life, and appropriate funding. Participants spoke of a "partnership" of faiths working together to ensure this.

The Inter Faith Consultative Group, chaired by Rt Revd John Austin, Bishop of Aston, will be taking forward work on the report for the Church of England. Further information can be obtained from Revd Canon Dr Christopher Lamb at Church House, Great Smith St, London SW1P 3NZ (0171 222 9011).

For further information on the report itself, contact Professor Beckford, Dept. of Sociology, Warwick University, Coventry CV4 7AL.

Census 2001

In May we reported that discussions were taking place about a possible question on religious identity which might be included in the 2001 national Census.

In early August the Office of National Statistics made it known that they had decided that a question on religious identity was not a priority and so would not be included in the trial forms being designed for testing in the near future. They based this conclusion on consultation with Government Departments, local authorities and other public bodies.

Faith community representatives at the meeting where this decision was reported expressed considerable disappointment. They believe that if a question about ethnic identity is included (as it was for the first time in 1991) the data from it will be of significantly less value if it is not accompanied by a question on religious identity.

Representatives find it difficult to understand how the providers of public and other services will be able ensure that they are meeting the needs of different faith communities if they do not have access to accurate information about numbers and geographical distribution. They are now taking up the matter at Ministerial level.

C of E launches document on church premises and other faiths

In July, the Church of England published a report, "Communities and Buildings: Church of England Premises and Other Faiths". It was produced for the General Synod of the Church of England (its governing body) by the C of E's Board of Mission Inter Faith Consultative Group.

Revd Canon Dr Christopher Lamb, who is the Secretary to IFCOG and a Network Executive Committee member, reports that Synod agreed that the document "provides the proper framework for all policy-making about the use of church buildings by people of other faiths and the disposal of church buildings to people of other faiths".

The report covers the use of church buildings by people of other faiths and the possible disposal of redundant church buildings to people of other faiths. It gives guidance to Church of England parishes which are wrestling with these issues. Other faith communities will also find it helpful to be aware of the guidelines offered in the report. It costs £5.00 including postage from Church House Bookshop, 31 Great Smith St, London SW1P 3BN.

Network Updates

New members for the Network

At this Summer's AGM in Peterborough on 4 July, applications for membership of the Network were accepted from:

The Network of Buddhist Organisations (UK)
- a new linking body bringing together around 40 Buddhist organisations and groups within this country. Membership by the NBO will provide us with a wider range of links within the Buddhist community.

Network of Sikh Organisations (UK)
The NSO (UK), was launched at a conference held in London in Summer 1995. It has over 40 member organisations and becomes a member of the Inter Faith Network in place of the Sikh Council for Inter-Faith Relations (which is now a member of the NSO).

Jamiat-ul-Ulama Britain (Association of Muslim Scholars).

This Muslim body draws its membership primarily from within the Deobandi movement.

Suffolk Inter-Faith Resource.

This local inter faith group is based at the inter faith centre at Suffolk College in Ipswich and brings together members of faith communities living in Suffolk.

National Association of Standing Advisory Councils for Religious Education.

NASACRE is an "umbrella" body to which local SACRE's throughout England belong.

And a new Vice Chair

At the AGM in July, Dr Manazir Ahsan was elected as a Vice-Chair of the Network. He is the Director General of the Islamic Foundation and has been a member of the Network's Executive Committee since 1992. He has a long standing commitment to building good inter faith relations in the UK and abroad and has participated in a number of Jewish-Christian-Muslim dialogues and spoken widely on inter faith issues.

Dr Ahsan is, by training, a historian of the Middle East and among his publications are Social Life Under the Abbasids; Muslim Festivals; The Qur'an: Basic Teachings; and Sacrilege Versus Civility: Muslim Perspectives on the Satanic Verses Affair. He is also the editor of Muslim World Book Review and of Encounters: Journal of Inter-Cultural Perspectives.

Dr Ahsan takes over from Dr Mughram Al-Ghamdi who was until recently Director General of the Islamic Cultural Centre at Regent's Park and has now moved to become High Master of the King Fahad Academy.

Dr Mughram Al Ghamdi served as a Vice Chair for the Network since its founding in 1987 and consistently offered both valuable support and wise advice.

Regional link meetings

The Inter Faith Network organises "link" meetings around the country for inter faith organisers. These meetings offer a chance to share news and ideas and learn from each other's successes as well as discussing the challenges facing the various groups and initiatives.

There have been two links since the last news letter. These were the Southern Counties meeting in Crawley on 20 June and the South West meeting which took place in Bristol on 13 July.

The Southern Counties Link

East and West Sussex.

Revd Canon Michael Butler and Dr Peter Bishop told the meeting about inter faith relations in the Brighton and Hove areas. Dr Bishop explained his background as an academic who has worked both in Brighton and Bristol and has now retired back to Hayward's Heath. Dr Bishop is very much involved in the local Council of Christians and Jews branch in Hove and hopes other links may be developed which can encompass the Muslim community in the area.

Canon Butler reported on inter faith developments in the Anglican Diocese of Chichester where he is the inter faith contact person and has a remit to try and take inter faith matters forward on a more thorough footing within the Diocese. In his view, inter faith relations are very important in areas such as Sussex where there are relatively few ethnic and religious minority members and something of a history of xenophobic and even fascist movements (as well as left wing and "alternative" movements). Brighton is the only town in the Diocese which has a significantly mixed population.

Canon Butler also talked about Tinsley House, near Gatwick, where there are many refugees to whom he would like to see local faith communities offering supportive contact (alongside Roman Catholics from Surrey who are already very much involved).

Mrs Queenie Hopcroft and Mrs Margery Gopel contributed news of Crawley in West Sussex. It has no inter faith group as such, but it has lively interaction between the faiths, particularly on social issues where the local Racial Equality Council is involved. Mrs Hopcroft spoke of an inter faith service for peace which was held at Worth Abbey.

Guildford

Revd Andrew Facey explained that he had recently become the inter faith adviser for the Anglican Diocese of Guildford, as well as becoming an incumbent after four years as a priest in the diocese. Amid the general chaos of house moving and new job, he is grappling with the question of what shape inter faith work might take in a relatively mono-cultural area such as his own, where Woking is the only significantly multi faith town.

Midhurst

Revd Chris Boxley of Midhurst Grammar described a convention he had organised for 17-19 year olds. It was designed to allow young people of many different backgrounds to meet and learn about each other's lives and traditions.

Portsmouth

Revd Canon David Partridge spoke of the inter faith situation in the Diocese of Portsmouth. He described attitudes as seeming rather defensive and inward looking, despite the best efforts of a number of individuals and the good work of the Portsmouth Racial Equality Council. On the horizon, however, is a large One World inter faith worship event and this may lead to more interest.

Rochester and Canterbury

Mr Ken Knight told the meeting about his work with the Anglican Diocese of Rochester's Council for Mission and Unity which has an inter faith committee which has been more active in the last two years than for some while. The Diocese has a very diverse population, but some areas, such as Rochester itself, are more multi faith than others.

The DCMU has arranged a number of events designed to give information about the various faiths, with speakers from the faiths, but the only ones that have been well attended have been those geared specifically to the clergy. The committee plans shortly to produce a series of brochures on the various faiths and how Christians can build bridges of understanding with other communities.

Mr Knight also described the activities of the Medway Inter Faith Group which is running visits to different faiths' places of worship and rotating its meeting venue between these. Around 10-20 people come regularly to meetings. He mentioned that two years ago, another local initiative was launched as the "West Kent Inter Faith Group". Its focus is on shared exploration of key religious themes with particular reference to the scriptures of the various traditions.

Southampton

SIFL was represented by Mrs Sumaya Wallaya and Mr Abdul Azim Mochtar. Mrs Wallaya explained that Southampton is a very multi cultural city with a substantial Asian community and many different faiths. Inter faith work has gone on at various points in past years, but mainly on an individual basis.

More recently Mrs Wallaya has worked with Revd Stephen Barton and others to create a more structured body. This was launched in March this year as Southampton Inter Faith Link. Nearly 300 people of all faiths came to the launch which was also attended by the Lady Mayor.

SIFL links the Baha'i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim, and Sikh communities. Its meetings are relatively informal and happen every other month and so far are well attended. The Link's aims are to build bridges of understanding and friendship between the different faith communities and also to ensure the availability locally of accurate information about the faiths.

One of their first areas of work has been looking at the needs of hospital patients of different faiths. They held an event focusing on this which was well attended by health professionals.

The links are as important as the events. Most recently, a local rabbi responded to Muslim concern over the anti Muslim leaflets purportedly sent by Kahane followers (but widely thought to be a pernicious hoax), by offering to facilitate a meeting between Jewish and Muslim leaders.

Although it was decided by the Muslims that this would not be necessary there is relief that the kind of links are being made that will allow communities to meet more easily to resolve any problems that may arise, and also to work together on issues of common concern.

Woking

Mr John Carver talked about the local inter faith group which used to be coordinated by Mr Brian Reep and which Mr Carver is now helping facilitate. The group continues to meet on an occasional basis and many of the same people come year after year, but Mr Carver detects a general lack of wider interest and enthusiasm.

Mr Carver is at present working on a One World Week event which he hopes will generate fresh interest.

South West Link

Bristol

Bristol Inter Faith Group is now in its sixth year. Individual membership cost £3.50 and corporate membership £25. Mrs June Ridd reported that there is good multi-faith representation on the Committee but less multi-faith participation in events. There can be a tendency for people of particular faith communities to attend meetings only when the speaker or agenda is of a particular interest to them.

The Group's last AGM with Jorgen Nielsen, Director of the Centre for the Study of Islam and Christian Muslim Relations, Selly Oak was, however, most successful with good attendance from across communities.

There is quite a contrast between attendance at the group's regular meetings and the attendance of several hundred people at a social event organised by the Group in April under the auspices of the Lord Mayor. For its next round of meetings, the group is taking "Religion and "Society" as its theme.

Upheaval in the government structure in the Bristol area has made it difficult to establish effective communication at local authority level but the Group is consulted, for example, by hospital chaplains and teachers.

Exeter

Exeter Inter Faith Group was represented by Mr David Potter, Mrs Jean Potter and Ms Gail Bradley. Mr David Potter explained that Exeter Inter Faith Group originally started as a University venture launched by Ms Sandy Martin and Ms Helen Fry. The student base gave it a floating population and therefore a lack of continuity. For a time the group seemed to be moribund, but it then became more focused on local residents and gained support from Revd Martyn Goss, the Anglican Diocesan Inter Faith Officer.

The group has about 30 members on its mailing list and notices about the meeting circulate more widely. It is a very informal one which usually meets at neutral venues such as the Devon and Exeter Institution. Alongside the group there is an active Council of Christians and Jews branch.

Ms Gail Bradley spoke about her work in the Probation Department linked to Exeter Prison and the inter faith work she has been involved in together with the Prison Chaplains there.

Gloucestershire

Gloucestershire Inter Faith Action was represented by Revd Captain Alan Fitch. GIFA covers a large catchment area and, over time, has absorbed some other small local inter faith groups. It has nearly 90 individual members and 14 corporate faith group members including the Anglican Diocese of Gloucester and the Roman Catholic Diocese of Clifton. The local Chinese and Japanese Associations are also involved.

GIFA has an office which is open in the mornings and often also the afternoon. This has become a focal point for the group's activities. The office team are paid partly by the Gloucester Anglican Diocese, and partly by the Sunni Muslim community. The telephone line is funded by the Shi'a Muslim community and the Secretary of the group, Mr Musa, is a Shi'a Muslim. A new computer has been provided by the Baha'i community. So it is a multi-faith co-operative venture.

The Association meets in different parts of the county including Gloucester, Cheltenham and more rural venues. Attendance ranges from 30 or so up to 120-150. A good deal of work is done with schools to help coordinate visits to local faith community centres and to keep the flow of these to a manageable level. As part of this process an attempt is made to ensure schools prepare their schools properly for the visits beforehand and the Association arranges visits to schools to help with this and to provide relevant literature and texts.

A newsletter is produced every six or eight weeks. The Association has also been helping newly formed groups in Hereford and in Worcester. There are plans for a major inter faith event in Gloucester and Cheltenham in the Autumn (see Diary Listings).

Swindon

Mr Vernon Griffiths presented a report from his wife, Margaret Griffiths, Secretary of the Swindon Inter Faith Group who was not able to be present. Swindon is a somewhat isolated urban area but with significant minority communities. The group has been going well recently. Sometimes meetings take the form of shared meals followed by discussion, sometimes visits.

Sometimes the group is involved in action over local issues, such as discussion about the provision of appropriate prayer facilities at a planned new hospital. They have helped in the preparation of booklets for advising staff on faith community needs at local hospitals.

Torbay

Torbay Inter Faith Forum was represented by Ms Heather Savini. The forum was launched 15 years or so ago on the initiative of a local Unitarian Minister, and a Baha'i. There were meetings for about ten years and the group was an active one with visiting speakers and the organising of an annual Day of Prayer for Peace in the local Quaker Meeting House. During One World Week an international event used to be mounted at South Devon Technical College.

Over time a pattern developed, however, of members of the Forum going to the meetings of the Exeter Inter Faith Group and the local Torbay Group had in consequence rather crumbled away. However, there are now discussions about the possibility of re-launching the Forum.

There are clearly questions here about the extent to which a group maintains its own identity, becomes a "satellite" of a nearby larger group or becomes absorbed by it.

West Somerset.

Mr John Gamlin reported that West Somerset Inter Faith Group presently has nearly 30 members. Most are Christians. The group produces a regular newsletter for its members. Although the area is not very religiously diverse, the group feel it is important to influence attitudes and calling the group "inter faith" helps do this. The group does not meet the current criteria for membership of the Network but Mr Gamlin noted the support and help which the group had received from the Network, despite this.

Over the last year, WSIFG has held four meetings with visiting speakers. Since the group operates quite some way away from multi faith areas, members need to travel to visit other faith communities and places of worship. Over the last year four visits have been arranged to religious centres in other areas.

Rev Kevin Tingay spoke about his inter faith work in the area as Inter Faith Adviser in the Anglican Diocese of Bath and Wells and mentioned the work of the Bath Inter Faith Group. Within the Christian Churches in this relatively rural area, a great deal of effort goes into maintaining churches with small congregations. There can be a feeling that inter faith issues are irrelevant to their problems and to the pattern of local society. However, he has tried to stimulate interest in inter faith issues and, for example, a group meets regularly at his house for discussion meetings. In rural areas inter faith work is very much the role of the "leaven".

"We don't live in a multi faith area - how can we be 'inter faith'?"

During the general discussion at the South West and Southern counties links, participants talked about many aspects of local inter faith work, especially about the challenges of deciding what is right for each group's particular area and whether their town might benefit from having a "council of faiths" of some kind, on which the area's main faith communities are represented.

The Southern and South Western counties of England are less religiously diverse than some parts of the UK. So, not surprisingly, an issue which came up more strongly than usual in these two links was what it means to work for inter faith understanding and friendship in a relatively "un-multi faith" area.

4 suggestions from the link discussions:

1. If your group is in a relatively un-diverse area, invite speakers from more multi faith areas.
2. If you live in a multi faith area, consider setting up a special link with a group in a less diverse area.
3. Arrange occasional visits to places of worship in other parts of the country.
4. Think about an annual exchange visit with a group from an area with a different religious make up to your own. It could involve an overnight stay with each other's families.

The Network will shortly be sending all groups a list of inter faith contacts in different parts of the country to help make getting in touch with each other easier.

Special Feature: Focus on Faiths in Ireland

Ireland is mainly Christian, but it is more religiously diverse than many people realise.

Revd Maurice Ryan is a Senior Lecturer in the Religious Studies Department at Stranmillis College, Belfast and Secretary of the Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum. He has recently published an illustrated book Another Ireland: An Introduction to Ireland's Ethnic-Religious Minority Communities (Stranmillis College, 1996).

Inter Faith Activity has been arranged in the North for a number of years through the Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum which became a Network member in 1994. Maurice Ryan's book was inspired by his involvement with the Forum since it began in 1993.

In Another Ireland, he writes, "In celebration of the first World's Parliament of Religions in Chicago in 1893...the year 1993 was designated a 'Year of Inter-Religious Understanding and Co-operation'. Coinciding with this centenary, and after extensive discussions with interested parties, including the ethnic/religious minority communities and the Irish Council of Churches, the Northern Ireland Inter-Faith Forum was formed in May 1993, with the essential purpose of promoting friendship and mutual understanding across the spectrum of religious life in the province.

Drawing its membership from the Jewish, Hindu, Muslim, Chinese, Buddhist, Baha'i and Sikh communities as well as the Roman Catholic and Protestant Churches, the Forum has enjoyed remarkable success as a pioneering inter-faith association, with a current membership of around 50 people, many of whom occupy positions of leadership within their own traditions. While Forum members are not official delegates of their respective communities, they represent that body of opinion within their communities which is supportive of the Association's constitutional aim, which is: to provide a Forum where:-

a) Adherents of different faiths can meet to share and foster mutual understanding of each other's beliefs and practices; and b) The special problems of religious and ethnic minorities can be articulated, and solutions recommended."

For more information or to explore arranging an exchange of speakers with the Forum, you can contact Revd Ryan at The Religious Studies Department, Stranmillis College, Stranmillis road, Belfast, BT9 5DY or the Forum's Chairman Dr Mamoun Mobayed, The Islamic Centre, 38 Wellington Park, Belfast, BT9 6DN.

The book is an introduction to the history, organisation, and activity of Ireland's ethnic and religious minorities in the North and South and draws on information supplied by members of all the communities it covers as well as on his own extensive research.

Revd Ryan has sent us this summary of key facts which may be of interest to Network members:

Faiths in Ireland

Baha'is formed their first local spiritual Assembly in Dublin in 1948, and an Assembly in Belfast in 1950 with their first national Spiritual Assembly in 1972. The community has expanded steadily since the 1970s with current membership in the Republic around 300 and just over 300 in Northern Ireland in 14 local assemblies.

Buddhists in Ireland now number around 1,000. There are about a dozen Buddhist Centres and Meditation Groups of various traditions around the country from Dublin to Cork to Limerick to Cavan to N. Ireland. The earliest and most active centre is Samyedzong in Dublin which was founded in 1977.

Christians from the Roman Catholic and Protestant Churches make up the majority of the religious population.

Hindus in the Republic number around 900 and a further 800 in the North. The Northern Ireland Hindu Cultural Centre and Temple opened in 1979. There are three Hare Krishna communities in Ireland at Dunmurry near Belfast, at Hare Krishna Island in Country Fermanagh, and in Dublin, with a total of around 100 members.

Jains are few in the Republic or the North.

Jewish communal life in Ireland goes back to the seventeenth century and by the end of the nineteenth century a sizeable community was established in Dublin with smaller groups in Cork, Limerick, Waterford, Derry/Londonderry, Lurgan, and Belfast. Population reached a peak in the 1950s. Today, there are under 1,000 Jews in the Republic and about 250 active members in the North. The four main synagogues are now in Dublin (3) and Belfast (1).

Muslims began arriving in Ireland in the 1950s. There are now over 6,000 in the Republic with a further 1,500 in the North. The Islamic Foundation of Ireland was set up in the early 1970s and in 1990 the Muslim National School opened. A Dublin mosque was established in 1983 and a mosque and community centre in Belfast in the early 80s. A magnificent new purpose built mosque was opened earlier this year in Dublin.

Sikhs have been resident in Ireland since the 1920s but no formal community was established until 1985/6. Population is now around 250 in the South and 50 in the North. A Gurdwara was opened in Dublin in 1986 and one in Derry/Londonderry in 1990 connected to the Northern Ireland Sikh Association.

Zoroastrians are few in either the Republic or the North.

Updates from member organisations

The Board of Deputies of British Jews reports that it has worked with prominent members of the Hindu community to launch a new UK Indian-Jewish Association to further understanding and friendship. The Association's Council held its first meeting on 11 July to confirm a provisional constitution and approve a programme of cultural and educational events. Pranal Sheth CBE and Aubrey Rose CBE were elected as joint Chairs and Jayanti Patel and John Levy as joint Secretaries. Further information from Mr Sheth (0181 952 2413) or Mr Rose (0181 449 2166).

Derby University's Religious Resource and Research Centre has launched a new postgraduate programme in Pastoral Studies, complementing the existing programme in Religious Pluralism. It looks at pastoral counselling in a plural context and it is for all those involved with and interested in issues of pastoral care, including those in religious leadership roles with pastoral responsibilities and those in secular care organisations who wish to take account of the religious needs of individuals and communities with whom they work. Available from September 1996 on a full or part time basis. Details from Paul Weller (01332 622222 ext. 2102).

Leicester Council of Faiths reports that there has been continued progress this year in the relationship of the Council with Leicester City Council. Following a long series of discussions, Mrs Angela Berryman was appointed in September 1995 to the part-time post of Inter-Faith Worker. In June 1996 her post was made full-time and upgraded to that of Policy Officer (Faiths). An advisory group including four representatives of the Leicester Council of Faiths has been set up to advise on her work programme. It is anticipated that her appointment will lead to a raising of the profile of faith issues as a distinct from cultural issues within the City Council. Her role will be of particular importance in the lead up to the establishment of a unitary authority in Leicester and the transfer of a number of key functions that affect faith communities from the City Council and reflected on ways to work together to create a just, free, peaceful and sustainable earth community.

The Maha Bodhi Society reports that the Venerable Dr Vajiragnana, Sangha Nayaka of Great Britain and Abbot of the London Buddhist Vihara, recently attended a six day inter-religious exchange between Buddhists and Catholics on Spiritual Life in Buddhism and Christianity. It was called the "Gethsemane Encounter" and was sponsored by Monastic Inter Religious Dialogue and took place at the Gethsemane Monastery, Louisville, USA.

This meeting of Buddhists and Christians from many parts of the world was convened and attended by the Dalai Lama. "The exchanges were thought provoking and full of both love (metta) and humour, none were aimed at conversion but at enriching their own knowledge, not only of the different beliefs, but of their own beliefs as well. The brotherly and sisterly friendliness meant that REAL dialogue was possible with everyone experiencing a great easiness for open discussion."

Suffolk Inter Faith Resource, which became a member of the Network at this Summer's AGM has now had a full year in its new self-contained premises at Bolton Lane in Ipswich. A Sri Chinmoy peace garden at the side of the building was opened on 18 June with local sponsorship and planters and seats made by students at the college.

SIFRE now has members of 10 religious traditions who are able to go out and speak as tutors. In July a SIFRE inter faith women's forum had its first meeting and it is hoped that this will meet each month. SIFRE has published two books, Faiths in Focus in Ipswich and Suffolk and Finding Our Way and Sharing Our Stories. More details about SIFRE's programme and publications can be obtained from Cynthia Capey at SIFRE, Inter-Faith Centre, Suffolk College Annexe, Bolton Lane, Ipswich, IP4 2BT.

The Network's Tenth Year

1997 is The Inter Faith Network's Tenth Anniversary. The Network was set up in 1987 to link and work alongside its member organisations to increase mutual understanding and respect between the faith communities of the world religions represented in the UK today and also to work more widely to promote an appreciation within society of the importance of religious identity and inter faith understanding.

Back in 1987 there was no formal mechanism to bring together representatives of the major faith communities; nor was there a central point where information about inter faith issues and faith communities in the country could easily be obtained. Now these things seem a natural part of the religious scene in the UK and the Network and its member bodies have played a major part in the change.

There is still a long way to go, but now's the time to celebrate the work we have all done and make even more people aware how important it is to make sure that Britain becomes an example of the best kind of inter faith life where members of each faith can practise it with integrity and draw on its resources to help make together a reality of our shared citizenship. We hope events will be planned country-wide during the whole of the Anniversary year to celebrate the positive developments in inter faith relations which have taken place during the past decade, and the pivotal role the Network and its member bodies have played in these.

The Quest for Common Values

The last few months have seen renewed expressions of concern about the moral climate of our society.

There has been increasing discussion about whether there is, or can be, a clear and widely accepted set of common values sufficient to provide a secure moral foundation for our society.

Some have expressed fears that the development in Britain of a more diverse and plural society has contributed to fragmentation and incoherence in the moral sphere.

The Network has for some time had a concern for the issue of values in a multi faith society and has developed useful links with those working in the field of values. It was therefore able, in December, to make a particular and practical contribution to the values debate. It did this by bringing together a number of those involved in current and prospective "values" initiatives to explore the relationship between these and to discuss underlying issues, including questions of process and methodology, as well as to exchange experience and ideas.

Chief Rabbi opens Network's values seminar

Chief Rabbi Dr Jonathan Sacks' Reith Lectures in 1990 gave considerable initial impetus to the values debate. Dr Sacks gave the opening presentation at the Network arranged seminar on "The Quest for Common Values" which took place on 10 December, at Barnard's Inn in London, by kind invitation of Gresham College.

The Network's seminar brought together 35 speakers and participants from faith community, education, and a range of other backgrounds to hear about each other's initiatives and to explore such questions as:

- Is the quest for common values a necessary and valid one or is it misconceived?
- How far within a plural society can we establish a shared understanding of the nature of values and morality?
- What kind of process is likely to be the most effective and acceptable means of establishing the substance of common moral ground for society in today's Britain?

The Chief Rabbi was followed by some of the other key contributors to the present debate on values: Professor Bhikhu Parekh of the University of Hull (whose newly completed book on cultural pluralism covers the debate on common values in a number of countries); Rt. Revd. Gavin Reid, the Anglican Bishop of Maidstone (Chair of the Archbishops' Millennium Advisory Group and a Deputy Moderator of a working party of Churches Together in England which has proposed a wide ranging debate on "common values" linked to the Millennium); Dr Nicholas Tate of the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority (which has convened a "National Forum for Values in Education and the Community" whose conclusions had just been published at the time of the seminar); and Ms Monica Taylor, who is Chair of the newly formed Values Education Council.

The formal presentations were interspersed with questions and discussion and the final part of the afternoon was given over to shared reflections on the issues that had arisen during the day. A full report on the day is planned for publication in late February.

Religious Discrimination

Last year the Commission for Racial Equality set up a special project team to collect evidence of discrimination relating to religious identity and to analyse the options for possible legislation. The Project Team is organising a series of consultative conferences to take place in different parts of Britain. The first two were held in Central London on 12 December and in Bradford on 18 December. Further meetings are planned for the early months of this year in Birmingham, Glasgow, East London, Leicester and Manchester.

The Network office is in touch with the CRE's Project Team and hopes that there will be more substantive discussion soon with faith community national bodies on the results of the team's work on evaluating various options for fresh legislation.

Information on the CRE's leaflet on religious discrimination and on forthcoming regional conferences can be obtained from Mr Khurshid Drabu, CRE, Elliot House, 10-12 Allington Street, London SW1E 5EH.

The Inner Cities Religious Council published, at the end of October, a general booklet on ways in which people who feel they are suffering discrimination on grounds of religious identity can seek redress. For information, contact Revd David Horn at the Department of the Environment, Inner Cities Religious Council, Floor 4/K10, Eland House, Bressenden Place, London, SW1E 5DU (Tel 0171 890 3704).

Census 2001

In September we reported that the Office of National Statistics had made it known in August that it had been decided that a question on religious identity did not have sufficient priority for the 2001 national Census, and so would not be included in the testing programme for this. Faith community representatives argued forcefully against this decision.

The Inter Faith Network works to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make Britain a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions. In its first ten years, together with its member bodies, it has:

- encouraged and assisted members of Britain's nine major faith communities to meet and to explore the positive resources in their own religious traditions for building good inter faith relations
- worked to ensure a place for Britain's major faith communities in our public life
- promoted the development of local inter faith structures
- widened the circle of people in each faith community committed to building good relations between the faiths
- ensured the availability of accurate information about the faiths and inter faith activity
- raised the public profile of inter faith issues
- assisted other organisations committed to working for a harmonious multi faith society

Following discussion on the issue at the Network's Committee's meeting on 15 October, the Network's Director wrote to the Office for National Statistics setting out the views which had been expressed on this and on the way a question on religious identity might be framed.

When the ONS announced the arrangements for the testing programme on 8 November, it emerged that a question on religious identity would now, after all, be among those tested (although so far the ONS have not given the precise details of the test question).

Inclusion of a question in the testing process does not mean the question will necessarily be included in the actual Census. Those who wish to ensure that it is, will need to establish fully, during 1997, the "user case" for its inclusion.

Further discussion between ONS and faith community representatives is expected shortly.

National RE Festival

This year, for the first time, there will be a special national event focusing on Religious Education.

The National RE Festival is a week long celebration of RE in schools. It will take place in primary and secondary schools throughout the UK from 6-10 October 1997. Several areas are already planning major events, including Winchester, Chichester, Scotland, Devon, East London and Jersey.

Festival organisers and sponsors hope it will encourage schools, local communities and faith communities to promote greater involvement and co-operation in delivering high quality RE and to develop lasting relationships that will benefit both the school and the local community.

For a copy of the Festival newsletter or for more information, please send a postcard to: Savita Ayling, Director, The National Religious Education Festival, PO Box 12981, London E1 9UH. She can also be contacted by phone at 0181 923 8383 and fax at 0181 923 8844.

Millennium Awards for Primary School RE Teachers

The Farmington Institute have recently announced a new award scheme which gives teachers a term for study and research at a number of designated colleges and universities. College fees and replacement teacher costs are both covered. Twenty five awards will be offered each year. Director Martin Roberts writes, "We are particularly keen that all major faiths and all denominations are well represented amongst the recipients of these awards."

Brochures about the awards are available from The Farmington Institute Millennium Awards, Harris Manchester College, Mansfield Road, Oxford OX1 3TD. Tel 01865 271965.

European Year Against Racism

1997 is the European Year Against Racism. It will be launched at a Conference, hosted jointly by the Dutch Presidency of the Union and the European Commission, on 30-31 January 1997 in The Hague, Netherlands. Pdraig Flynn of the European Commission writes,

"The European Year marks the first time that concrete action has been undertaken by the Community institutions to combat racism in partnership with the Member States, putting into practice values which are fundamental to the concept of European democracy. It will contribute to the efforts of those who are actively involved in this area. It will encourage cooperation and partnership, promote visibility at European level and build upon, develop and exchange the experiences of all partners at local, regional and national levels. "

A meeting was held on 2 December at the Home Office arranged by the Community Relations Unit to discuss plans for the year in the UK. A range of bodies were represented, including The Inter Faith Network.

Further information about the Year can be obtained from Caroline Rowe, Community Relations Unit, Home Office, Queen Anne's Gate, London SW1H 9AT Tel 0171 273 3047.

Prime Minister Visits The Jain Centre, Leicester

On 1 November Prime Minister John Major visited the Jain Centre in Leicester. He was welcomed by Dr. L. M. Singhvi (High Commissioner for India), Dr Natubhai Shah (Trustee Chairman and founder of the Centre), Dr Ramesh Mehta (President, Jain Samaj Europe), the Lord Mayor, Councillor Culdipp Batty, and Lady Mayor Mrs Bhupinder Batty, and other Trustees and dignitaries as well as around 200 invited guests. The Prime Minister took part in the arti and went on a guided tour of the Centre and its museum.

Mr Major saw the renowned temple with its beautiful carvings, its statues of tirthankaras which Jains venerate as role models, and its stained glass windows showing the life of Mahavira, founder of Jainism. 254,000 hours of work went into creating and erecting the temple. He learned that Leicester City Council had been most supportive in the process and that the Centre is open to all, regardless of creed.

Mr Major was told about the Jain community in Britain and about the key beliefs and values of Jainism. He was especially appreciative of the value Jains put on tolerance. While at the Centre, he heard of Dr Shah's hope that a Jain temple can also be established in London. The Prime Minister was presented with a statue of Mahavira as a symbol of justice and affection to all living beings, introspection and nobility, and non-violence, non-attachment, tolerance and equanimity.

Other Updates from around the country

Prayerful Reunion 10 years on from Assisi

On Sunday 17 November Westminster Cathedral was the scene of one of the largest inter faith gatherings which has taken place in Britain. A capacity congregation of people of different faiths joined Roman Catholic Christians to mark the 1986 meeting at Assisi, where His Holiness Pope John Paul II met with leaders of the major faiths to pray and fast for peace.

The congregation came in from cold and rain to be greeted at the door by children who gave them small twigs of olive - signs of peace. They joined in prayerful reunion to give thanks for the peace work of the last ten years and to reflect on the role of the faiths in generating and preserving peace in our communities and world.

Revd Michael Barnes SJ opened the service and shared messages from those who could not be present.

Lamps were lit by Rt Revd Brian Masters, Bishop of Edmonton on behalf of the Archbishop of Canterbury, Most Revd Dr George Carey; Mrs Kesang Y. Takla, on behalf of His Holiness the Dalai Lama; HE Cardinal Vlk, Primate of the Czech Republic; Revd Dr Kathleen Richardson, Moderator of the Free Church Federal Council; and Mr William Rutherford, representing the Corrymeela Community. Readings on peace and reconciliation were given by Lord Runcie; Swami Dayatmananda; Ven Dr Medagama Vajiragnana; Rabbi Jaqueline Tabick; and Shaikh Dr Zaki Badawi.

Coventry Peace Walk

Coventry Inter Faith Group held a peace walk on 19 October to show that peoples of different faiths can work together for peace. It began at Coventry Cathedral's Chapel of Unity and went on to the Masjid-e-Zeenat-ul-Islam, the Shree Krishna Temple and the Guru Nanak Parkash Gurdwara where a meal was shared. At each place, the participants prayed for peace.

Gloucestershire Inter Faith Action "People's Pageant"

On 22 and 23 October Gloucester Cathedral and the Pittville Pump Room in Cheltenham were the venues for a special pageant organised by Gloucestershire Inter Faith Action. Around a thousand participants and audience members were involved in the event which was designed to attract new members to GIFA and to draw attention to One World Week. The local paper reported the event very fully and it was filmed by North South Productions for Channel 4 who plan to screen it in April 1997.

The entertainments included silver bands; morris dancers; clog dancers; Scots, Irish, Indian and African dancers; and music from Jewish and Afro-Caribbean choirs among others. There was also an ongoing commentary about each religion and readings from sacred texts in the appropriate context. Civic leaders enjoyed it so much that they have asked for a future repeat.

Jim Absalom of GIFA worked for twelve months writing and organising the pageant. "It is the first of its size anywhere in the country and hopefully got its message over", he said. All the participants, including other members of the GIFA Executive Committee, were volunteers. The script of the pageant is available for other interested inter faith groups from Mr J.H. Absalom (Tel 01452 538309).

Christian-Muslim Dialogue

There are a growing number of dialogue groups spanning particular faiths. One of the earliest to develop a regular programme of talks and meetings was the Christian-Muslim dialogue group in Leicester which came into existence in 1985. It grew out of contact between Revd Gordon Sealy, then a student at the Centre for the Study of Islam and Christian-Muslim relations at Birmingham, and Dr Ataullah Siddiqui, who was working in the Inter Faith Unit of the Islamic Foundation in Leicester.

When founding member Revd Sealy retired in October, the group paid tribute to him at his last meeting for his unwavering support for the cause of Christian-Muslim understanding.

The group's aim has been to create a forum where Christians and Muslims can hear speakers on particular topics and meet and exchange ideas and discuss various issues openly and in a friendly atmosphere. Among those who have participated and benefited to date have been A level and university students. Dr Siddiqui says,

"Maybe the most important witness the group has made is to show that Christians and Muslims can meet together, can think together, talk and laugh together without compromising their most cherished beliefs and yet ...connect in a way that could reduce our prejudices and ignorance."

For more information about the group and the topics it has discussed in the past, contact Dr Ataullah Siddiqui at the Islamic Foundation (Tel 01530 244944/5).

Inter-Religious Social Action in Leeds Project

A two year research project exploring the relationship between faith communities and social action in Leeds was set up at the Department of Theology and Religious Studies, University of Leeds, in October 1996. The project researches:

- the involvement of faith community members in social action in Leeds
- the role that faith plays in motivating people to contribute to the city
- how each faith community maintains its individual identity while working with different faith communities
- the potential for future inter-religious social action projects in Leeds and the ways in which such projects could be supported.

The project would be glad to hear of any inter faith social projects in Leeds or in other areas of the country: Stacey Burlet and Helen Reid at the Inter -Religious Social Action Project, Department of Theology and Religious Studies, University of Leeds, Woodhouse Lane, Leeds LS2 9JP. Tel 0113 233 36611 fax 0113 233 3654.

Jewish-Indian Association visits Neasden Mandir

The Board of Deputies of British Jews reports that the Jewish-Indian Association which it helped launch (see Issue 2) recently visited the Shri Swaminaryan Mandir in Neasden, London. The visit was designed to give Jewish members of the Association an insight into Hinduism and a chance to socialise with Hindu members.

Exhibition on Jewish Customs and Beliefs

The Board of Deputies recently co-sponsored an exhibition on Jewish life with the Borough of Richmond on Thames's Education Department. It took place in Twickenham in late November and early December at the Curriculum and Teachers' Centre and focused on Jewish customs and beliefs. The aim was to foster understanding and good will between different faith groups and to educate in an enjoyable way. 20 members of the local Jewish community acted as stewards and guides.

Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan and Jain Organisations UK Celebrate the Spirit of Universal Forgiveness

Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan and Jain Organisations UK organised a joint function on 25 September, to celebrate the spirit of Samvatsari-Kshmaapanaa, Universal Forgiveness, in the presence of the High Commissioner for India, Dr. L. M. Singhvi, leaders of the major faiths, and members of the sponsoring bodies. Dr Natubhai Shah welcomed the gathering and spoke of the meaning of the Jain holy period of Paryushana and the role of Ksamaapanaa. Other speakers and officiants included Dr Nandakumara of the Bhavan; Professor B. Hegde; Most Ven. Pandith Vajiragnana, Revd Canon Dr Christopher Lamb; Shamsuddin I. Agha; Rabbi Albert Friedlander; and devotional singer Kokilaben Shah.

Islamic Foundation Seminar on Islam and Religious Pluralism

The Islamic Foundation held a consultative seminar on Sunday 17 November on "Islam and Religious Pluralism". Professor Mahmoud

Ayoub of Temple University (USA) presented his views to an invited audience. The first half of the seminar involved discussion of the Quranic position on other faiths with especial reference to certain Quranic verses and their meanings and relevance to the contemporary pluralist world. Professor Ayoub gave examples from history of how other faiths have addressed this issue and what lessons Muslims can learn from their experience. The seminar also tackled issues related to new religious movements, especially those established after the advent of the Prophet Muhammad, and dealt briefly with issues of secularism, conversion and human rights particularly as they touch on Muslims in the West.

The seminar was the fourth in a series at which the major Muslim denominations in the UK were represented (one of which took place at the Al-Khoei Foundation and another at the Muslim College in London). It is intended to publish the proceedings in Encounters: Journal of Inter-Cultural Perspectives in 1997. Further information from Dr Atullah Siddiqui (Tel 01530 244944/5).

Maimonides Foundation Launch Celebration

The Foundation held a dinner in central London in September to celebrate its launch and to demonstrate goodwill and understanding especially between Jews and Muslims at a time of heightened sensitivity. Participants included Rt Hon Jeremy Hanley MP, Hon Greville Janner QC MP, Dr David Khalili, Dr Richard Stone, Dr Zaki Badawi, Rabbi Abraham Levy, Rabbi Rodney Mariner, India High Commissioner Dr Singhvi, Sir Sigmund Sternberg, and the Ambassadors of Bahrain, Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Morocco, as well as members of the British Jewish and Muslim communities.

Northern Ireland Inter Faith "House Meetings"

The Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum has been holding a series of "house meetings" between Baha'is and Anglicans and between Krishnans and Roman Catholics. In each case, a small number of people from two religious traditions meet informally in a number of homes. The idea is to encourage closer in depth contact between people representing the various traditions within the local community. These meetings continue into 1997 alongside the regular quarterly meetings of the Forum.

Inter Faith Activity in Suffolk

Suffolk Inter Faith Resource multi faith tutor teams have just completed two 10 week WEA courses in Capel St Mary and Sudbury on the world faiths seen through the experiences of local adherents. Details on forthcoming courses from Deborah Hargreave (Tel 01473 233447).

An inter-faith women's group now meets monthly in Ipswich at the inter-faith centre. Participants, who at the moment include Christians, Muslims and Sikhs, share experiences of bringing up families and talk about their values, spirituality and religious practices.

In November, Christian and Sikh members went by minibus to Southall and Hounslow to share in the celebrations at the gurdwaras there for Guru Nanak's birthday, to visit the Sikh Missionary Society to buy resources, and to go on a shared shopping spree! Cynthia Capey writes, "This outing was a wonderful way of strengthening our developing friendships. Other trips are planned."

Searching for a Just Economic Order: WCRP at Dobogoko

Representatives of various religious communities from 22 European countries attended the European Assembly of the World Conference on Religion and Peace from 10-13 October in Dobogoko, Hungary. They discussed the theme of "Religions for a Just Economic Order" and planned for further work on such questions as how to bring about a more just economic order in Europe and how to introduce a stronger ethical basis into the economy. Given the location, particular attention was paid to the both the economic and inter religious situation in Hungary. The next planned WCRP project at European level is an interreligious event in Sarajevo. Further information about both the Dobogoko conference and about planning for the Sarajevo event from: Mr Jehangir Sarosh of WCRP (tel 01923 211168).

Inter Faith Initiative launched in Bournemouth

An inter faith initiative, "Unity in Diversity" has begun in Bournemouth. The first two meetings in November and December have been well attended according to organiser Lee Nelson. The group intends to continue meeting on the first Thursday of every month at the Friends' Meeting House in Bournemouth. See details under Diary Dates.

Brent Inter Faith Council

An inter faith council is emerging in the London Borough of Brent. Further information from Revd Fergus Capie (tel 0181 968 3898).

Congratulations to Dr Paul Weller

Paul Weller, who worked some years ago as The Inter Faith Network's Resource Officer, and is the Editor of Religions in the UK: a Multi Faith Directory has been appointed Head of Religious Studies at Derby and received his doctorate in December from the University of Leeds.

The Newsletter

The Inter Faith Network now links 80 organisations with a commitment to helping build good relationships between Britain's different faith communities. This newsletter is one of the ways of sharing news about developments at the Network, in each other's inter faith programmes, and more widely on the UK inter faith front.

The next issue is scheduled for May 1997 and contributions to be considered for it can be sent on the enclosed form by 15 April to:

New Government New Community?

This issue goes to press as the General Election brings in a new Labour Government with a commanding majority.

The coming weeks and months will make clear the implications of this momentous political shift and Britain's faith communities will have their own agendas to pursue with the new Government. What will its position be on requests for legislative protection against religious discrimination? Will it favour the inclusion of a question on religious identity in the 2001 Census? How will it respond to concerns over the current requirements on collective worship in schools? What role will the Inner Cities Religious Council have in future?

Looking beyond such specifically religious questions, the chance lies ahead to encourage the new Government to work with all of us to help build a renewed sense of community and purpose within our national life and to find ways to seek shared values and put these into action together.

Shaping the agenda for the coming months and years

Some of Britain's faith communities contributed significantly to the political debate during the General Election period.

The UK Action Committee for Islamic Affairs, for example, launched a document in February called "Elections 1997 and British Muslims - for a fair and caring society".

Linked to the election campaign, Britain's Churches published a document dealing with issues of racial justice and also published a major report on work and unemployment which argued that all the main political parties should give greater attention to the needs of the poor and disadvantaged.

There are varying views about the relationship between religious conviction and the political process. But it is certainly true that in recent years there has been a fuller participation by a wider range of faith communities in our public life and they will be as interested as every other group to discover the consequences for them of the way the Britain voted on 1 May.

Iqbal Sacranie of UKACIA comments: "The message needs to be got across to new members of Parliament and to the Government that faith communities have an important part to play in society nationally and locally and have much to offer - especially when they work in partnership - when it comes to responding to such issues as crime, homelessness, and unemployment as well as the broader issue of values and morality".

The Inter Faith Network works to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make Britain a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions.

In its first ten years, together with its member bodies, it has:

- encouraged and assisted members of Britain's nine major faith communities to meet and to explore the positive resources in their own religious traditions for building good inter faith relations
- worked to ensure a place for Britain's major faith communities in our public life
- promoted the development of local inter faith structures

National Updates

Consultation on collective worship in schools

The consultative project on collective worship in schools which is being jointly sponsored by the Religious Education Council and the National Association of SACRE's and the Network is moving ahead. The first conference was held on 25 February and the next will take place on 20 May. People attending the conferences as representatives of their organisations are to be invited to consult their constituencies on a draft document between the May conference and the final conference due to be held in September. Further information from the office of The Inter Faith Network.

The BBC goes Multifaith!

David Craig writes:

With the recent restructuring of the BBC, the religious broadcasting unit of the World Service based at Bush House has been designated the BBC's Multifaith Bureau. While it is now part of the Religious Broadcasting Department in Manchester, it will, under the direction of David Craig, continue to make programmes for the World Service audience but in addition it will be seeking to find ways in which the concerns and practices of all the world's religious traditions can be more widely reflected across the range of BBC programmes.

We shall be offering ideas for programmes on BBC2 and BBC1 as well as the domestic radio networks, and by identifying potential contributors and arranging training days for them, we hope that the representation of religious contributions to existing programme strands like Thought for the Day, Pause for Thought and Prayer for the Day can be broadened. We shall also be exploring the possibility of co-producing material with other units like Education and Afro-Caribbean, and contributing ideas to other programme series.

As part of the Corporation's recently published commitment to its viewers and listeners, the Multifaith Bureau will further develop relations with organisations and individuals within the faith communities as well as student groups, academic and media ginger groups, and film makers. It will act as a focal point for suggestions, complaints and concerns from those faith communities about their representation and coverage within programming.

I very much hope that, later in the year we shall be able to arrange one major multi religious event where perhaps it will be possible to address the suspicions and fear with which so many religious organisations and communities regard the media.

I would personally welcome any suggestions for contributors from all the religious traditions as in addition to contributors to major network programmes, we are hoping to develop resources for local radio contributions.

David Craig can be contacted at: BBC Multifaith Bureau, Box 76 Bush House, London WC2B 4PH.

Religion question possible for the 2001 Census - piloting to take place this summer

further consultative meeting on 11 March on the possible inclusion of a question on religious identity in the 2001 census.

At the meeting the ONS gave further details of the arrangements for the pilot testing of a census question this summer in a number of different areas. The test question is to be framed in terms of "belonging" rather than "believing" or "practising". It is: "Do you belong to a religious group?" with boxes for reply marked "No, Christian [without specifying denomination], Buddhist, Hindu, Islam/Muslim, Jewish, Sikh and Any Other Religion." At the meeting on 11 March representations were made by those present from smaller faith communities over the absence of any specific categories for them.

Discussion focused mainly on the need to construct a detailed case outlining the benefits of including a question on religious identity in the 2001 Census itself. A working group was established for this purpose and meetings were held on 2 and 7 April from which a draft document has emerged which will be the subject of further consultation.

Millennium Planning

Among the groups working on Millennium issues is the Lambeth Millennium Consultation Group which encompasses key representatives from the Churches and a number of other faiths as well as representatives from such bodies as the Millennium Commission and the Millennium Unit of the Department of National Heritage. The Network's representative on this group is its Deputy Director Harriet Crabtree. A number of other Executive Committee members are also involved on behalf of their faith communities.

The Lambeth meetings are a forum for discussion of issues relating to planned projects and events. One project presently in process is the production of a brief set of guidelines highlighting the need for sensitivity and awareness when planning any multi faith Millennium related events.

Scottish Inter Faith Consultative Group

A very successful initial meeting of the new Scottish Inter Faith Consultative Group took place on 23 February at St. Mungo's Museum in Glasgow. The SIFCG brings together representatives of those Scottish bodies which are already in membership of the Network, and of other Network member bodies which are UK wide and therefore have membership in Scotland. A press release was issued after the meeting to draw to the attention of the Scottish media the establishment of this Group as a focal point for handling inter faith concerns in Scotland.

The theme of the meeting was "Values in Education and the Community", (which linked with the Network's seminar in December). It was an opportunity to take stock of current developments on this front in Scotland.

Multi Faith/Inter Faith Campus Spaces

The student population of Britain is becoming increasingly diverse and a number of universities are looking at how to respond to the needs of students of various faith traditions.

Two projects that have recently come to our attention are at the University of Derby and the University of Hertfordshire. At the University of Derby, a multi faith design group have worked for four years on the conception of a university multi faith centre. The brief they came up with is for a building which provides for worship for all faiths and denominations; meditation areas; meeting rooms, social spaces and office accommodation.

Winners of the limited design competition were Waites Architecture. Partner David Waites said in an interview with Building Design (March 14 1997), "We approached it on an atmospheric level and used different textures of light. The building has an amoebic form with spaces which flow into each other. We see it as a village of spaces." He described it as a building designed to link all faiths without alienating or promoting any and without displaying icons or symbols of faith through form or fabric. A funding drive will shortly be under way.

Meanwhile at the University of Hertfordshire, a campaign has been launched to establish an inter faith centre on the Hatfield campus. The design takes advantage of the designated site on a wooded promontory overlooking the University and situated at the axis of roads linking student accommodation with lecture rooms, laboratories, and Student Union facilities. The geometry of the building with a circular, earth-roofed rotunda or worship area linked to a rectangular library, coffee-bar and offices gives the appearance from above of a KEY: which will be the building's name. £500,000 is now being sought to create the centre and consultations are taking place to discover how such a Centre can best be used to continue and develop existing work already undertaken by the Chaplain, Equal Opportunities Officer, academics, counsellor and others in the field of inter faith dialogue and multi-cultural understanding. Similar institutions with related experience are invited to share their ideas with The Chaplain, Revd. William Taylor, University of Hertfordshire, College Lane, Hatfield, Herts AL10 9AB.

Launch of new edition of *Religions in the UK: A Multi Faith Directory

The second edition of Religions in the UK: A Multi Faith Directory will be published next month and publicly launched at the University of Derby on Thursday 29 May with a special lecture by David Craig, Head of the BBC's Multifaith Bureau.

The project to gather the information for the new edition began in 1993. The Directory is a joint publication of the University of Derby and The Inter Faith Network. It contains listings for places of worship and religious organisations of all faith communities, as well as information resources for those wanting to know more about the faiths or about inter faith activity. It costs £33.00 including postage and packing with discounts available for bulk orders.

Further information about the launch or about ordering the publication from Dr Paul Weller at the University of Derby on 01332 622222 ext. 1044.

1997 Christian Inter Faith Practitioners Association Conference

CIPA held its annual conference at Swanwick in Derbyshire from April 9-11. The theme was "Believing and Belonging in a Multi Faith Society". Revd Martin Forward of Wesley House Cambridge addressed the question "Who says who we are?" David Craig of the BBC unfolded plans for its new Multi Faith Bureau, and Dr Kim Knott of the University of Leeds gave examples of ways in which faith communities are changing, particularly as a result of the experiences of young people. Participants shared experiences, questions and dilemmas which face them in local inter faith situation. As all attending were of Christian background, simple prayers and worship were shared. Next year's CIPA conference will be 5-7 May in Swanwick. Further information on CIPA, which is for any Christian actively engaged in inter faith issues, from Molly Kenyon, Touchstone, 32 Merton Road, Bradford BD7 1RE.

Rabbi Gryn Scholarship Appeal

An appeal has been launched to commemorate the remarkable life of Rabbi Hugo Gryn with an endowed two year scholarship at Atlantic College where 16-19 year olds from around the world come to live and study together in cooperation. Their backgrounds are as diverse as Africa and Asia, refugee camps and inner cities, as well as the more affluent societies of North America and Western Europe. The College has always insisted that students be admitted on merit and not according to ability to pay. For this reason it is very much dependent on sponsorship, grants and individual donations.

Hugo was a governor of the College for many years, seeing in it a commitment to the spread of the ideals to which his experiences at Auschwitz had left him absolutely committed: anti-racist, inter ethnic and inter faith understanding. If you or your organisation would like to make a donation, cheques can be made payable to Atlantic College (Rabbi Gryn appeal) and sent to Atlantic College Development Office, Lynton House, Tavistock Square, London WC1H 9LT. Further information from 0171 388 4009.

Scouting in today's multi faith Britain

Among the participants who came to the Network's Midlands inter faith link meeting in April was the East Midlands Community Development Officer of the Scout Association, Amit Popat.

He described the efforts which the Association is making to draw into the movement people from different cultural and faith community backgrounds. He explained that traditionally, the Scouts have come from a white Christian background so there is a need to provide guidance and information for Scout leaders on different cultures and faiths. A series of leaflets is being prepared for this purpose. Also, it is necessary to make clear to those in other communities and with other cultural backgrounds that the Scout movement welcomes their membership and is sensitive to their beliefs and needs.

Internationally, Scouting is already multi cultural and multi faith as is evident at International Jamborees. The variety within scouting in this country is growing too. It is planned to hold a "Day of Faith and Culture" in Leicester during 1998 which would give an opportunity to present these developments in scouting to a wider audience.

We contacted The Scout Association to find out more about their multi faith work. Community Relations Officer Emma Donaldson writes:

The Scout Association is not a religious organisation but its aims include the spiritual development of young people and its members promise to do their duty to their God (the word God can be replaced by "Allah", "my Dharma" or other wording as appropriate to suit the faith or religion of the individual concerned).

The Association is the largest multi faith, multi cultural, co-educational youth organisation in the United Kingdom, and is part of a worldwide movement which unites over 25 million people in 218 countries. A Scout's right to practise their religious belief is part of the Association's equal opportunities policy.

As Scouting is open to all young people, the Association provides resources and training materials to support the diversity of religious belief practised in the UK:

Faith Communities in Scouting: a range of fact sheets for Leaders who work with young people of different faiths. Fact sheets are so far available on the Buddhist, Hindu, Muslim, Rastafari and Sikh communities.

God are you still in there? : an activity pack for the spiritual development of 6-20 year olds. It gives information on six world faiths and shows how a youth programme can help or is already helping young people discover the five aspects of spiritual development: tolerance, team work, self-discipline, awareness of the world around us, and faith in God. More information on spiritual development in Scouting is also given in Educational Objectives of the Scout Movement.

Passport for Europe is a programme resource for 16-22 year old Scouts and Guides throughout Europe. It encourages young people to look at six topics: exploration and discovery, quality of life; culture; democracy; solidarity; and career and social skills. Faith is an important part of this "journey of exploration". For example, young people are asked to explore values in their own religion, compare them with similar values in at least two other religions, and to discuss with a group of their peers why their set of values is important.

Regional Inter Faith Link Meetings

The Network holds periodic link meetings for those involved in local inter faith initiatives around the country. The meetings allow a chance to exchange news, swap ideas and discuss some of the challenges involved in setting up and maintaining successful local inter faith initiatives.

Greater London

The Greater London regional link meeting was held on 15 February at Connaught Hall in central London.

Brent Inter Faith Council and the Diocese of Willesden. Revd Fergus Capie reported on the Brent Inter Faith Council which has now been meeting for 16 months, thus far at different venues of the three Abrahamic faiths. There is much goodwill and energy from participants of all the major faith groups. The Council has looked at such issues as RE and refugees and is presently focusing on the pattern of civic religion in the borough and how this compares to elsewhere. They are looking, for example, at what shape a service might take for a mayor who is from a community other than Christian.

The Council has chosen, thus far, not to spend too much time thinking about who and what it is. However, it is now beginning to reflect on exactly what role it wants to play and what sorts of local partnerships it wants to build.

Croydon Inter Faith Group. There have been a number of inter faith initiatives in Croydon over the years. Lynne Sedgmore and Jag Kharbanda reported that the present group was launched in September 1995 and builds on earlier work. It has had 9 meetings so far, including dialogues and meetings for worship, and has a core membership of around 50 people, including Christians, Hindus, Jains, Muslims and Sikhs among others. The group has clear aims and objectives but no formal constitution. It has had good support from other South London groups and, recently, backing from the Mayor.

Harrow Inter Faith Council. Mary Hale reported that the Harrow group has been going for about 12 years and has involvement from Baha'is, Buddhists, Christians, Hindus, Jews, Muslims, Rastafarians, Sikhs, and Zoroastrians. It has recently acquired the remains of a lease on a small church hall on Stanmore Common and hopes this will provide a place of meeting for it and for some of the smaller faith communities locally who do not have their own place of worship.

The group is about to consider how its structure and aims are to develop in the coming years. This year started with a good meeting at which Dr Sophie Gilliat came to speak about "sacred space". The next meeting will be focusing on sacred space in offices, hospitals, and other public places.

Lambeth Multi Faith Action Group. Jaffar Al-Bassam and Sister Maureen Henderson explained that the group was formed just over three years ago after an Inner Cities Religious Council meeting in South East London. Christians, Jews and Muslims have been the main attenders. It is quite small but has met regularly every two months and both the local Liberal Synagogue and the Islamic Centre have made premises available for this. The group has financed any activities by passing the hat around.

The Group has two main activities a year: a One World Week event in Autumn and a seminar in the Summer. Recently they have created an exhibition about the group with a panel about each of the faiths which has been displayed in the local library and have produced a leaflet about the group and a faith community contact list.

Middlesex Centre for Inter Faith Dialogue. Revd Martin Eggleton described the work of the Centre which had emerged in 1994 at Middlesex University. It started as an academic project with a conference on "Faiths in Britain" and a further one on "Faiths in the Environment". It has since looked at a number of themes. Since it got going, the Centre has worked hard to involve the University's students in its work. It is presently setting up a "Journey 2,000" student group where students of different faiths will look at what these have to offer for our vision of the future. The Centre is also working on building links with local faith groups and he has managed to secure a small grant for a student to research a basis for this. A trust is also helping them develop a series of seminars on faiths in education.

Newham, Redbridge, Waltham Forest, and the Diocese of Chelmsford. Anne Davison, the Inter Faith Adviser for the Anglican Diocese of Chelmsford, reported on her own work and on the three inter faith groups in her area who had not been able to attend the link meeting. She goes to the groups' meetings when possible and channels enquiries to the appropriate group.

Newham Association of Faiths has now got an office and this year got its charitable status. Brian Pearce added that there had been around 60 people at Newham's last AGM which he had attended. Waltham Forest All Faiths Group has been serviced to date by the YMCA there, but the future is unclear at the moment despite some enthusiastic involvement. Redbridge Council of Faiths has been continuing to work with the local branch of the Council of Christians and Jews on occasional joint activities.

The Chelmsford Diocese has been looking at a possible youth exchange project for Christians, Jews and Muslims in Israel/Palestine and the London area. The first exchange is planned for 1998.

Richmond Inter Faith Fellowship. Cleone Rear reported that at present, Baha'is, Buddhists, Christians, Sikhs, and Unitarians are actively involved. They have meetings monthly and also go on visits to places of worship. Each summer they have a service specifically for women. In the Autumn they have a United Nations service which is held at a different church venue each year.

South London Inter Faith Group. Adrian Arnold reported that this has now been going for about 20 years, with varying levels of success and involvement. It presently has about 120 paid up members and has links with around 30 faith community leaders. There is good attendance at meetings, which have looked at topics as varied as fundamentalism, religious discrimination, and scriptures in the different traditions. There are also visits to places of worship. They are presently reflecting on the question of how far a millennial celebration can be inter faith, in the context of local boroughs considering how to mark the Millennium.

Tower Hamlets Association of Faiths/One for Life. Father Joe Colella explained that One for Life ("because we are one in our concern for life") is the name that has emerged for the inter faith process that started in 1994-5 during a period of conflict over the then newly elected fascist councillor in Tower Hamlets. Initially there was talk of the founding of a multi faith Gandhian ashram as a resource and as kind of living symbol of harmony on one of the most deprived estates in the area, but the property they had hoped to get escaped them and it was also realised that there were some difficulties attached to linking the initiative to one specific figure in this way.

None the less, there was much interest in the idea and support, especially from the local Churches Together. An association of faiths emerged in Tower Hamlets and has been meeting once a month. There is still the hope of a small inter faith community being founded in the area and a resource centre being set up. The Council has expressed interest in the project and representatives of it went with members of the association on a specially organised trip to Bradford to see the inter faith education centre there and discuss inter faith relations in that City. However, budget cuts meant that no actual financial support has yet come for the project.

Westminster Interfaith. Alfred Agius explained that Westminster Interfaith is an agency of the Westminster Diocese of the Roman Catholic Church but is multi faith in its involvement. It presently has a team of 4: Brother Daniel Faivre (who looks after West London); Sister Elizabeth O'Donohoe (whose focus is the North of London); Brother David (East End) and Alfred Agius (Central London).

They produce a newsletter and respond to requests for help both in London and further afield and also arrange an annual multi faith London pilgrimage (this year on 7 June and linked to the Network's Tenth Anniversary) as well as smaller pilgrimages in particular areas of London. The most recent pilgrimage was particularly good because they went to places where congregations were actually at prayer and spoke with them afterwards. Westminster Interfaith is presently planning more work with young people, including a residential for 24 young people of different faiths at Sobell House in London.

Wimbledon Inter Faith Group. Daud Hamid, who represents the Wimbledon Mosque on the inter faith group, reported on its activities. The co-ordinators are presently Baha'i, Christian (C of E and Catholic), Jewish and Muslim. The new chair is Baha'i member John Elderton. They arrange four meetings a year, which are well attended, and visit places of worship. At their meetings they have looked at such themes as "peace" and "creation and the environment". Recently they were involved with a special tree planting ceremony in the borough.

Midlands Link

The Midlands regional link was held on 15 April 1997 at the Moat Community College in Leicester by kind permission of the College.

Leicester. Mrs Angela Berryman, who works for Leicester City Council in a recently created post with responsibility for faith community affairs, reported on short term plans to open a "drop-in" centre in Bishop Street with a specifically multi faith dimension to it. An office for the Leicester Council of Faiths might be based there. This would offer resources and information.

For the longer term a preferred site has been identified for a new multi faith centre to house a faith history centre for Leicester. This would be funded from a variety of sources. It is currently not intended that the centre should be a place of worship but rather an information centre disseminating knowledge and experience and providing resources.

Revd Canon Michael Ipgrave said that the Leicester Council of Faiths is very much involved in this project although the local authority was the lead on it. Naturally, changes in the local authority structure in Leicester, with the creation of a unitary authority for the City of Leicester, will affect some structural aspects of the relationship between the local authority and the Council of Faiths.

The Council of Faiths sees itself as having two key tasks. The first is to improve communication and understanding between the different faith communities at a representative level and the second is to increase grassroots involvement. The Council normally meets in its representative mode in Committee and also has a number of open meetings in the course of the year. It will be holding a seminar on collective worship in May, with Dilip Kadodwala, Chair of the National Association of SACRE's, as one of the key speakers.

Alongside the Leicester Council of Faiths, there also exists a Leicester Inter Faith Council (formerly the Leicester Inter Faith Group). The two inter faith structures have somewhat different perspectives and have kept their separate identities. According to Revd Ipgrave, the Leicester Inter Faith Council is based on individual membership and emphasises development of inter faith relations at a personal level and the Leicester Council of Faiths sees itself as a more "representative" body concerned with relationships at a community level.

Coventry. Revd Supriyo Mukherjee reported on the Coventry Inter Faith Group which has been in existence for many years. Its membership has been mainly Christian and has been trying to broaden its agenda and draw in more members of other faiths.

He has also launched, with the involvement with the Bishop of Coventry, a Coventry Inter Faith Forum which comes together at a more representative level bringing in people from the different faith communities in Coventry. He has also been trying to initiate inter faith activity elsewhere in the Anglican Diocese of Coventry (to which he is inter faith adviser) including Nuneaton and Rugby. A local group has been revived in Leamington.

Mr Deo Meghan said that the Coventry Inter Faith Group has focused on various common themes, such as joy and peace. It holds an annual picnic and an annual inter faith peace walk. Usually about 12 people go on this but in 1996 there had been 50, a sign of increasing involvement in inter faith activity. Other faith communities have been pleased to be involved in consultation on the requirements to be borne in mind in appointing a new Anglican Bishop of Coventry.

Loughborough. Revd David Paterson said that the Loughborough Inter Faith Group has been meeting at monthly intervals for about 16 years at over a dozen different venues. It involves Buddhists, Christians, Hindus, Muslims, Raj Yoga and Sikhs. There has been a pattern in Loughborough of multi faith One World Week events and of multi faith pilgrimages around the main centres and invitations to one another's festivals.

It was against this background that about four years ago the Loughborough Council of Faiths came into existence. Its work has been encouraged by the new local authority and it is tackling issues relating to the public life together in Loughborough of the different faith communities, for example securing a better multi faith coverage on Radio Leicester and more appropriate facilities at local hospitals. The development of inter faith relations in Loughborough is helped by the fact that a number of Councillors are involved with the different faith communities.

Mr Bakhtawel Nagra said that the foundations for good inter faith relations had been laid early on in the life of the newer communities in Loughborough. Both the Sikh community and the Hindu community had initially been given facilities at David Paterson's church before moving on to their own premises. The work of the Inter Faith Group had been the context out of which the local Council of Faiths had grown.

South Warwickshire. Rosemary Harley said that the inter faith group based in Leamington had recently been revived. Meetings of the South Warwickshire Inter Faith Group take place in people's houses but the next one will be held at the local Hindu temple. Meetings have been held on the theme of peace, refugees and the work of the local SACRE. She recognises the importance of personal contact with people in the different faith communities to encourage them to become involved in the work of the group.

Birmingham. There are at present two inter faith organisations in Birmingham - the Birmingham Council of Faiths and the Birmingham Fellowship of Faiths - and discussions are in progress about the future relationship between them.

Christine Harries said that the Birmingham Fellowship of Faiths was formed in 1981. It has met roughly five times a year and shares in the festivals of different communities, discusses the fundamentals of different faiths and explores specific issues such as the position of women in different faith communities. Attendance at its meetings has sometimes been relatively small. It has recently proved more difficult to involve people from a variety of faith communities in the Fellowship's planning group. It had therefore been suggested, following an event at the Serbian Orthodox Church to give thanks to the end of the Bosnian war, that a series of visits to different faith communities might be arranged with each community deciding on the topic of interest to them to be the theme of the meeting. The possibility was put to the Birmingham Council of Faiths (previously the Birmingham Inter Faith Council) that it might wish to join in promoting this series of meetings.

So far, the Fellowship of Faiths has operated on a more personal basis whereas the BIFC/BCF is more concerned with establishing a framework to link different communities and their leaders on a representational basis. After some discussion it now looks as though there might be agreement between the Fellowship of Faiths and the Birmingham Council of Faiths to arrange in effect a merger between the two bodies. This would guarantee the continuation of the kind of programme which the Fellowship of Faiths has been mounting, but as part of the pattern of activities of the Birmingham Council of Faiths. At present the Fellowship of Faiths has only 20 subscribing members although there are about 100 people on its mailing list and posters advertising its meetings are more widely distributed. The Sikh community has offered to host the planned series of new meetings.

Sister Sujata said that seven different faith communities are represented on the Birmingham Council of Faiths. Each community is asked to bring members to meetings. The Council has been working to establish a framework for common action by the faith communities on matters of mutual concern. A new Chair is elected each year. The link with the Fellowship of Faiths could provide a way of diversifying a pattern of the Council's activities. It is hoped soon to be able to secure funding to appoint a paid Co-ordinator of the Council's work.

Wolverhampton. Mrs Ivy Gutridge said that the Wolverhampton Inter Faith Group had found that it is important to leave room in their forward programme of events for reactive work in response to developments in the course of the year. She mentioned the care with which new developments had been planned. For example, the annual prayers for peace held at St. Peter's Church had been preceded by a conference to explore the difficult issues relating to multi faith worship and prayer and to work out ways of organising the event which would be acceptable to the different communities. It has found that one useful way of publicising its meetings is through the mailing service which goes to local schools and carries news of its events free of charge. Other possibilities included displaying posters in local libraries.

The group's Executive Committee meets in one another's homes which helps to build links between their wider families. The regular multi faith pilgrimage will this year be taking place in Walsall as a way of trying to encourage multi faith activity there.

The Chief Executive of the local authority is very well disposed towards the work of the Group and has provided helpful advice. At the same time, it has been hit by funding difficulties and still does not have for the longer term financial security.

Other Regional Updates

The London Buddhist Vihara

The Most Venerable Medagama Vajiragnana represented the Buddhist faith in a day school organised by Birkbeck College, University of London and the World Congress of Faiths on 15 February. The theme was "Wealth and Poverty in the World's Religions". He was also invited by Revd Francis Makambwe to talk on the Buddhist life to PCC Committee in the Christian Parish of Hatcham in New Cross on 28 February. He writes, "Rev Makambwe opened the proceedings with a short prayer, followed by a brief but concise history of Buddhist teaching. Many and varied questions were answered in friendly and sympathetic manner, which led to a very relaxed atmosphere, encouraging more open discussion regarding the differences between the two religions. This seemed to illustrate the similarities as well as the differences and the Buddhist practice of not denigrating any belief was well appreciated."

Hyndburn. The recently created Hyndburn Inter-Faith Forum held a large scale public event on the theme "Creating Community" on 14 March. It took place at Accrington Town Hall and brought together over a hundred people from the various faith and ethnic communities in Hyndburn and Rossendale. Speakers included local MP Greg Pope; Rt Revd Martyn Jarrett, Bishop of Burnley; and Mr Hamid Qureshi, Secretary of the Lancashire Council of Mosques. The event was closed with some words from Councillor Mirza Yousaf, Mayor of Hyndburn. The Inter Faith Forum plans to meet quarterly. Further information from Revd David Lyon, St Peter's Vicarage, 151 Willows Lane, Accrington, Lancs BB5 OLN.

Ipswich. A "Celebration of Community" event was arranged by the Mayor and local communities in Ipswich in March. The religious part of the celebration took part at St Pancras Roman Catholic Church with each faith community contributing a song or reading and at which the Suffolk Inter Faith Resource team read from "Building Good Relations with People of Different Faiths and Beliefs". There was also a concert at the Corn Exchange as part of the celebration.

Edinburgh. An informal educational meeting took place on March 5 between the Pagan Federation (Scotland) and others who wanted to explore the nature of Paganism and how far it can be classified as a religion. The opportunity for this discussion, which was arranged by James Russell and John Macintyre, was welcomed by those present.

Luton. Luton Interfaith Forum (LIF) held its inaugural meeting on 20 February 1997 after a careful survey over three months in late 1996. Seven faith communities are involved: Christian, Hindu, Jain, Jewish, Muslim, Sikh and Zoroastrian.

Northern Ireland. The Northern Ireland Inter-Faith Forum held an event focusing on "Buddhism East and West" in March to introduce members to aspects of Buddhism Japan and Sri Lanka and related developments in the UK. There were presentations by Revd Ganshin Rock, a Buddhist Priest involved in inter faith relations through the inter faith group which meets at Donnington Grove in Berkshire and Dr Elizabeth Harris, Buddhism specialist and Secretary for Inter Faith Relations for the Methodist Church in Britain.

Wolverhampton. On 26 January the Wolverhampton Inter Faith Group held its annual prayer for peace at St Peter's Collegiate Church, using the One World Theme for the year: Living on the Edge. Songs and presentations from children were interspersed with musical contributions, readings from the Jewish and Muslim scriptures, a Christian Hymn and prayers from the Buddhist, Jain, Hindu and Narankari Traditions. On 19 April WIFG held a half day conference on "Moral Values: Moral Choices" in association with Wolverhampton LEA. More information from WIFG Office and Resource Centre, 43 Princess Street, Wolverhampton, WV1 1HD.

Leicester Council of Faiths are hoping to appoint, from 1 August 1997, a full-time worker to develop this inter faith organisation's infrastructure, and to establish a drop-in at a city centre location. Administrative and secretarial ability are essential, and awareness of faith communities. For further information, please contact: Canon Michael Igrave (0116 254 9658 / 262 2628) or Mrs Angela Berryman (0116 252 6093).

The Newsletter

The Inter Faith Network links 80 organisations with a commitment to helping build good relationships between Britain's different faith communities.

This newsletter is one of the ways of sharing news about developments at the Network, in each other's inter faith programmes, and more widely on the UK inter faith front.

Thank you to those who contributed to this issue. The next issue is scheduled for September 1997 and contributions for consideration can be sent on the enclosed form by 1 September to:

Remembering Diana Princess of Wales

The untimely death of Diana Princess of Wales, in the company of Dodi Al-Fayed and their driver, in Paris early on 31 August has left millions grieving across the world. Since her funeral at Westminster Abbey was not formally a state occasion, the usual arrangements for formal representation by leaders of the different faiths did not apply, but the UK's major faith communities have marked her passing in their own ways. One of the largest spontaneous gatherings was of the Asian community in Southall where Christians, Hindus, Muslims and Sikhs, among others, paid their respects.

Inter faith responses across the country took various forms. For example, in Bradford, former Mayor Muhammad Ajeeb, REC Director Ishtiaq Ahmed and David Fitch of the Bradford Interfaith Education Centre arranged for key members of all Bradford's faith communities to come on Saturday to watch the funeral at the Centre and to mark the minute's silence together. Bradford Cathedral's Provost was among those who came and he invited all those present to a special service of remembrance in the Cathedral the following day. In Birmingham a commemoration took place in Centenary Square on the Sunday, at which different religious leaders spoke, including Network Co-Chair and President of the Hindu Council for the UK, Mr Om Parkash Sharma who paid tribute to "a unique, charming, compassionate, caring and exceptionally gifted lady...always ready to help the less fortunate, throughout the world regardless of race or creed."

In Wales, the Princess' death was marked in a number of ways, including a special Radio Wales broadcast by Annand Jasani on 5 September with Christian, Hindu, Muslim and Sikh participants including an on air vigil and prayers and contributions about death and bereavement from different traditions.

The Princess was clearly appreciated by a wide spectrum of people, as shown by the messages from people of all faiths and many nations attached to the flowers left by crowds at the Royal Palaces in the last week. The charitable work which she supported crossed all boundaries and this will continue to be supported in her name by the Trust set up in the days following her death.

Consultation on Collective Worship in Schools

As part of the present consultative project on collective worship in schools, being jointly sponsored by the Religious Education Council for England and Wales, the National Association of SACREs and the Network, a wide-ranging consultation exercise has been launched to seek the views of many different educational and faith community organisations.

After the first two conferences held on 25 February and 20 May, it was decided to postpone the conference originally due to be held in September until December in order to allow time for this wider consultation exercise before the final conference draws together the conclusions of the consultation as a whole.

In answering a Question in the House of Lords in early July, the Minister of State at the Department for Education and Employment, Baroness Blackstone, referred to the consultation exercise and said that "the Government will look carefully at any recommendations" that its final report contains.

Values discussion at Lambeth Palace

In May, the Network helped to arrange what has now become a regular event: the annual inter faith meeting at Lambeth where representatives of the various faith communities meet with the Archbishop of Canterbury, Most Revd Dr George Carey to discuss issues of common concern.

The focus of the meeting on 21 May at Lambeth Palace was how dialogue about values and public life may best be carried forward in the coming years, especially in relation to the Millennium.

Participants discussed a number of issues ranging from the way that cultural diversity can be threatened by the monoculture of the popular media to the problems of drug related crime, to the threat of religious discrimination.

They emphasized the centrality of morality to a good society and the vital role which education can play in teaching moral principles. The home, the community and the school have a shared task in this respect. They recognised, however, that it is a complex matter to find ways of using education in multi faith, multi cultural classrooms to transmit moral values.

There was general agreement that it will be valuable to explore ways of developing the moral dialogue within society, particularly in connection with the Millennium which, although marking a key date for Christians, can also be an opportunity for reflection across society about the role of faith in our lives and ways to work towards greater understanding and discovery of values people may share, rooted in their particular religious traditions.

Network Publishes Report on Quest for Common Values Seminar

In June, the Network published a report of the Quest for Common Values Seminar which it held in December at Barnard's Inn, London. The report includes key points from the discussion and the texts of speakers Chief Rabbi Dr Jonathan Sacks; Professor Bhikhu Parekh; Rt. Revd Gavin Reid; Dr Nicholas Tate; and Ms Monica Taylor, Chair of the Values Education Council. It is available from the Network at £3.95 plus £1.05 for postage and packing.

New edition of Religions in the UK launched

On 29 May, the University of Derby and the Network launched the revised and expanded second edition of Religions in the UK: A Multi Faith Directory. David Craig, Head of the BBC's new Multifaith Bureau, gave a special lecture to mark the event at the University. The launch was attended by people from a wide range of educational and faith organisations.

The second edition, like the first, has been warmly welcomed by the faith communities and professionals in many fields. On the horizon is a new electronic inter faith resource, MultifaithNet, which is being created at the University of Derby. It will be an electronic gateway and signpost to resources on the Internet with a focus on religious and inter faith activity. A demonstration version of MultifaithNet was shown at the launch. The project was begun formally at the University in January with Klaus Stoll as "Webmaster" supported by Kai Stecher. The demonstration version can be visited at <http://www.multifaithnet.org/> and it is intended to have a formal launch of the service in late 1997 or early 1998.

Network National Meeting in Birmingham Looks at Faith Community Inter Faith Strategies

The Inter Faith Network held its Annual General Meeting in Birmingham on 23 June at the City Council House. A special exhibition was created to mark the fact that this is the Network's Tenth Anniversary. Alongside the Network's own exhibition stand, member bodies put up pictures and sample resources giving an idea of their own inter faith work.

The Lord Mayor of Birmingham, Councillor Sybil Spence welcomed the gathering to Birmingham. She congratulated The Inter Faith Network on its ten years of inter faith activity and said how much she welcomed such meetings of people of different faiths to discuss living and working together to tackle their common concerns.

Mr Om Parkash Sharma, Network Co-Chair, welcomed participants to the meeting and invited those present to join in a short period of silence, each praying or meditating in accordance with their own tradition. He asked the meeting in particular to call to mind during the silence the work and life of the late Rabbi Hugo Gryn, one of the Network's founder Co-Chairs, who had died the previous August, a few weeks after the Network's 1996 National Meeting.

The theme of the main meeting was how faith communities can develop appropriate inter faith strategies. Mr Indarjit Singh, Director of the Network of Sikh Organisations (UK) and a Vice-Chair of the Network, surveyed inter faith relations in Britain and discussed the need for faith communities to develop inter faith strategies.

Mr Singh highlighted a number of important questions:

"Some of the questions we need to be asking ourselves as faith communities as we consider how to develop our inter faith strategies are:

- Have we developed a sufficiently clear understanding of the basis within our own traditions for inter faith dialogue in theological and social terms?
- Are we ensuring that the religious leadership of our communities are adequately trained in inter faith issues and are ready to face the challenges of life together in a religious plural society?
- How can we make the most effective use of the organisational frameworks which the Network and other inter faith organisations provide at a national and local level? In particular, are we doing enough to ensure that we faith communities give whole hearted support to the work of local councils of faiths?
- As well as being involved in multilateral inter faith initiatives, do we need to establish new frameworks to address particular significant bilateral relationships where a damaging legacy from the past needs to be tackled?
- Do we adequately monitor and challenge material being produced from within our own community which is derogatory of other faiths as well as looking out for material produced by others which denigrates our faith?
- How can we draw in a wider range of people from our community at all levels into inter faith activity?
- What materials do we need to produce to help members of our faith communities reflect on their relationships with those who belong to other religious traditions?

- How best can we share the experience of those in our communities actually engaged in inter faith work?"

Revd Canon Dr Christopher Lamb, Secretary to the Churches' Commission on Inter Faith Relations and responsible for inter faith relations within Church of England and a member of the Network Executive Committee; and Dr Elizabeth Harris, the Secretary for Inter Faith Relations of the Methodist Church looked at the changing attitudes to inter faith relations among the Christian Churches in Britain.

After a break for vegetarian lunch, Dr Ataullah Siddiqui of the Islamic Foundation in Leicester and Mr Abdul Hamid Qureshi, Director of the Lancashire Council of Mosques and a member of the Network's Executive Committee offered their reflections on the participation of the Muslim community in inter faith activity at both national and local level. Then small discussion groups looked at number of different aspects of the meeting's theme. The meeting concluded with an "Open Forum" session and some closing reflections from the afternoon's Chair, Bishop Roy Williamson. A full report on the day is available from The Inter Faith Network at £1.75 plus 75 pence for postage and packing.

The AGM was held after the National Meeting. At it, applications for membership of the Network were accepted from: The Churches' Agency for Inter Faith Relations in Scotland; Hindu Council of the UK; Sri Lankan Sangha Sabha of Great Britain; Sheffield Interfaith; and Wycombe Sharing of Faiths. The current Co-Chairs, Vice-Chairs and Treasurer were re-elected. In addition to existing Committee members who were reelected, the following were elected as new members of the Committee to take the places of retiring Committee members : Mr Hugh Adamson, Mr Paul Seto and Sister Isabel Smyth.

A resolution was adopted empowering the Executive Committee to proceed with the necessary steps for the incorporation of the Network as a charitable company.

Census 2001

A working group on the religious identity question has been meeting under the auspices of the Office for National Statistics. During April and May it produced a draft statement of the case for including a question on religious identity in the Census. The paper was reviewed at a series of meetings in June attended by representatives of local authorities and government departments.

During June, questions which might be used in the 2001 census were piloted in different parts of the country. They included one on religious identity. The report of the outcome of these tests should be available shortly.

A further meeting will take place later this autumn, bringing together the results of the consultations and of the pilot testing programme.

Religious Discrimination

A series of regional consultative meetings organised by the Commission for Racial Equality's Special Project Team on Religious Discrimination is due to conclude with a meeting in Cardiff at the end of September. Plans are in hand for an Autumn meeting between the CRE and faith community national bodies to review the outcome of these consultations and to hear about the other work which the Project Team has been doing.

It is not yet clear what position the new Government will take on the case for fresh legislation to protect religious identity, although the Lord Chancellor announced this summer that the Government intends to proceed with the incorporation of the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law. This Convention contains Articles dealing in general terms with religious as well as other forms of discrimination and with freedom of religious belief and expression.

Inner Cities Religious Council

The new Government has made clear its commitment to continuing the work of the Inner Cities Religious Council. Its new co-chairs are Ms Hilary Armstrong (Minister of State) and Ms Angela Eagle (Parliamentary Under Secretary) of the new Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions. The Prime Minister sent a personal message of good wishes to the Council when it held its first meeting after the General Election on 9 July.

Lambeth Reception for Sheik of Al-Azhar

On 19 May, The Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr George Carey held a reception at Lambeth Palace for Dr Tantawi, Sheikh of Al-Azhar, who was visiting from Cairo. It was attended by Muslim and Christian leaders and also by a number of diplomats and journalists. At the event the Archbishop stressed the great importance of working to develop greater understanding between Christians and Muslims.

Patents on Life?

Proposals have recently been discussed in the European Parliament for the legal protection of "biotechnological invention". The Commission's draft proposals did not in practice make anything patentable which is not already patentable under current UK law. UK law, unlike that of some other member states, already seeks a balance between research, industry and ethical issues. The proposals were produced by the European Commission as a measure to harmonise laws in the Member States of the Union in this field.

The European proposals still have to pass through further stages. Proposals as amended by the Parliament will be considered by a Working Party as the next stage before revised proposals are submitted to the European Parliament.

The Gaia Foundation, 18 Well Walk, Hampstead, London, NW3 1LD, has been particularly active in lobbying against the proposals on the grounds that the proposals confuse the distinction between invention and discovery and incorporate insufficient safeguards.

The Department of Trade and Industry responds by pointing out that patents in the biotechnological field, as in others, is a means of enabling those engaged in expensive research to recover their costs. A patent only gives its holder the right to prevent others for a limited period of time from using an invention. It does not give the holder any positive authorization to use the invention and the patent holder must comply with all other legislation and regulations, for example laws concerning health, animal welfare and the environment in the making of an invention and its exploitation.

The Department argues that patent rights are granted in recognition of human ingenuity and it is this ingenuity which is protectable and not living things themselves. Discoveries, such as recognition that a particular gene exists in nature, and not inventions are not patentable. However, inventions which comprise a technical intervention such as by isolating a gene and identifying a use for genetic material may be subject to patent rights. The Commission's proposal specifies that the human body and its elements in their natural state shall not be patentable.

Particularly in the wake of recent developments on the "cloning" of sheep, this is an area where very sensitive issues arise and a number of religious organisations have been expressing their concern. If you want further details about the current proposals and the present position, you can contact the Gaia Foundation or Dr N R Curtis, The Patent Office, Cardiff Road, Newport, South Wales, NP9 1RH.

National Religious Education Festival 6-10 October

Over 10,000 schools are gearing up to take part in the first ever National RE Festival. Many have been working with local faith communities and places of worship to create events to celebrate RE. Details of some of the events taking place around the UK can be found in the Festival's newsletter, free from its office: Tel 0181 923 8383 or fax 0181 923 8844.

European Ecumenical Assembly at Graz hears voice of grassroots multi faith Britain

Nine members of the Birmingham Council of Faiths and participants from Bradford and from the new Luton Interfaith Forum travelled to Graz in Austria at the end of June to attend the second European Ecumenical Assembly of Christian Churches. They had been inspired to attend by Kairos UK who had organised a party of people from Britain whose voices would not otherwise be heard at the Assembly. Happily they were also able to represent the Inter Faith Network which had been asked to contribute to one of the sub-themes of the conference, "establishing a dialogue with religions and cultures". The multi faith team which gave a workshop on six principles of interfaith dialogue included Mr Sajad Mohammed; Ms Ramona Kauth; Mr Rajinder Kumar; Mr Ranjit S Wahiwala; Mr Jalal Uddin; Sr Sujata; Mrs Ruth Tetlow; Revd Richard Tetlow; Mr Peyman Pezeshki of Birmingham; Mr Shanthi Hettiarachchi and Mr Gandhi from Luton; and Rev Carole Ellefsen from Bradford. Birmingham Council members write of their experiences at the 10,000 strong Assembly in their group report :

"On arrival, we quickly found that we were unique among all the participants in coming as a multifaith group. We were highly visible and attracted a lot of (not unwelcome) attention from both participants and the media, not least because of Mr Wahiwala's turban! We were interviewed by media from Italy and Hungary and photographed on numerous occasions. We were able to demonstrate a multifaith community in action, by meeting frequently as a group and taking care to co-ordinate our participation in the events of the Assembly....In a gathering where people of cultures other than "white Christian" tended to be seen as outsiders, we were proud to be able to bring from Birmingham our own experience of inclusive multicultural living together.

The working document of the conference reflected the experience of many other European countries in that it referred only to Judaism and Islam in the section on other faiths. Without our presence and that of Mr Gandhi, there would have been hardly any recognition of the Baha'i faith, Buddhism, Hinduism or Sikhism.

...We were asked to speak, both on behalf of The Inter Faith Network for the UK and about our own experience. We were able to speak from a wide range of grass roots experience...[and] benefited from the fact that most members of the group had known each other and worked together for many years....Rajinder Kumar noted 'We were commended that our work was pioneering and way ahead of the rest of Europe in terms of interfaith dialogue' As participants, rather than delegates, we were not officially part of the Working Groups. However..[we] were able to make a substantial contribution with the support of several of the delegates present. Our main concern was to strengthen the recommendations in line with the principles of The Inter Faith Network for the UK, so that the needs of all faith communities in Europe receive proper attention in a society in which we are all truly equal citizens."

Full report available from Mrs Ruth Tetlow, Tel 0121 456 5839.

Regional Updates

Birmingham.

A course entitled "Women of Faith: Challenged by the Millennium" was run at the College of the Ascension in Birmingham by Christians Aware Faith Awareness Programme on 7 June.

Blackburn.

A special Christian-Muslim event was held in Blackburn Cathedral on 13 June. Rt Revd Alan Chesters, Anglican Bishop of Blackburn and Dr Rahim Khan opened the programme and Father Michael Barnes SJ and Dr Ataullah Siddiqui spoke on aspects of the dialogue.

Prayers and open forum discussion were followed by a shared meal and a vote of thanks.

The meeting was arranged by Mr A Hamid Qureshi of the Lancashire Council of Mosques and Revd Colin Albin, Bishop's Adviser on Inter-Faith Relations to build on the very successful Christian-Muslim meeting in Blackburn last March. They hope the series of events of the "Building Bridges" programme will continue because "Peace in the world at large begins with peace in local communities".

Colchester.

The Baha'is of Colchester held their 3rd Annual Inter-Faith Celebration on 5 June at the Mayor's Parlour in Colchester Town Hall.

The event sought to demonstrate the oneness of humanity through celebration. Several faith communities contributed, with testimonials on "Love and Fellowship", and there was music from the children of the various faith traditions. The event was arranged by Angela Tideswell with the support of the Mayoress, Councillor Jenny Stevens.

Glasgow.

On 10 & 11 May, at St Mungo's Museum in Glasgow, people from the seven main local faith communities - Baha'i; Buddhist; Christian; Hindu; Jewish; Muslim; and Sikh - gathered to meet with and talk to members of the public.

The "Meet your Neighbour" gathering was organised by the Churches Agency for Inter-Faith Relations in Scotland, to stimulate interest in inter faith matters in the Christian community.

At the same time, the event has given new impetus to the multi faith Glasgow Sharing of Faiths group. Further information from Sister Isabel Smyth (Tel 0141 339 8174).

Leicester.

A full time administrator was appointed at the beginning of August for the Leicester Council of Faiths. There is now an office and welcome centre open at Pilgrim House, 10 Bishop Street, Leicester LE1 6AF. Further information from Andrew Goodliffe (0116 254 6868).

A course entitled "Responses to the Changing Face of India" was run in Leicester by Christians Aware on 22 June.

London.

A multi faith pilgrimage took place in South London on 12 July. It took in the local Swaminarayan Hindu Temple, Roman Catholic and Anglican Churches, the South London Liberal Synagogue and Shi'a and Sunni Muslim centres. It was organised by the South London Inter Faith Group. A report on the day is available from Eric Bramsted (Tel 0181 542 9618).

Oxford

On 13 July a Summer Garden Party and Multi-Cultural Concert took place at the Friends Meeting House in Oxford with the help of the Society of Friends.

Each faith group represented in ORTR took part in a programme which included dance, poetry and song. It was attended by ORTR members and their friends and contacts. The Guest of Honour was Rev Marcus Braybrooke.

The event was organised by ORTR to help increase awareness of their existence, raise funds and to provide an opportunity for informal meeting and enjoyment.

Southall, Middlesex.

Christians Aware Faith Awareness Programme sponsored five Thursday evening events in May and June on "Building Bridges Across Race, Faith and Culture" which looked at issues of prejudice and discrimination experienced between Christian and Jew, Black and White, Irish and British, and Muslim and Christian people.

CAFA was also involved in a "Day of Mindfulness" led by Val Philpott of the UK Community of Interbeing, arranged in response to the growing interest in meditation in different faith traditions, particularly in the wake of the recent visit to England of Vietnamese Buddhist monk Thich Nhat Hanh.

Westminster Inter Faith.

The Twelfth London Multi Faith Pilgrimage took place on 7 June. It was arranged by Westminster Inter Faith, with the support of the London Borough of Greenwich Multi-Faith Forum. Its purpose was to promote peace and racial harmony. It also celebrated the 10th anniversary of the foundation of The Inter Faith Network for the UK.

Representatives of the different faith communities visited various places of worship in Greenwich, Woolwich, the Plumstead area and the Isle of Dogs. Participants included religious leaders and faith community members, the Mayor and Mayoress of the London Borough of Greenwich and Inter Faith Network staff.

From 1 September, the Director of Westminster Interfaith will be Mr Alfred Agius who has been their Central London Area coordinator since May 1996. Westminster Interfaith is the inter faith programme of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Westminster. Although its main area of work is that diocese, it is known throughout the UK for its annual multi faith pilgrimage and its liturgical resources for prayer and meditation in multi faith contexts.

Alfred Agius has the tough task of replacing the irreplaceable: the energetic, creative and cheerfully unstoppable Brother Daniel Faivre who will leave the Westminster Interfaith team at the end of the year.

To be kept in touch with Westminster Interfaith, contact the newsletter Editor, Dr Tony McCaffry at St Mary's University College (Tel 0181 240 4196).

West Midlands celebration of Network's 10th Anniversary.

On 1 June around 50 people from the West Midlands met at Churchfields High School in West Bromwich for a celebration of the Tenth Anniversary of The Inter Faith Network. The theme was "Inter Faith as it was; as it is; and for the future".

Chairs of the first two sessions were Rt Revd Michael Bourke and Mr Jaswant Singh Sohal and speakers in the first two sessions were Revd Canon and Mrs Pat Hooker and Mr Brian Pearce and Mr Om Parkash Sharma.

The third session included contributions from Mr Harun Rashid, Mr Len Brades and Mr T R Bhardwaj and young people from various faith communities. The host at the venue was Headteacher Mr Edwin Smith. A report on the day is available from Mrs Ivy Gutridge (Tel 01902 341948)

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

If your city, town or county has held any multi-faith service or event of commemoration or thanksgiving for the late Princess of Wales, The Network would be very glad to be sent details and a copy of any service sheet.

We also welcome copies of any materials relating to civic multi faith events relating to other moments of local or national significance. Your materials can help provide a useful resource for future enquirers looking for appropriate ways to develop ways of acknowledging key events together in ways which both respect the integrity of our individual traditions and our shared concerns.

Please send any materials to Harriet Crabtree at the Network.

Network Anniversary Celebration Event and Tenth Year Appeal

Plans are well in hand for the Network celebration event at Lincoln's Inn in London in late November, to mark the Tenth Anniversary of the Network. We hope that many organisations and individuals will respond to the fundraising appeal which is linked to it.

The Celebration Committee, chaired by Mrs Rosalind Preston, aims to raise enough funds not only to cover the cost of the event itself but also to make a substantial contribution to the resources available for the Network to maintain and develop for the future the vital work of building good relations between the faith communities of the United Kingdom.

All donations for the fund are most welcome: large or small. We have already had a very positive response from a number of individuals and faith community bodies.

If you or your organisation would like to make a donation to help the Network's work to build strong inter faith relations in Britain, you are invited to send this to the Celebration Committee at the Network address: 5/7 Tavistock Place, London WC1H 9SN.

The next issue of *Inter Faith Update is scheduled for January 1998 and contributions for consideration can be sent on the enclosed form by 15 December to Dr Harriet Crabtree at The Inter Faith Network for the UK (Reg. Char. 296773) 5/7 Tavistock Place, London WC1H 9SN Tel 0171 388 0008 Fax 0171 387 7968 works to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make Britain a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions.

In its first ten years, together with its member bodies, it has:

- encouraged and assisted members of Britain's nine major faith communities to meet and to explore the positive resources in their own religious traditions for building good inter faith relations
- worked to ensure a place for Britain's major faith communities in our public life
- promoted the development of local inter faith structures
- widened the circle of people in each faith community committed to building good relations between the faiths
- ensured the availability of accurate information about the faiths and inter faith activity
- raised the public profile of inter faith issues
- assisted other organisations committed to working for a harmonious multi faith society

The Inter Faith Network celebrates its tenth anniversary

On 30 November a celebration event attended by nearly 300 guests from all Britain's major faith communities took place in the Great Hall at Lincoln's Inn to mark the Tenth Anniversary of the Inter Faith Network. The programme was compered by Mrs Rosalind Preston OBE and speakers included the Archbishop of Canterbury, Most Revd and Rt Hon Dr George Carey, and Hilary Armstrong MP, Minister for Local Government and Housing and Co-Chair of the Inner Cities Religious Council, as well as the Chairs, Vice Chairs and Director of the Network.

There was a particular focus on youth. Young people of the Baha'i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jain, Jewish, Muslim, Sikh and Zoroastrian communities spoke of their experiences of tolerance and intolerance growing up in Britain today and of the importance of working to bring about good inter faith relations. Music for the event was also provided by young people: Anne Waldeck from the Jewish community played the violin, and from the Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan came a performance on mridangam and veena from Mr Prasanna and Mr Hari.

The event was generously sponsored by Rt Revd Jonathan Bailey, Bishop of Derby; Rt Revd Richard Chartres, Bishop of London; Most Revd and Rt Hon David Hope KCVO, Archbishop of York; Mr Manubhai Madhvani; Rt Revd David Sheppard, former Bishop of Liverpool; Sir Sigmund Sternberg KCSG; Rt Revd Keith Sutton, Bishop of Lichfield; Rt Revd Roy Williamson, Bishop of Southwark; and the UK Action Committee for Islamic Affairs. Many others of all faiths made significant donations toward the event and towards the work of the Network.

Remembering some of the highlights of the Network's first 10 years

1987 The Network is founded with 60 member organisations following two years of consultations. Bishop Jim Thompson and the late Rabbi Hugo Gryn are its founder Co-Chairs, with Vice Chairs Dr Mughram Al-Ghamdi, Mr Om Parkash Sharma, and Mr Indarjit Singh. Mr Brian Pearce becomes its first Director. The Network holds its first national meeting on "Tolerance and Acceptance in a Religiously Plural Society."

1988 The Network opens an office in central London. It holds two national meetings focusing on Faith Communities and the Media and on "The Concept of Inter Faith Dialogue" and initiates a regular series of regional "link" meetings for local inter faith organisers around Britain.

Marking the Millennium in a Multi Faith Context

The Department for Culture, Media and Sport will shortly publish a brief document, Marking the Millennium in a Multi-Faith Context, prepared for it by the Churches and Other Faiths sub-group of its Millennium Co-ordinating Group, in association with the Inter Faith Network.

The document is designed for use in multi faith contexts, and will give guidance to local authorities and other organisations planning Millennium celebrations. It will encourage careful event planning which recognises that the Millennium marks a key event in Christian history and that, at the same time, in our multi faith society, there will also be shared celebrations of the year 2000. In the words of the document, it will be "an opportunity for people of all faiths to draw on the spiritual heritages of their own traditions to think together about the values that underpin our society and to reflect on the future of our society and our environment for ourselves, our children and generations to come."

The document will look at a number of issues. The question, in particular, of whether and how members of different faiths can share in common meditation, reflection or worship is a complex one. The guidelines will reflect this and will set out a range of options for bringing people together in ways which are inclusive, while sensitive to the integrity of the beliefs of participants.

Copies of the guidelines will be available free from the Millennium Unit of the Department for Culture Media and Sport, 2-4 Cockspur Street, London SW1Y 5DH or from The Inter Faith Network 5-7 Tavistock Place, London WC1H 9SN (please send a stamped addressed A4 envelope).

And also on the Millennium

The Churches and Other Faiths sub-group of the Millennium Co-ordinating Group met in September and November to discuss a range of issues, including the handling of religious aspects of the Millennium Experience at Greenwich. The Department for Culture, Media and Sport is co-ordinating the Government's interests in the Millennium. Its Millennium Unit is advising both the Secretary of State, the Rt Hon Chris Smith MP, and Peter Mandelson MP, Minister without Portfolio, who holds responsibility for the Millennium Experience.

The Network Office is represented on the Churches and Other Faiths sub-group by Harriet Crabtree.

Census 2001: a religious question?

There have been continuing discussions on whether or not a question on religious identity should be included in the 2001 Census and, if so, in what terms. The results of the pilot testing of census questions in June 1997 have not yet been made public. There have, however, been further discussions between the Office for National Statistics, potential users of information derived from a religious question and faith community representatives. It is hoped that a firm decision on whether or not to include a question on religion in the 2001 Census will be taken later this year.

Collective worship in schools in England and Wales

During 1996 and 1997, the Religious Education Council for England and Wales, the National Association of SACRE's and the Inter Faith Network have been co-sponsoring a joint consultation on collective worship in schools in England and Wales.

On 11 December the third and final conference of the consultation took place in London. The conference had before it the results of a postal consultation carried out in advance which canvassed a wide range of organisations represented at the conferences about possible options for the future of collective worship. A report on the consultation as a whole is now being prepared.

Three Faiths Forum

The Three Faiths Forum was founded in January 1997 as a result of an initiative by Sir Sigmund Sternberg and Sheikh Dr Zaki Badawi to promote dialogue between Jews, Christians and Muslims.

The Forum held a consultative conference in December 1997 at which speakers included Dr Ali El Samman, Chairman of Interfaith Dialogue of the Egyptian High Council for Islamic Affairs, Dr Richard Stone, Chair of the Jewish Council on Racial Equality, Ms Helen Seaford, Director of the Runnymede Trust's Commission on the Future of Multi-Ethnic Britain, Mr D. C. Varness, Assistant Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, Rev Marcus Braybrooke, Rabbi Dr Norman Solomon and Mr Clifford Longley. The conference discussed the issues which need to be tackled in a Jewish-Christian-Muslim dialogue and ways in which the Forum might best carry forward its work. For further information about the activities of the Forum, contact its Co-ordinator Mr Sidney Shipton at Star House, 104 Grafton Road, London NW5 4BD, tel 0171 485 2538.

World Congress of Faiths publishes prayer resource book

In November the World Congress of Faiths published All in Good Faith. In this resource book, spiritual teachers from all faiths write about the place of prayer in their tradition and their attitude to praying with members of other faiths. Also included is a selection of services and a wide ranging anthology from the scriptures of the world on such themes as: freedom, justice, healing, peace, and the environment. The book is available from: World Congress of Faiths, 2, Market Street, Oxford, OX1 3EF. Price: £7.99 + £1.60pp.

Focus on Roman Catholic Inter Faith Initiatives

Rt Revd Charles Henderson is one of the Network's longest serving Executive Committee members. Bishop Charles is one of the key figures in the Roman Catholic Church's work of building good relations with other faith communities in this country, which is overseen by the Roman Catholic Committee for Other Faiths of the Bishops' Conference of England and Wales.

In addition to his national role, Bishop Charles has local responsibilities in the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Southwark. On 10 October he helped put inter faith issues higher on the local agenda by hosting a meeting on "Promoting Inter Faith Responsibility" for Deans of the Archdiocese who have coordinating responsibility for groups of 6-10 parishes. The idea was to share experiences of inter faith involvement, to raise awareness, and to take new information back to the parishes.

The meeting was also to mark the tenth anniversary of the Inter Faith Network and Brian Pearce and Harriet Crabtree gave a joint presentation on the history and role of the Inter Faith Network and the importance in Britain today of dialogue on the basis of faith. Bishop Henderson stressed the Catholic Church's teaching on matters of inter-faith, the need to proclaim this teaching and the enrichment that flows from fulfilling it. He encouraged the Deans to use their Deanery conferences to inform the priests and engage their ministry in this important area of the life of the Church.

On 17 December, Catholics and many of other faiths came together at Campion House in Osterley to thank Brother Daniel Faivre for his many years of inter faith work in Southall and more widely through his publications on inter faith issues.

Islam in Europe

A Joint Consultation on "Cultural Pluralism and Religion in Europe: the contribution of Islam and Christianity to the Future" took place from 18-22 October, organised jointly by the Islamic Foundation, Leicestershire, UK and the Centre for the Study of Islam and Christian-Muslim Relations (CSIC), Selly Oak Colleges, Birmingham, UK. The consultation was attended by 26 academics, media personnel and activists from Christian and Muslim backgrounds from the UK, France, Germany, Switzerland, Belgium, Sweden and Italy.

There were six main themes of discussion. The first was the issue of religious pluralism and citizenship. A paper on this topic was given by Professor Jaques Waardenburg from the University of Lausanne, Switzerland. It focused on questions of who is a citizen and what pluralism means in the religious context and looked at how religious communities should interact with each other and the need and importance of inter-faith dialogue. The respondent was Muhammad Aman Hobohm, a retired diplomat from Germany, who highlighted some of the actual problems faced by Muslims living in Europe vis-à-vis citizenship, equality, and acceptance, citing especially his experiences from Germany.

In the second session Dr Tariq Ramadan from the University of Fribourg, Switzerland presented a paper on the subject of European Islamic thought towards the 21st century. The respondent was Professor Christian Troll from Rome, Italy. The paper looked at the opportunities and challenges facing Muslims now settled in Western Europe: how Islamic thought in Europe is facing up to the challenges of modernity and what changes are taking place within the framework of contemporary Muslim ideas. It also looked at the joint responsibilities that Muslims and the European society have to face their common challenges.

Dr Jocelyn Cesari from the University of Marseilles, France, presented the third paper on the issue of Muslim representation in a European political context and this was responded to by Sharon Imtiyaz from the Selly Oak Colleges. The paper described the challenges of Muslim representation within Europe, the issues of Muslim identity and the expression and perception of Islam within different European countries.

As there is so much focus on the issue of Islamic fundamentalism, in the fourth session of the consultation Professor Jørgen Nielsen, Director of the CSIC, Selly Oak Colleges looked at the notion of fundamentalism, its origin and the use of the term in relation to Islam. He also explained how the label of fundamentalism overshadows the moderate, sensible debate that most Muslims are engaged in. The respondent was Dr Manazir Ahsan, Director of the Islamic Foundation who drew attention to the practical problems faced by Muslims in attaining their rights and recognition as a result of the label of fundamentalism.

In the fifth session, the consultation took a wider look at the Muslim world and Europe and tackled the issue of Muslims, Europe and international relations. This session was presented by Professor Khurshid Ahmad, Chairman of the Islamic Foundation and was responded to by Professor Nielsen. The presentation was a wide ranging one covering the historical background to the relationship between Islam and Europe, the long presence of Muslims in Europe and the effects of international events on the relationship between Islam and the Muslim world on the one hand and on the other, the European states and vice versa.

The consultation was aimed at creating a platform for discussion of ideas about the presence of both religious communities in a predominantly secular Europe and the contribution that they can together make to the future of European society. The final session therefore focused on the way ahead. It is planned that the project will continue, mainly through writing and perhaps some meetings to explore the ideas further. In future there will be an emphasis on the themes of social justice, human dignity and civic duties. The participants and the organiser wish to express their gratitude to the European Commission for their support on this project.

Request for information about planning for hospital patients of varying faiths

Swindon Interfaith Group has been involved for some time with local hospitals, trying to ensure that patients of minority faiths have the facilities they need. A new hospital is now planned under the "private finance initiative" and the group is involved in the consultation process. They would welcome contact with any other groups involved in the same process. Contact Mrs Margaret Griffiths, Secretary, tel 01793 534923.

Regional Updates

Link meeting news

The Inter Faith Network's Eastern area link meeting for local inter faith organisers took place on 14 October at the Friends Meeting House in Hartingdon Grove Cambridge.

Cambridge. Mr John Betteridge reported that the Cambridge Inter-Faith Group continues to distribute a quarterly newsletter and to hold meetings monthly and to attract around 12 people per meeting from its mailing list of around 40. The membership represents quite a cross section of the town's faiths but the most active support is from the Baha'is at present.

Professor S. A. Ashraf and Dr S. A. Mabud reported on the work of The Islamic Academy, Cambridge. Dr Mabud reported that the Academy had arranged a very successful exhibition about Islam for the recent National RE Festival. It had taken place in one of the Cambridge University examination halls. The purpose of the exhibition had been to present an accurate picture of Islam and to give teachers more resources for teaching Islam. Ten school groups came over the three days of the exhibition with some returning for a second and visits. They meet sometimes at Friends House and sometimes at other faith community centres. The programme for the current six months is on the theme of "Living out one's faith today". The most encouraging aspect of their work is the friendships which are beginning to develop between people from different faith communities.

The group is working hard at establishing stronger links with the Hindu and Muslim communities. Mr Tony McNeile said that the main thrust of their work is to promote better understanding: the more we know of others the less suspicious we are of them. He hoped that different faith communities are now recognising the importance of promoting good relations both within their own communities and with others.

Bury

Mrs Phyllis Vallon described the work of the Bury Inter Faith Council. Annual events are arranged under the auspices of the Mayor of Bury, using the Town Hall. The number of people wanting to be involved has now grown to the point where the Forum is considering setting up sub-groups. She was encouraged by the news of Jewish involvement in inter faith activity elsewhere in the North West. The Presidents of the Greater Manchester Jewish Representative Council have been much involved in the work of the Bury Inter Faith Council. The JRC sends speakers on Judaism to visit other organisations. The Bury Inter Faith Council planning group meets about five times a year and has established excellent working relationships among its members. The previous evening their main annual event had focused on 'Death and Life Hereafter'. Between 70-80 people had been present with speakers from the Christian, Hindu, Jewish and Muslim faiths. The meeting (also attended by Brian Pearce and Harriet Crabtree) had been very successful.

Hyndburn and Pendle

Rev Sally Thomas reported on the launching of the Hyndburn Inter Faith Forum at a well supported event in March. Rev David Lyon, a local Anglican vicar, had been heavily involved in planning and arranging this, following contact between him and Mr Abdul Hamid Qureshi at the Network 'link' meeting in Blackburn in March 1996. The launch meeting took place on the premises of the Hyndburn Borough Council. The Forum subsequently organised a public meeting addressed by candidates at the time of the General Election.

The Pendle Inter Faith Group has been active and holds about four meetings a year. There has been variable attendance but there is a mailing list of some 75 people and it is hoped to expand the range of those involved in the group's activities. A Steering Group has been formed to promote a new community project in Nelson and Bradfield. The Kashmir issue has been attracting a good deal of attention locally because of the Kashmiri background of many people now living in Pendle. The local authority has arranged a meeting to address the issue.

Brian Pearce commented that it is important for all inter faith organisations to take into account the impact of overseas events on inter faith relations in this country. Rev Ron Lewis referred to the role of the URC churches in arranging tri-lateral Jewish-Christian-Muslim meetings in the area.

Lancashire Council of Mosques

Mr Talha Wadee, who has recently been appointed Director of the Lancashire Council of Mosques, said that there are 47 mosques in Lancashire. His Council receives funding from the Lancashire County Council. His predecessor, Mr Abdul Hamid Qureshi, a member of the Network's Executive Committee, was heavily involved in inter faith activity and as his successor he hopes to continue this work. He mentioned the major event which took place in June in the Anglican Cathedral in Blackburn organised by Mr Hamid Qureshi and Rev Colin Albin, the adviser on inter faith relations to the Bishop of Blackburn. There had been keynote speakers from the Christian and Muslim community and local MEP's and MP's had been invited. He also referred to the way in which the death of Princess Diana had brought all sections of the community together in the sharing of their grief.

visit. Connected with the exhibition were three lectures by an Islamic expert and two Muslim lecturers at the University and one Christian lecturer.

Norwich. Mrs Rosemary Pickering gave a short update on the initiative to begin some form of inter faith structure in the city. She has been in touch with the Suffolk Inter Faith Resource in Ipswich to develop links and learn from their experiences. Mrs Marian Agombar, who is based at the Keswick Hall RE Centre and also is the Anglican Diocesan Inter Faith Adviser, shared news of the impact of the new Agreed Syllabus for Norfolk which has focused more attention on the different faiths and led to schools requesting speakers of various faiths. Particularly of note was a special day arranged for GCSE students last Autumn with workshops on the different faiths. The small group who arranged that day decided to carry on meeting as a group after the event and had a meeting last month to discuss future plans. It is possible that this educational initiative may develop as a useful and genuinely multi-faith resource for the city alongside other developing initiatives. Peter and Sylvia Dadd also represented Norwich at the meeting.

Peterborough Inter-Faith Council was represented by Mr Paul Brocklehurst. He explained that it was formed in 1978 and is one of the oldest such councils in the country. It presently has about 45 members with one or two of all the main faiths in the area. The city is predominantly Christian but has a sizeable Muslim population as well as members of other faiths. There are two Sunni mosques and one Shi'a mosque as well as a Hindu temple. The city has a very small Jewish population, but members of it are active on the inter faith front, as are Baha'is and Brahma Kumaris.

The Peterborough Inter-Faith Council has about 3 open meetings a year, which have recently focused on such issues as women and spirituality and medical ethics. Once a year they have an inter faith service at the Cathedral where the faiths contribute in ways appropriate to their traditions. This is a high point of the year, with good attendance.

Suffolk Inter-Faith Resource was represented by Mrs Cynthia Capey, Ms Deborah Hargreaves, Ms Elahe Mojdehi, and Mr Bart Seaton. The Resource Centre has been going for 3 years as a registered charity and is continuing to do well. It built upon a longer tradition of annual events for the faiths run by the Mayor. Its primary work is as an educational resource, developing materials for use in schools, including a new video, "Faiths in Focus in Ipswich", made by their Vice Chair and a teacher friend which explores all the local faith communities. SIFRE has tutors from a number of faiths who can work with schools on projects. It has just completed a very successful week of events linked to the National RE Festival. The week began with a "drop-in" for teachers with an opportunity to meet the tutors of different faiths. Religious "town trails" were organised as well as more extended visits for teachers to some of the local places of worship.

The Resource Centre now also does some training for external organisations such as the local Social Services. It has been working, with local faith communities, on the draft of a handbook for the local hospital covering beliefs, practices and dietary and modesty requirements of the various faiths in the locality. The handbook will feature locally taken photographs.

As well as the education dimension, the Centre has opportunities for inter faith encounter and friendship. They have a multi-faith women's group which has been on a number of outings, including, for example, to the Chelsea Flower Show earlier this year. For the Millennium, SIFRE has plans for a special pageant showing the long religious history of the town.

The Inter Faith Network held its North West region link meeting at the Friends Meeting House in Bolton on 30 October.

Bolton

Mrs Gill Atkinson said that the Bolton Inter Faith group had been formed about four years ago. Their programme consists mainly of talks

Liverpool

Some years ago the Merseyside Inter Faith group was temporarily in abeyance. It has now been rejuvenated. In Liverpool there is one Hindu temple and one mosque but no Sikh gurdwara. Dr Khan and Canon Michael Wolfe of the Anglican Liverpool Cathedral have helped to arrange a series of meetings in the centres of the different faith communities. This is helping to promote more mutual understanding between people of different faiths and personal friendships has also been developing. Mr Choudhury and Mr Shah Nawaz endorsed Dr Khan's encouraging report of developments in Liverpool.

Dr Khan referred to the long standing ecumenical links between Roman Catholics and Anglicans in Liverpool. Some three years ago a series of Christian-Jewish-Muslim meetings began. The Merseyside Inter Faith Group formed some years previously holds about nine meetings a year. Last month about 250 people came to the Pakistan Centre for a meeting focusing on reconciliation in reparation of actions carried out by Christians during the Crusades. During the Autumn three young women from the United States are visiting Merseyside to study the origins of the slave trade and have made contact with the group.

Manchester. Rev Robert Boulter inherited the role of organiser of the Manchester Inter Faith Group some ten years previously from the Sacred Trinity RE Centre, which has recently had to close for lack of funds. He explained that the Manchester Inter Faith Group now tends to focus mainly on work in the Whalley Range area.

The group organises a programme of visits to places of worship and of speakers and receives many requests for information and advice on inter faith matters. Students from the local universities and colleges of higher education go on organised visits to his church to discuss issues concerned with inter faith relations. At present there is a feasibility study on the possibility of establishing an inter faith centre. The group at present does not have a formal committee structure or any publications. Mr

Choudhury said that the group is still doing useful work in maintaining informal links between communities. When the group was based at Sacred Trinity Centre there was the advantage that a full time member of its staff could take on responsibility for maintaining and organising the formal arrangements for the Group.

Canon Albert Radcliffe, of the Anglican Cathedral in Manchester, spoke about the work of the Manchester Council of Christians and Jews. There are some 30,000 Jewish people in the Greater Manchester area and the local CCJ Branch is a strong one. They hold a 'Friendship Week' each year which begins and ends in two synagogues, one Reform and one Orthodox.

Brian Pearce mentioned that the Anglican Bishop of Manchester, Christopher Mayfield, had held a meeting during May with other faith community leaders to discuss the way forward on multi faith links.

Rev Jay Kothare has recently arrived in the Manchester area as adviser to the Anglican Bishop on community relations and inter faith work. He regretted the absence of representatives of other faith communities at his induction at his new church. For him, inter faith work has a predominantly inter-racial dimension to it. His experience of inter faith activity in London had been that it risked becoming a mere talking shop without an adequate focus on issues of racial and social justice.

Ms Maureen Stirzaker of the Manchester College of Arts and Technology explained that it is one of the largest further education colleges in the country with three different campuses. It has a multi faith chaplaincy and on Wednesday lunchtimes, for example, Buddhists, Christians and Muslims can all be found worshipping in different rooms in the college. Students from different faiths do meet together for discussions on particular issues. There is, however, a gap in inter faith activity in the central Manchester area which it would be good to fill and there is the need for better networking among those involved in inter faith activity in the Greater Manchester area.

Preston

Mrs Joy Sabour said that inter faith activity in Preston was at a slightly low ebb although the Preston Inter Faith Forum has held some good meetings. She hoped that ways would be found to strengthen inter faith work in Preston.

Rochdale

Mr Stanley Hope described the work of Rochdale Inter Faith Action. Rochdale Inter Faith Action was formed in 1986, with encouragement from the local Methodist Superintendent. The group has met regularly on a monthly basis with a primary focus on racial justice. For eleven years they have brought together Christians and Muslims at Christmas time to celebrate the birth of Jesus from the different perspectives of the two traditions.

Within the last year the Methodist building in which the group was based has been closed. They are now based in the offices of the local Racial Equality Council.

Rochdale IFA has paid regular visits to mosques and to a synagogue. In the course of the last year the group organised a visit to the Jewish Museum in Manchester and has also visited the Buddhist centre in Todmorden and were surprised by the large number of people who came to that meeting. Plans are being made for a visit to a Hindu centre.

Round ups from other parts of the country

Edinburgh

A conference titled "Living in Harmony" was organised by Edinburgh Inter-Faith Association in October 1997 to celebrate the Tenth Anniversary of the EIFA. Contributions were made by speakers from Muslim, Christian and Hindu faiths and the Lord Provost of Edinburgh.

On 2 November, Edinburgh Hindu Mandir and Cultural Centre invited people of all faiths and the Edinburgh Inter-Faith Association to share in their Diwali celebrations.

Leicester

From 14-31 October a major exhibition took place in Leicester, opened by the Archbishop of Canterbury. It was designed to show Leicester and Leicestershire as a place where people from many faiths live and learn together.

The exhibition was arranged and sponsored by a group representing a partnership between Leicester Cathedral, Leicester Council of Faiths, The National RE Festival and city schools. It was organised as part of Leicester Cathedral's 70th anniversary year celebrations - to show what the ministry of a Cathedral can mean in welcoming people at the heart of a multi-faith city and also to coincide with the National RE Festival - contributions from schools in RE were a major part of the exhibition. The exhibition was in five sections: meeting in faith; houses of faith; living faith; faith in nature; this is our faith.

Linked to the exhibition was an evening at which people shared their stories of faith from different backgrounds. The Exhibition began with a preview evening at which the A & BC Theatre Company performed sketches from different faiths - educational and humorous at once.

The main participants at the event were people from different faith communities in the city - especially those involved in the Leicester Council of Faiths; children and teachers from city schools, who contributed material and visited the exhibition; about 1,500 visitors who saw the exhibition.

Luton

On 21 September the recently formed Luton Interfaith Forum held a meeting on "Building Plural Communities" to share experiences of living in Luton and to discuss issues of importance from the point of view of its communities. The aims outlined for the meeting may be of interest to readers as an example of how new groups seek to establish a secure ground for their future inter faith work. These aims were outlined by the organisers in the programme for the meeting as follows:

*Each person will gain a deeper understanding of other members of the Forum and of their own attitudes to those of different faith communities.

*Each person will have had the opportunity to share their own experience and be heard by others in the Forum.

*Each person will have gained a greater awareness of the joys and misunderstandings within Luton as a multi-cultural and multi-faith community. A better understanding of history will enable a more appropriate response to the present.

*Each person will have been enriched by sharing in a multi-faith learning experience.

*The Forum will have been able to clarify issues which are of greatest concern to members.

*The Forum will begin to identify ways in which it will address these issues.

Luton Interfaith Forum held an interfaith pilgrimage on 18 October as part of One World Week to witness to Luton's diversity and solidarity. Around 100 pilgrims of 8 faiths visited a gurdwara, a synagogue, a mosque and a church.

Wolverhampton

Wolverhampton Inter Faith Group's "Inter Faith Pilgrimage Tour" in October 1997 visited 3 places of worship in Wolverhampton and Walsall.

WIFG held its annual "Winter Party" on 6 December 1997 in the Shree Krishna Mandir community room. This was a family occasion where all could enjoy listening to music and singing from a variety of Asian traditions and then sharing a special meal with participants bringing dishes. Prior to the entertainment, a visit was made to the Hindu Temple. This event was organised by WIFG and Hindu WIFG members and friends.

Earlier this Autumn, Bishop Michael Bourke delivered a consultation to the WIFG on the theme of "Initial Exploration into Multifaith/Racial Participation with Government (D of E) and Future Work" and how to advise Government departments to involve faith communities.

Highlights of the Network's first ten years continued from p12

1996 The Network's newsletter Inter Faith Update is launched. The National Meeting, "Britain's Faith Communities: Equal Citizens?", takes up the question of how to respond to religious discrimination and to encourage good practice among service providers. The Network brings together key voices in the debate about what values should underpin our increasingly diverse society in a seminar on "The Quest for Common Values" which is opened by Dr Jonathan Sacks, Chief Rabbi of the United Hebrew Congregations of the Commonwealth.

1997 An expanded and revised edition of Religions in the UK: a Multi Faith Directory is published. The National Meeting at Birmingham focuses on how faith communities can develop their inter faith strategies. A tenth anniversary exhibition is held in conjunction with the meeting to highlight the inter faith work of the Network and its member bodies. The Network's code on Building Good Relations is reprinted in 40,000 packs going to schools across the country as part of the National RE Festival. The Network celebrates the first ten years with a special event at Lincoln's Inn. Events to mark the anniversary and raise awareness about the importance of building good inter faith relations are also held by member bodies around the country.

Collective worship in schools - new report published

For some time there has been unease about the current requirements governing collective worship in maintained schools. In 1995 the Religious Education Council for England and Wales, the National Association of SACRE's and The Inter Faith Network, with the support of the All Saints Trust, commissioned a research report which was published in December 1996. It traced developments in the principles and practice of collective worship since 1944; the range of current views on this important aspect of the community life of schools and set out the key issues which have emerged in recent years.

During 1997 three one day consultative conferences were held under the auspices of these three co-sponsoring organisations, funded by the All Saints and St. Gabriel's Trusts. The conferences were chaired by Professor Desmond Rea, Chairman of the Northern Ireland Council for Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment.

The purpose of the conferences was to explore how far broad agreement could be reached on the character of, and provision for, collective worship which would be educationally appropriate and practicable and to consider what changes, if any, to the present statutory framework might be required. They were attended by representatives of different faith communities and a variety of educational interests.

The report on this consultative process, Collective Worship Reviewed, was published on 13 February. It provides a record of the conferences and contains the text of key documents prepared in the course of the consultative process. By the end of the third and final conference no consensus had been reached although there was general agreement that the consultative process as a whole had been a valuable one in exploring the issues involved.

Before the first conference a wide range of organisations was invited to offer any preliminary views about collective worship. Between the second and third conferences there was a further consultation, inviting reactions to three broad options. These were:

Option 1: a "new way forward" based on a statutory requirement for regular assemblies of a spiritual and moral character, with the present requirements for collective worship being withdrawn

Option 2: maintenance of the present requirements either entirely or substantially in their present form

Option 3: withdrawal of the present requirements without replacement

The majority of those who responded to the consultation favoured Option 1. However, many respondents had queries about the details of this option and wanted further discussion on how it would operate in practice.

Diary Dates

This brief diary lists primarily UK inter faith events which are open to the public. Events are listed as far into the future as contributors offer them. In most cases, local groups welcome visitors from further afield and will be glad to try to help facilitate visits from groups and individuals from other parts of the country if they have advance warning. International as well as UK inter faith events are regularly listed in the useful World Congress of Faiths' publication One Family Newsletter (contact Mrs Jean Potter at 1 Ivy Lane, Teignmouth, Devon TQ14 8BT).

The third and final conference in December had before it a paper which addressed in greater detail the issues which had been raised in the consultation about Option 1, exploring the possibilities for new arrangements to take the place of the present requirements. This paper is included in the published report.

It is possible that if more time had been available a greater degree of consensus would have emerged from the consultative process. The published report recommended that the Department for Education and Employment should establish a Governmental review of collective worship, building on the results of the three conferences. But it became clear soon after the publication of the report that the Government did not intend to pursue this suggestion, at least at present.

In the absence of any Government-led review discussions have been taking place about the best way to carry the debate forward. The National Association for Head Teachers held a seminar in February at which a wide range of organisations were represented and the Religious Education Council for England and Wales and the Executive Committee of The Inter Faith Network will also be discussing possible future action soon.

There seems to be an emerging consensus that it would be helpful to carry forward any further discussion of the collective worship issue in two stages. The first would be to seek changes to the present DfEE Circular on this (which would not require amending legislation). The second would be to press the case for legislation to amend the 1988 Act itself. What is certain is that concerns about the present requirements still remain and that the issues involved will continue to be a focus for debate.

Millennium

Every discussion of how to mark the year 2000 is a discussion of many things simultaneously. It is a discussion about whether anniversaries and special dates have any meaning. Some of us always try and avoid them or forget them; others become obsessed by them and most at least have some urge to mark them. It is also a discussion about what the meaning and significance of the date is. What does 2000 mean to Christians and to others? And how should the anniversary or the entry to a new millennium be marked?

An enormous amount of Christian committee time has been spent thinking about how to usher in 2000, which is understood as the 2000th birthday or anniversary of Jesus Christ and seen by the Churches as an opportunity to highlight the central aspects of Christian belief and faith.

But of course it is not just Christians who will be marking the year 2000 in the national calendar. Britain is an increasingly religiously diverse country. In consequence the meaning of the Millennium for other faiths is now being given serious consideration by those organising public events marking the year 2000.

As reported in the last issue, the Department for Culture, Media and Sport, in association with the Network, has published a short set of guidelines, Marking the Millennium in a Multi-Faith Context, which addresses some of these issues and gives suggestions to event planners for ways to take forward inclusive event planning. The text was created by the "Lambeth Group" over a series of meetings during 1997.

Marking the Millennium seeks to balance recognition of the distinctive significance for Christians of the Millennium, as an anniversary of the birth of Jesus, with the need for an inclusive approach to national and local community celebrations. There will need to be a good deal of careful planning to explore how this balance can best be reflected in practice in different local situations.

The Network is among those bodies represented on the "Lambeth Group" or "Churches and Other Faiths Subgroup of the Government's Millennium Co-ordinating Group". This has an advisory role to the Department for Culture Media and Sport (the Government's lead agency on the Millennium) and to the Millennium Commission and the New Millennium Experience Company. The Royal Household is also represented on the Subgroup, which is co-chaired by Revd Canon Colin Fletcher and Mr David Chesterton (DCMS).

On the Lambeth Group are members of the Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh communities. Other communities have been invited to give input through the Network and a number have done so.

Mr Peter Mandelson, Minister without Portfolio, was present at the last meeting of the Lambeth Group on 23 February and responded to questions on the Greenwich Dome (for which he carries responsibility). The group also discussed a range of issues including the Churches' plans for distribution of candles across the country for use at midnight on 31 December 1999 with a special Millennium affirmation; the pattern of national Christian services which would be held to mark the event on Sunday 2 January; a possible multi-faith event on 3 January; the forthcoming launch of the Millennium Festival awards scheme and problems that lottery money might cause for some groups who might wish to apply.

A small group within the Lambeth Group were delegated last Autumn to take forward with NMEC detailed discussion about the contents of the "Spirit Zone" in the Greenwich Dome. This met on 25 March to discuss a paper that had been drafted as a brief for the designers, following earlier discussion. There was extensive discussion and a way forward was found to both highlight the Christian story, given the significance of the date in the Christian calendar and in this country's history, and reflect the importance of other faiths in contemporary Britain. Following the meeting, further consultation took place and this stage of the process is now nearing completion.

During February, March and April, the Millennium Unit of the DCMS and the Local Government Association, Scottish Office, Welsh Office and Northern Ireland Office held eight regional conferences aimed mainly at local government audiences to publicise the DCMS' vision for the Millennium and the National Programme of Millennium celebrations being worked up by the Millennium Commission and the New Millennium Experience Company. The conferences were also a way to disseminate good practice to events organisers and to gauge the extent of Millennium planning by local authorities to date.

The Network worked with faith community bodies to suggest speakers from other faiths for each conference as the afternoon sessions had a short slot for the Churches and one "other faith" speaker who spoke on behalf of all faiths except the Christian community. This gave an opportunity to highlight the document Marking the Millennium in a Multi Faith Context and to draw key points to the attention of the delegates so that they realised the importance of being inclusive in their Millennium event planning. All 2,500 delegates from across the UK received a pack which included this document.

The Millennium Commission has now launched the Millennium Festival awards scheme for events and projects linked to 2000 at local level. Some non-lottery money is involved, but this will not be ring-fenced to be available only to those who have conscientious objections to lottery funding. Also, since this part of the Festival funding will be coming from commercial sponsors, the availability of this money will also be dependent on the sponsors' willingness to sponsor a given project.

Millennium Festival grants are at two different levels (£5,000 or below and above £5,000) and the criteria for application are being published early in May. The telephone number for enquiries is 0870 600 2000.

The Network's National Meeting in July will be taking the Millennium as its theme. Issues being looked at will include: What is the significance of the year 2000 for Christians? What may be the significance of the year, if any, for people of other faith traditions? Are there important anniversary years coming up in the calendars of other faith traditions? The shape of national and regional events being planned to mark the year and the possible role in these of faith communities and inter faith groups and organisations; and the work of the Lambeth Group. For further details of this meeting, please contact the Network office.

Higher education and student religious identity

On 23 March a 4 month research project on "Higher Education and Student Religious Identity" was launched. It is based in the Sociology Department at the University of Exeter and is being carried forward in co-operation with the Inter Faith Network. The Network is the primary funder of the work through grants it has secured specifically for this purpose.

The researcher on the project is Dr Sophie Gilliat, who worked with Professor Jim Beckford on the two year Warwick University project which looked at chaplaincy in hospitals and prisons. The project's steering committee includes Dr Grace Davie (University of Exeter); Indarjit Singh and Harriet Crabtree (on behalf of the Network) Revd Paul Brice (Secretary for Higher Education Chaplaincy of the Church of England) and Rashid Siddiqi (adviser over many years to the Muslim students at Leicester University).

Since the 1960s there has been a steady growth in the religious diversity of the United Kingdom. Institutions of Higher Education reflect this increasing diversity in their student population and are perhaps even more diverse than the UK in general because of the large numbers of students of different faiths from overseas. This increasing diversity has prompted reflection by some institutions on the best ways to ensure good relationships between the faiths on campus. In this context, there is a need for information to be gathered about how institutions are responding so that there can be sharing of good practice and a chance for further reflection on the implications of the multi faith campus. The outcome of the Exeter project will be a report giving an overview of the pattern of provision by institutions of higher education for their religiously diverse student bodies. A summary of this will be circulated to all the institutions of higher education.

The project will gather information on: university/college policies on student religious identity (covering such matters as provision for worship and dietary needs and respectful interaction between religious groups); how institutions are developing structures for relating to the various religious groups on campus; provision of worship facilities; how chaplaincy arrangements are being developed in multi-faith contexts to respond to the pastoral needs of students of the various faiths; the emergence of inter faith organisations on campus; and how faith communities are developing national structures to respond to the religious needs of their students.

A questionnaire has been piloted and circulated to each institution of higher education in the UK. On the basis of the responses, four institutions will be chosen for more detailed study with interviews of chaplains, other faith advisors and religious professionals, administrative personnel, the Student Unions and as many student religious organisations as possible. The researcher is also making direct contact with national student religious bodies and with any "chaplaincy" bodies for faiths other than Christianity. Prospectuses and web pages are being surveyed to find out whether the mission statements of institutions reflect an awareness of the importance of religious identity.

If readers have information which they wish to contribute, Dr Sophie Gilliat can be reached on telephone/fax 01503 263711 from 18 May or E-mailed at Sophie.Gilliat@btinternet.com.

Crime and Disorder Bill

For some time the question of whether there should be new legislative protection relating to the religious, as distinct from racial, identity of individuals, possibly paralleling the provisions in the Race Relations Act 1976, has been on the Network's agenda. The Race Relations Act contains provisions making it illegal to discriminate in employment and in the provision of a variety of services and also made it an offence to stir up racial hatred. It has been argued that there might be difficulties in defining "religion" in the context of parallel provisions. In response it has been pointed out that there are equal difficulties in the definition of "race".

The Crime and Disorder Bill which is now entering its Committee stage in the House of Commons, (having passed through all its stages in the House of Lords), contains provisions for heavier penalties for crimes of violence and damage which are "racially aggravated". A number of organisations are co-operating to lobby for amendment of the key provisions of the bill in order to extend them to cover violence or damage directed against members of a "religious" group as well as of "racial" groups. A leaflet giving details of the campaign is available from the 1990 Trust, Southbank Technopark, 90 London Road, London, SE1 6LN or from the Network office.

At a meeting on 23 April the Office of National Statistics reported on further developments on the possibility of including a question on religious identity in the 2001 census. The programme of testing of possible census questions carried out during 1997 (and subsequent small scale testing of a variant question on religious identity) has shown that respondents are quite willing to answer such a question and found little difficulty in doing so. However, the case for including the question in the 2001 census, given the competition for space on the census form, is still under consideration.

A consultative White Paper is now due to be published this autumn with a view to final proposals being tabled for approval by Parliament towards the end of 1999. If the White Paper does not recommend the inclusion of a question on religious identity it will therefore be possible for all those organisations which wish to do so to press Ministers to reconsider the case for this before the final proposals are put to Parliament.

Human Rights Bill

The Human Rights Bill, which is at present before the House of Commons (having passed through its various stages in the House of Lords), has as its central purpose the incorporation into UK law of the European Convention on Human Rights.

The Churches have been concerned about possible effects of the legislation, including the possibility of it being used as a vehicle for individuals to challenge decisions of the Churches not to solemnise proposed marriages to which they have doctrinal objections. This has a particular relevance to the clergy of the Church of England and the Church in Wales who are required to perform marriages for people from within their parish if asked by them to do so. However there are other areas of concern which may be of relevance to all faith communities, particularly relating to employment practices in schools and religious charities.

Amendments put forward from the back benches were passed in the House of Lords on 5 February to deal with these points and cover not only the Christian Churches but also "other principal religious traditions". The amendments were passed despite the Government's opposition to them on the grounds they were unnecessary in the light of the assurances given about the effect of the bill. It is not clear what position the Government will take on these amendments when the Bill is considered in the Committee stage in the House of Commons in the near future. There have been further meetings between the Government and representatives of the Churches on this issue.

Muslim Council of Britain elects working committee

Delegates from over 250 Muslim organisations from across the UK met at Brent Town Hall in London on 1 March and elected the Muslim Council of Britain's first Central Working Committee. Mr Iqbal Sacranie was elected as its Secretary General. Muslim youth, Muslim women and persons from a variety of religious and professional backgrounds are among those now on the committee. The Network's Muslim Vice-Chair, Dr Manazir Ahsan, is a member.

A keynote address was given by Dr Tariq Modood on "The British Muslim community today and social trends". From an inter-faith point of view, it is interesting to note that one of the aims of the Council, which was founded in November 1997, is to "actively promote social interaction with wider society and work towards establishing a society that is based on morality, pure faith and the common good." Further information about MCB from Zeeshan Khan, Tel 0181 903 9024.

Protest about Channel 4 cartoon life of the Prophet

Channel 4's cartoon life of the Prophet Muhammad shown in December and again in March has caused controversy. UKACIA saw the film before it was screened and pointed out inaccuracies and unacceptable unhistorical embellishments, as well as making the objection that the medium of cartoon was unsuitable for the sensitive subject. Some, but not all, of the changes which UKACIA wanted were made before the March showing. Since there are possible plans to screen it again UKACIA is in discussion with Channel 4 about the matter. Further information from Iqbal Sacranie, Tel 0181 974 2780.

New BBC religious affairs correspondent

Emily Buchanan has been appointed as the BBC's new Religious Affairs Correspondent. She has been with the BBC since 1982 and most recently worked as a correspondent for the Developing World as part of the BBC's Foreign Affairs Unit. She took up her post at the beginning of March.

Launch of MultiFaithNet

On 11 March, the University of Derby launched MultiFaithNet: its new Internet gateway to electronic resources on world religions and inter faith dialogue. It is being developed with the assistance of a panel of consultants drawn from the religious traditions it covers and from academics with expertise in these traditions.

There are vast and growing amounts of Internet material on religion which can be of use for study and for dialogue. MFN will provide regularly updated subscription access to these resources with "signposts" to help users which give an idea of the types of material and their origin. Religions in the UK: A Multi-Faith Directory will be available on-line to subscribers.

Subscribers also get regularly updated relevant news from the print, broadcast and electronic media, as well as news posted to MFN by faith communities and inter-faith groups. MFN will also host home pages from the world religious traditions and of multi-faith and inter-faith organisations and initiatives.

To find out more about these and other services available either free or on subscription, contact Dr Paul Weller at the University of Derby, Mickleover, Derby DE3 5GX, or EMail P.G.Weller@derby.ac.uk.

Faith communities and social work

A symposium, "Faith Communities and Social Work: Shifting Identities and Changing Realities" took place on 24 March in London. It was organised by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work and the Inner Cities Religious Council.

CCETSW have also published a book on themes linked to the Symposium, Visions of Reality: Religion and Ethnicity in Social Work, edited by Naina Patel, Don Naik and Beth Humphries. Available from CCTESW, Derbyshire House, St Chad's Street, London WC1H 8AD, Tel 0171 278 2455.

Commission on the Future of Multi-Ethnic Britain

The Runnymede Trust has established a Commission on the Future of Multi-Ethnic Britain under the Chairmanship of Sir John Burgh. The Commission is looking at Britain now and how it will develop over the next twenty years and in particular at the implications of Britain's increasingly diverse society. They have asked for any initial submissions to be made to them by 30 June and as background to this have issued a short booklet about the ground which they hope to cover in their work.

The Commission intends to complete its report by the end of 1999. The Network Office is in touch with the Commission's staff and have had some discussions on the relevance of religious faith and identity to the issues with which they are dealing.

Booklets about the Commission are available from: The Runnymede Trust, 133 Aldersgate Street, London EC1A 4JA, Tel 0171 600 9666.

Sir Sigmund Sternberg awarded Templeton Prize

Sir Sigmund Sternberg was recently awarded the highly prestigious Templeton Prize for Progress in Religion, with a £750,000 award. It is given each year to a living person who has demonstrated "extraordinary originality in advancing humankind's understanding of God and spirituality". Sir Sigmund is well known to many in the field of inter faith relations, with long standing involvement in such organisations as the International Council of Christians and Jews and, more recently, the Three Faiths Forum. He is also known for his founding of the Sternberg Centre of Judaism in London.

Council of Christians and Jews appointment

The Council has announced the appointment as Director from 1 January 1999 of Sister Margaret Shepherd, who presently serves as its Deputy Director. Sister Margaret is a Catholic Nun who belongs to the Sisters of Sion. She is the first woman and the first Roman Catholic to be appointed to the post. She has worked for many years in the area of Jewish-Christian dialogue and her appointment has been widely welcomed.

Armagh conference on religion, community and conflict

The Northern Ireland Inter-Faith Forum and the International Interfaith Centre (Oxford) were among the organisers of a conference in Armagh in February on "Religion, Community and Conflict" which was arranged to help peace-makers, community-relations workers and members of faith communities in Northern Ireland explore the religious dimensions of conflict and the contributions faith communities can make to resolving conflict. Other co-ordinating organisations included Action for Peoples in Conflict; Armagh City and District Partnership; Armagh City Council; the Irish School of Ecumenics; and World Conference on Religions and Peace.

Speakers from South Africa, Sri Lanka and the Middle East, who are actively working for peace in their own communities, joined representatives of churches, minority faiths and progressive community organisations from Northern Ireland for two days of dialogue. A full report on the conference has been prepared by Revd Maurice Ryan and is available from the IIC (Tel 01865 202745). In his report he writes,

"One of the most helpful features of this conference was the sense of realism and concern, which pervaded the two days of reflection and debate, to face squarely the paradoxes and contradictions endemic within cultural and religious conflict situations. Eminent speakers and widely representative delegates were concerned to 'tell it like it is', refusing to blur distinctions or gloss over differences, while at the same time strenuously seeking positive pathways to reconciliation."

A Millennium Invocation: Universal Love

On 18 April 1999, a special event is due to take place at Friends House London celebrating the theme of universal love. Nine faiths will work together to present an evening of song, drama, dance and poetic invocation in-the-round to launch a national initiative to encourage inter faith groups to take up the theme of "universal love" in their own millennium events.

A booklet of guidelines is to be published containing suggestions, ideas and quotations on the theme of universal love as a resource for these occasions. All faiths are invited to join in this venture. For further information, write to Margot Tennyson, Abbeyfield, 15 Wellfield Avenue, London N10 2EA.

Network Link News

Among Network member bodies are 36 local inter faith groups, associations and councils. The Network is also in touch informally with about another 40 local initiatives. It holds regional link meetings for members and others involved in inter faith work.

Link Meeting in Luton

The Southeast (North) Region link meeting for inter faith organisers took place in Luton on 19 March. It was kindly hosted by Luton Inter Faith Forum at the "Grass Roots" Centre at the Industrial College. The meeting began with a news round up from those present on recent developments in their areas and concluded with a short discussion session focusing on plans for the year 2000.

Luton Inter Faith Forum. Zafar Khan and Shanthy Hettiarachchi welcomed participants on behalf of the Forum and Grassroots and reported on the launch of the Luton Inter Faith Forum in July 1997. They described the faith make up of Luton and said those involved in the Forum have links within their own faith communities as well as with other relevant structures such as the local SACRE.

The Luton Inter Faith Forum has had an encouraging start and has established good working relationships with the Luton Borough Council and the Mayor of Luton attended its launch last year. Members of the Forum have been helped by visits to the Leicester Council of Faiths and the Islamic Foundation and also by their contact with the Birmingham Council of Faiths, Westminster Interfaith and the Wolverhampton Inter Faith Group.

In October an inter faith pilgrimage was organised with visits to four different places of worship. This helped create an awareness of the Forum and served as a public witness to the diversity of faith within Luton. Proposals have been made to the Sacred Land Project to nominate an area of Luton as "A Culturally and Religiously Diverse Village in the Contemporary History of Britain."

Wycombe Sharing of Faiths. Anne Bowker and Akhtar Hussain reported that there has recently been a joint meeting between Wycombe Sharing of Faiths and the Reading Inter Faith Group. Members found it interesting to learn of the different contexts out of which the two groups had grown.

The Reading group had developed out of an educational context and therefore had an interest in sharing knowledge of different faith traditions. The Wycombe Sharing of Faiths group grew out of a response to disturbances in High Wycombe and was formed in the early 1980s as a joint initiative between a local Anglican clergyman and the local mosque. The group has normally met in a Methodist church hall or at an Anglican church or in members' homes. There have also been meetings at the local mosque.

Some 12% of the population in High Wycombe are Muslim and the group would like to increase participation from this community. The WSF group is mainly made up from individuals with an interest in coming together to share their faiths, rather than of formal "representatives" of the faith communities. The agenda of the group is dictated primarily by the interests of its members. However, the local Council now organise an annual meeting for faith community representatives.

Bedford Council of Faiths: Revd Nicholas Elder talked about the different faith groups in Bedford and explained that a previous Bedford local inter faith group had been in existence for a number of years. This had focused primarily on personal sharing, but a growing feeling that a more representative body was needed which could provide a point of reference for the local authority and other public bodies in the area led to the formation last year of the Bedford Council of Faiths. This held its first AGM on 3 February this year and formally adopted a constitution, modelled on that of the Leicester Council of Faiths, and elected council members.

The BCF has a core of community representatives. It also has as associate members individuals who are interested in its work. The Council of Faiths will be holding open meetings. Its membership at present includes Baha'is, Buddhists, Christians, Hindus, Muslims and Sikhs. The shift to a more "public" role has been marked by a change of venue to the local Racial Equality Council offices with which good links have been established. This means that the meetings are taking place on "neutral" territory without a "host"/"guest" situation. It is hoped that the local authority will use the new Council of Faiths in a consultative role and it may be that the Council of Faiths can secure some limited funding.

Aylesbury Revd Peter Atkinson said that roughly 8% of Aylesbury's population come from an ethnic minority background and most of these are Muslim. He is a member of an Anglican team ministry in Aylesbury which as the responsibility for developing relations with the local mosque. This is progressing well, with the help of Imam Dayan from the mosque. Revd Atkinson is also a member of the local Racial Equality Council and chairs the Aylesbury police advisory group and these links are helpful from an inter faith perspective. There is at present no structured inter faith organisation in Aylesbury, but it would be helpful to develop one which could focus on matters of common concern to the various faith communities.

Hitchin: Kay Petrie talked about the arrival of the local Sikh community in Hitchin some years ago. She was drawn into links with the community as a result of her work in the local library which led to personal friendships. Events and exhibitions were mounted at the library and the Sikh community acquired a local church hall which became their gurdwara.

While there is no structured inter faith group in Hitchin, links between the Churches and the Sikh community are good. A crucial aspect of inter faith relations is the development of personal friendships and in Hitchin this has ensured that there are good links between the communities. At the time of One World Week, Churches Together in Hitchin regularly organise a visit to different places of worship which ends up in the gurdwara where splendid hospitality is always provided. A visit was arranged recently to the Swaminarayan Hindu temple in Neasden which made a big impact on participants.

Watford Inter Faith Association. Sally Spear explained that the Watford Inter Faith Association holds occasional meetings during the year. The Association has done good work in building links between the different communities in Watford but would like to find ways to increase commitment to and involvement in its work.

Other Regional Inter Faith News

Basingstoke: Basingstoke Association of Faiths and Cultures held a talk in January on the United Nations and its achievements, in the context of reflection on global interdependence and how we can work better together. It was held at the Civic Offices and the Major, Councillors and Council Officers attended as well as Daniel Wheatley (Education Officer of the One World Trust), composer Michael Desousa and BAFC members. In February the Association held a meeting on religious attitudes to justice and mercy and also a pot luck dinner linked to celebration of the Baha'i festival days of Ayyam-i-Ha which precede the fasting month of Ala.

Edinburgh: The Edinburgh Inter Faith Association arranged a "meet your neighbour" event at Leith Town Hall on 14 March where 140 people from eight faith communities came together in an informal setting with songs, dances, music, children's stories and stalls.

London: Friends Meeting House Muswell Hill held a meeting on 18 March on "Deepening our Worship" as part of a series of meetings to "discover what we can learn through experience about other spiritual practices, meditation techniques and contemplation exercises..." with participants Most Ven. Pandit Vajiragnana, Head of the London Buddhist Vihara, Robert MacPhail of the Vihara and Margot Tennyson and Alec Davidson of the Muswell Hill meeting.

Newcastle: On 14 February Rt Revd Martin Wharton was enthroned as the new Bishop of Newcastle. Members and leaders of the major faith communities were present and welcomed the Bishop at one point in the service. The Bishop then publicly endorsed the "Many faiths, one people" declaration which was first drawn up by the churches and faith leaders in 1992. Further information from Mr Andy Lie, Tel 0191 2732110.

Reading : Hugh Boulter, of the Reading Inter Faith Group, has published a paper in the Occasional Papers Series of the Religious Experience Research Centre on "Religious Experience in the Inter-Faith Context". £2.50 inc post and packing from the Centre at Westminster College, Oxford OX2 9AT.

Suffolk Inter Faith Resource have published an Inter-Faith Handbook for Community Use, giving guidelines on diet, festivals and practices of local faith/cultural groups. £2.50 from SIFRE, Bolton Lane, Ipswich IP4 2BT.

Tower Hamlets Conference

A conference on "Faith Communities and the Regeneration of Tower Hamlets" was held on 21 April at the Town Hall. It was facilitated by One for Life with the cooperation of the London Borough of Tower Hamlets. The following account is based on material supplied by Revd John Webber.

One for Life is an informal, ever changing and developing, network of people in Tower Hamlets that for the last five years has encouraged programmes of multi-faith cooperation. It has worked with the Borough Council before in arranging a joint visit to Bradford, to see the multi-faith work there, especially in resourcing religious education. The Tower Hamlets conference drew on this link, with a Bradford speaker joining speakers from the Borough.

The focus of the conference was the specific contribution of people of faith to the overall regeneration of community in Tower Hamlets. The planning group brought together people from all the major faith communities there, and Buddhists, Christians, Hindus, Jews, Muslims and Sikhs were all well represented on the day itself. A variety of concrete examples of such contributions, both in Tower Hamlets and Bradford, were presented in the morning. Afternoon workshops included ones on youth, the provision of worship and community space, health, and women's issues.

Lunch was provided by the Gurdwara in the best tradition of Sikh hospitality, and it was perhaps over lunch that the most important work of the day was done, as people across the faith divides made new friendships, planned joint alliances and learnt the simple lesson, as one delegate put it, of how much they enjoyed each other's company. Some of the workshop participants decided to form continuing working groups. There is a possibility that a long held dream of establishing a small multi-faith centre will, at last, come to something. There was a strong feeling that the conference should be the beginning, not the end of a process.

The conference was held against the background of increasing communal tension and violence in the run up to local elections in which the National Front and the British National Party have conducted a very aggressive campaign. The conference endorsed an appeal for tolerance and understanding - and the wise use of the ballot - that had received the support of all the major centres of worship in the Borough. The motto for that appeal could serve for the conference as well: Celebrating the Difference.

The next issue of Inter Faith Update is scheduled for September 1998 and contributions can be sent on the enclosed form by 28 August to Dr Harriet Crabtree at The Inter Faith Network for the UK (Reg. Char. 296773) 5/7 Tavistock Place, London WC1H 9SN, tel 0171 388 0008 Fax 0171 387 7968.

Network National Meeting: Millennium

The theme of this year's Network National Meeting was "Millennium". Participants heard about the plans for the involvement of the Christian Churches and other faith communities in its celebration. Held on 13 July at the National Council for Voluntary Organisations in London's Kings Cross, the speakers included those who are playing key roles in the process from the Department for Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS), the New Millennium Experience Company, which is responsible for the building of the Millennium Dome at Greenwich, in addition to faith community representatives.

Network Co-Chair Bishop Roy Williamson welcomed participants to the meeting and invited those present to join in a short period of silence, calling to mind the recent tragic deaths in Northern Ireland of three young children in an arson attack on their home.

The Inter Faith Network for the United Kingdom promotes understanding and respect between the faith communities in the UK.

We are working towards a Britain in which people of different faiths can draw on their own spiritual heritage, with integrity, to help create a society rooted in shared values and characterised by mutual respect and understanding.

The morning session started with a talk on "Calendars and Festivals – their Importance in our Lives" by Ms Shahin Bekhradnia of the Zoroastrian Community and the World Congress of Faiths. She explored the different calendars and festivals of the faith communities and their significance to our lives.

The second speaker was Revd Donald Elliott of the United Reformed Church, Convenor of the Council of Churches for Britain and Ireland's Four Nations Millennium Consultative Group. He spoke on "2000: A Date with Special Significance for Christians" and outlined the substantial plans of the British Churches for marking the Millennium as an important celebration of the birth of Jesus.

Ms Clare Pillman, Head of the Millennium Unit of the DCMS rounded off the morning session with her talk on "2000: A Date in the National Calendar". She spoke of the Government's response to the general interest in the Millennium and its intention that as many people as possible throughout the UK participate in, benefit from and enjoy the Millennium celebrations. The Government wants the celebrations to leave a tangible legacy for the people of Britain and to ensure awareness and appreciation of the value of the Millennium programme both at home and abroad.

of the "Lambeth Group". He spoke about the purpose, function and progress of the Lambeth Group or, to give its full title, "the Churches and Other Faiths sub-group of the Millennium Coordinating Group of the Department for Culture, Media and Sport".

This was followed by perspectives on the work of the Lambeth Group by four of its other members: Mr Deepak Naik, Public Relations Officer of the National Council of Hindu Temples; Mr Indarjit Singh OBE, Director of the Network of Sikh Organisations (UK) and Vice-Chair, Inter Faith Network; Mr Neville Nagler, Director General of the Board of Deputies of British Jews; and Mr Iqbal Sacranie, Secretary General of the Muslim Council of Britain

The meeting was then joined by Miss Jennifer Page CBE, Chief Executive of the New Millennium Experience Company, which carries responsibility for the Millennium Dome at Greenwich. She gave an enthusiastic overview of the technological and creative challenge of this giant project, explaining the role and shape of the "Spirit Zone" within it.

After a brief period of questions to her, there followed an Open Forum with a panel comprising all the afternoon speakers together with Mr Warwick Hawkins of DCMS and Dr Harriet Crabtree, Deputy Director of The Inter Faith Network, who has represented the Network office on the Lambeth Group.

The full report of the proceedings of the meeting is available from the Network office at £2.75 plus 75p for postage and packing.

Network AGM

The Network AGM followed the National Meeting. At it applications for membership of the Network were accepted from: Loughborough Council of Faiths; Christians Aware Interfaith Programme; and the Scottish Joint Committee on Religious and Moral Education.

Network Farewell to Vice-Chair Mrs Ivy Guttridge MBE

A warm appreciation was offered at the AGM of the work of Mrs Ivy Guttridge MBE, who retired as a Network Vice-Chair with a special link to local inter faith work earlier in the year due to health reasons.

She had held this position since 1992. A leading Methodist layperson involved in inter faith work for many years, she had also served on the Network's Executive Committee since its founding in 1987. Her work with Wolverhampton Inter Faith Group was, and continues to be, an inspiration to many. Her contribution to the Inter Faith Network has been enormous. In recognition of this, a presentation book has been given to her on behalf of the Network and all its members with heartfelt good wishes for improved health and for her continued involvement with inter faith work.

Crime and Disorder Act

The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 came into force on 31 July. Part of this Act provides for heavier penalties for crimes of violence and damage which are "racially aggravated". While the Bill was before Parliament a number of organisations co-operated to lobby for amendments to extend these provisions to cover violence or damage directed at members of a "religious" group as well as a "racial" group. The Network's Executive Committee offered their support for this. The Government rejected these amendments when they were debated in the House of Commons. Instead it tabled its own designed to ensure, that where there may be a religious element to a crime, if the hostility can be shown to be even partially racially motivated, then it will be covered by the provisions on racial aggravation.

Human Rights Bill

Following exchanges with the Churches and other faith groups, the Government brought forward fresh proposals in June, to deal with the concerns, in particular relating to the employment practices of schools and religious charities. The amendments made earlier to the Bill in the House of Lords were removed and the Government's amendments were substituted. New provisions were also added to the School Standards and Framework Bill, which is now an Act, to deal with concerns over employment practices in "denominational" schools.

The amendments to the Human Rights Bill require the courts to pay particular regard in relevant cases to "the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion" guaranteed by the European Convention of Human Rights when exercised by a religious organisation. The Bill is expected to receive the Royal Assent later this autumn.

Lambeth Palace Inter Faith Meeting

The Archbishop of Canterbury hosted an inter faith meeting at Lambeth Palace on 9 June, entitled "Looking Backward, Looking Forward". It focused on the experiences of different communities in settling in Britain and their hopes for the future. Leaders of the faith communities attended along with representatives from student religious organisations.

The Archbishop opened the meeting by reflecting on the changes which have taken place since the Second World War in the pattern of faith communities present in Britain. Participants agreed that there have been significant steps forward towards improved co-operation, such as the discussions on a religious identity question in the 2001 census and the creation of a "model" RE syllabus. Several examples were also raised which showed a shift in attitude such as the Government funding of two Muslim schools and the success of the campaign to keep the Bhaktivedanta Manor Hindu temple open.

Events marking the 50th Anniversary of the arrival of migrants from the Caribbean on board the "Windrush" were mentioned and it was pointed out how the British Churches at that time did not welcome the new arrivals and thus contributed to the impetus to establish Black majority Churches. The Archbishop regretted the cold welcome by the existing Churches, but added, "the development of Black led Churches has been a great blessing, adding richness to the life of the British Churches and of our society".

Several other concerns were also raised such as the effect of the prevalent drug culture in British society and how media coverage sometimes seems to misrepresent faith traditions. It was suggested that faith communities should take a more proactive stance, maybe by training faith community representatives appearing on radio and television and also looking into the possibility of faith communities producing their own programmes with the introduction of digital TV.

The progress in inter faith co-operation was recognised, but it was noted that there remains a long way to go in creating the right attitudes, especially among those who still view inter faith work with suspicion. The meeting ended with a reaffirmation of the importance of inter faith work for our society.

Inter Faith in Schools

This autumn the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority is beginning, alongside its review of the National Curriculum, a review of the current guidance to local authorities on religious education syllabuses. This will provide an opportunity to consider how far these pay adequate attention to inter faith issues, which are of growing importance in British society.

The Network has commissioned Mr Lat Blaylock, Executive Officer of the Professional Council for Religious Education, to undertake a short survey of the extent to which current religious syllabuses include a component on inter faith relations, supplementing this by consultation, mostly by telephone, with advisers in a number of local education authorities. It is intended to use this survey as a contribution to the QCA Review.

Anglican Bishops discuss Inter Faith issues

The Lambeth Conference of the world-wide Anglican Communion, which was held recently at Canterbury, adopted a number of resolutions on inter faith relations. The Conference made a call to all faith communities to acknowledge their responsibility to mobilise spiritual, moral and material resources to promote and protect, as absolute rights, each person's freedom of thought, conscience and religion. One of the key Resolutions of the Conference was that Christians, while remaining committed to mission and proclamation of the Christian Gospel should not "proselytise", i.e. target specific groups or individuals and should not offer "material inducements" or put undue pressure on anyone to convert.

The Conference further resolved that the approach of Christians to people of other faiths needs to be marked by: a commitment towards working towards genuinely open and loving human relationships; exploration of common ground and differences between the faiths; action with all those in conflict and a desire to both listen to people of all faiths and to express their own beliefs.

The full text of the Conference resolutions is available from the Anglican Communion Office, Partnership House, 157 Waterloo Road, London SE1 8UT Tel: 0171 620 1110. Further information is also available at the web site: <http://www.lambethconference.org>.

New Jewish-Muslim Student Inter Faith Initiative

The formation of the Calamus-Maimonides Student Forum was announced in July. The forum will provide a channel for students to meet and co-operate on an individual basis over a broad range of issues which affect both communities. The aims of the forum are: to foster and encourage links between Muslim and Jewish students; to unite Muslim and Jewish students through educational, cultural and social activities and to provide a safe environment within which the students can explore and expand both their similarities and their differences. For further information please contact the Maimonides Foundation, 38 Great Smith Street, London SW1P 3BU Tel: 0171 222 1992.

CRE's Personal Responsibility Campaign

The Commission for Racial Equality is launching a major campaign on the theme of personal responsibility. It forms part of the public education programme entitled "Uniting Britain". Other strands of the campaign have included "All Different, All Equal" and "Kick Racism out of Football".

The campaign is designed to encourage individuals to take personal responsibility for challenging racism. Its message is that everyone must help in the fight against racism, not just the ethnic minorities or relevant authorities. Two leaflets will be widely distributed along with other materials offering advice on what you can do if you witness discrimination and also a simple guide for the victims of discrimination about their rights. Copies of the leaflets are available from: The Information Section Commission for Racial Equality, Elliot House, 10/12 Allington Street, London SW1E 5EH Tel: 0171 932-5437

Religious Advisers meet Service Chiefs

The September issue of the Ministry of Defence journal, Focus reports that senior officers from the Armed Forces met with the newly appointed Religious Advisers of Other Faiths at the Armed Forces Chaplaincy Centre at Netheravon recently.

The five religious advisors have been appointed as part of the of the Armed Forces drive towards equal opportunities. Their roles will include advising on matters such as codes of conduct, religious needs and dress. The five advisers are: Mr Ronald Maddox (Buddhist); Mr Deepak Naik (Hindu); Rev Malcolm Weisman (Jewish); Mr Iqbal Sacranie (Muslim) and Mr Indarjit Singh (Sikh).

New Cambridge Centre

The Centre for Jewish-Christian Relations has been established in Cambridge. The Centre will offer the first Masters degree in Jewish Christian Relations in the UK as well as a certificate and diploma. A two week summer course is planned for July 1999 as are other seminars and conferences. Courses in the curriculum will include topics ranging from languages courses in Hebrew and Greek and Jewish Christian relations in history and in the 20th Century to Biblical interpretation. For more information contact: Edward Kessler at The Centre for Jewish Christian Relations, Wesley House, Jesus Lane, Cambridge CB5 8BJ Tel: 01223 462668

Patents Directive adopted

In Inter Faith Update Issue 5 (September 1997), we reported that proposals were being discussed in the European Parliament for the legal protection of "biotechnological inventions". Several religious organisations expressed concern about various aspects of the directive and the Gaia Foundation was very active in lobbying against the proposals. After much consultation the Directive has now been adopted without significant changes and is now part of European Community law.

Advertisers warned not to mock religion

The Advertising Standards Authority (ASA) has been receiving several complaints about advertisements that seem to trivialise or mock religion. Complaints have been upheld against companies such as International Paper UK, Diesel Jeans and Stella Artois. As reported in The Times (12 August), the ASA's August report suggests that advertisers strike a balance between creativity and sensitivity. Advertisers should exercise restraint as using religious references can often cause offence. In a recent survey 78% of those questioned agreed that disrespectful references to any religion should not be allowed.

Jewish-Muslim Business Forum launched

The Alif-Aleph Foundation aimed at bringing together Jewish and Muslim business leaders was launched at the annual dinner of the Mainonides Foundation held at the Victoria and Albert Museum in June. Over three hundred prominent members of the respective communities gathered to celebrate the launch.

Sir Sigmund Sternberg honoured

The Board of Deputies of British Jews has awarded its first Community Service Award to Sir Sigmund Sternberg. At a Gala Dinner of the Board held at the Great Hall, Lincoln's Inn in London, the medal was presented by Home Secretary, Jack Straw MP, who praised Sir Sigmund's wide ranging work in the inter faith field.

The Network's New Information Officer

Brian Pearce writes: The Network has a new member of staff. He is Bhupinder Singh who has been appointed as its Information Officer. The post was advertised through member bodies and in the national press and a large number of high quality applications were received. A selection panel interviewed shortlisted candidates.

Bhupinder, who is aged 28, is actively involved in a number of Sikh organisations and is the leader of a Scout group. He is the editor of a newsletter, Sikh Spirit, and has considerable knowledge of computers. Recently, he was invited to Buckingham Palace to attend a reception given for young achievers. He is strongly committed to building good inter faith relations and we have been delighted to welcome him in the Network office. One of his responsibilities is to work on Inter faith Update, so please keep him supplied with information for it.

Study shows religion is good for you

The CNN web site reports on an American study has linked good health with religion. The study of 4,000 people aged over 65 found those who participated in religious activities were 40 percent less likely to have high blood pressure, which can increase the risk of heart disease. Research has shown that religious people are less depressed and have healthier immune systems than the non-religious. See the full report at the web site, <http://www.cnn.com/HEALTH>

Focus on Scotland

Network Executive Committee member Sister Isabel Smyth is Secretary of the Churches Agency for Inter Faith Relations in Scotland, and Secretary of the Scottish Inter Faith Consultative Group. She is also involved in Glasgow Sharing of Faiths. This piece is drawn from information provided by her.

Scotland is at an interesting point in its history. After 300 years of being controlled by Westminster we are about to have our own Parliament once more. There is a certain amount of optimism in the country that Scotland can evolve a society that is just and equitable and give voice to its ordinary citizens as well as to the poor and the marginalised. This sense of optimism is also felt among people of faith and there is a desire that the multi-faith nature of Scottish society should be taken seriously.

The Scottish Inter Faith Consultative Group

The Scottish Inter Faith Consultative Group came into being in 1996. It is made up of representatives of those Scottish bodies which are already in membership of the UK Network and of those UK-wide Network member bodies with members in Scotland, supplemented by other invitees to ensure a properly balanced representation of the different faith communities and of other organisations with an interest in inter faith relations.

SIFCG has now been in existence for two years. It has already made an impact. It has established good relations with the section of the Scottish Office with responsibility for church-state relations, including all faith communities. Its submission to the Scottish Office on the Scottish Parliament in June of this year received coverage in a national newspaper.

SIFCG sees a clear need for a shift in consciousness within government to acknowledge the fact that Scotland is a multi faith society where Christianity is one part of a spectrum of religious beliefs. The submission suggested that:

- the new Parliament should appoint someone to liaise with religious faiths - perhaps a Minister for Religious Affairs, or a committee within the Parliament that meets with the different religious communities.
- the new Parliament should draw up a mission statement, showing its commitment to religious equality and to ensuring that all faiths have appropriate and equal access to services.
- there should be no religious discrimination in the new Scotland and this should be incorporated into the law

It will be important that these ideas are taken forward by the new Parliament.

One of the challenges facing us here is that unfortunately there is no one in Scotland formally employed to deal with inter faith work. This means that anything that happens is dependent on volunteers. The Scottish Inter Faith Consultative Group believes that the Millennium is an opportune moment to rectify this so it is seeking funding for a worker and is negotiating with Glasgow Museums for office space. This would be a great step forward for inter faith relations in Scotland.

Inter faith organisations and groups in Scotland

There are, of course, a number of other inter faith initiatives in Scotland such as the Glasgow and Edinburgh branches of the Council of Christians and Jews and the Christian/Muslim Forum. The latter is particularly keen to find out about those areas in the world where tension between the two faiths seems to contribute to violence and conflict.

There are local inter faith groups in Aberdeen, Dundee, Edinburgh and Glasgow. The Edinburgh group is currently the most active with a well designed programme of monthly events. Its annual pilgrimage, which takes people to the places of worship of the faith communities in the city, has become well established and now attracts over a hundred people. Each year it has a dinner and reception hosted by the City Council. The focus of discussion at this year's event is to be Islamophobia.

The Glasgow Sharing of Faiths group is the oldest inter faith group in Scotland. This year it is planning a pilgrimage around places of worship in the west end of the city to coincide with One World Week and hopes that this might become a regular feature there. In the course of September the Hindu community in Glasgow are organising a dialogue event for young people and during Lama Ringu Tulku's visit to Glasgow at about the same time the Buddhists are arranging a public Christian/Buddhist dialogue.

The Aberdeen group have regular monthly meetings to which the public are invited. The Dundee group has plans to mount a "Meet Your Neighbour" event this autumn which will encourage members of the public to meet members of the different faith communities there. It is modelled on a very successful earlier event in Glasgow organised by the Churches Agency for Interfaith Relations. It was originally a Christian initiative but was taken up more widely, with the Asian community radio station in Glasgow including discussion programmes on various world religions during June this year.

So often for those of us engaged in inter faith work the road seems long and we don't seem to be getting anywhere fast but reviewing some of the developments in Scotland shows that sometimes seeds do bear fruit and awareness of inter faith issues does grow.

Requests and Enquiries

Inter Faith in Cyberspace

Increasingly, strange looking abbreviations that signal the announcement of Internet sites and Email are appearing on almost every piece of literature that arrives at the Network office. Determined not to be left behind, the Network has now started printing its Email address on all new publications! For those of you who have also joined this revolution you can contact us at: ifnet.uk@btinternet.com with your comments and inquiries.

Faith communities and inter faith organisations are also using the Internet as an opportunity to reach a greater audience and, as the world becomes a smaller place, the need for co-operation between people of different backgrounds increases. If you have come across an interesting Internet web site related to faith or inter faith matters please do let us know.

Millennium Events

With so many religious and inter faith organisations planning events for the Millennium year, the Network office is planning to keep a calendar of events and festivals to help avoid too many clashes. So if you are involved in planning any events or if you hear about events in your area please do let us know.

National Council for Voluntary Youth Service

The National Council for Voluntary Youth Service is interested in developing contact with organisations that work with young people from minority ethnic and religious groups. The NCVYS brief is to provide support to voluntary organisations working with young people. This is done in a variety of ways and includes the provision of networks, information, advice, models of good practice and personal developmental support.

NCVYS is an umbrella organisation representing the work of the voluntary youth services in England to Government and other appropriate bodies. It has existed for over sixty years as the only independent national organisation, which represents and supports the interest of voluntary organisations working with young people and volunteers. It co-ordinates and supports 500,000 paid and voluntary workers who provide direct support to approximately five million people through its members. NCVYS offers a range of support to youth organisations including communicating with the Government at local and national level, parliamentary briefings, reports, organising meetings, conferences, networking opportunities and advice on crucial issues such as child protection, funding and training.

NCVYS works with a range of organisations such as the National Council for Voluntary Organisations and the National Youth Agency. The diversity and strength of the NCVYS's work is reflected in its membership, which includes organisations such as Save The Children, Fairbridge, Youth Clubs UK and Centrepoint. For more information please contact Kam Dhenjan, NCVYS, The Peel Centre, Percy Circus, London. Tel: 0171-833-3003.

Regional Updates

Luton: The Luton Interfaith Forum held an evening of learning on Sikhism at Guru Nanak Gurdwara on 25 April, and an evening of Learning on Judaism at Luton Synagogue on 12 May.

West of England: More than 70 members of five interfaith groups joined together in May to visit the Amitabha Buddhist Centre at West Quantoxhead, near Minehead. They came from Bristol, West Somerset, Bournemouth (Dorset), Taunton and Exeter. Together they learned more about Buddhism and sought to improve links between the groups.

Gloucester: On 19 April people of several different faiths gathered in Gloucester Cathedral in a Multi-Faith Celebration organised by Gloucestershire Inter Faith Action and the Race Equality Council for Gloucestershire. Faith groups gave presentations that expressed their solidarity against racism, with hymns and prayers suitable for a multi-faith event.

Loughborough: The Council of Faiths celebrated three years since its launch by joining the Inter Faith Network. At their AGM on 25 June, members of several different faiths were present to hear the Mayor of Charnwood; David Paterson, chair of the Council of Faiths; and Dr N S Saundh of the Sikh community speak on "The Place of Religions in the Health of the Community", the text of which is available from Daphne Beale, Loughborough Council of Faiths Tel: 01509-261688.

London: A course of five talks and discussions entitled "Widening Our Horizons" were held through June and July by Christians Aware in Southall. Dr N K Shah (Jain), Sr. Andree Meylan & Vivien Wright (Christian Orthodox), Mr Rustom Bhedwar (Zoroastrian), Mrs Jessamine Hopkins (Unitarian) and Zaudi Burton (Rastafarian) gave an introduction to their respective faiths beliefs and practices.

London: The World Congress of Faiths held their AGM at the Royal Scottish Corporation, Covent Garden in July, where Rev Marcus Braybrooke was elected as the Acting Chairman. This was followed by the Sir Francis Younghusband Memorial Lecture given by Bishop Bill Swing of the United Religious Initiative.

Leicester: In August, the Islamic Foundation hosted a seminar entitled "The New Constitutional Changes in Sudan and their implications for Muslims and Christians" presented by Prof. Zakaria Bashir, Vice Chancellor of the University of Juba (Southern Sudan).

Edinburgh: From 17-21 August at St. Giles Cathedral in the heart of the Edinburgh Festival, the Edinburgh Interfaith Association helped to organise a time of rest and silence for people from different faiths. Members of various communities were involved in planning, facilitating and contributing ideas for meditation and reflection.

Leicester: Francis Cardinal Arinze of the Pontifical Council for Inter-Religious Dialogue spent a day in Leicester at the request of the City Council. After a busy day of worship in the morning and a reception hosted by the mayor after lunch, the evening's programme was organised by the Leicester Council of Faiths at which the Cardinal Arinze gave a lecture entitled "Believers Walking Together into the Third Millennium". He emphasised the challenges involved in inter-religious dialogue, the responsibilities that faced members of all faiths in the contemporary world and the fruits that would be borne from mutual co-operation.

The year 2000 in the Christian and UK national calendars was entered in a spirit of remarkable inter faith cooperation. Leaders of all the major faiths were present at various events over the First Weekend, such as the Millennium Awards and the Dome opening ceremony on New Year's Eve; and as honoured guests at the Christian services at St Paul's Cathedral, London, St Giles' Cathedral, Edinburgh, the Tabernacl in Cardiff and the Waterfront Hall in Belfast.

Shared Act of Reflection and Commitment

On Monday 3 January 2000 a remarkable gathering took place at the Royal Gallery of the House of Lords. Representatives of the Baha'i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jain, Jewish, Muslim, Sikh and Zoroastrian communities of the UK joined in a shared act of reflection and commitment in the presence of Their Royal Highnesses The Duke and Duchess of Gloucester.

This unprecedented event was opened by Rt Hon Chris Smith MP, Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, whose Department hosted it as part of the official First Weekend Millennium celebrations. It was drawn to a close with an address by Rt Hon Tony Blair MP, Prime Minister, who attended together with his wife Cherie and son Euan. Highlights of the event were broadcast by the BBC in a special half hour programme immediately after the event.

The Shared Act of Reflection and Commitment was the first such event hosted by any UK Government and Prime Minister Tony Blair was its closing

Research into religious discrimination

An interim report on research into religious discrimination commissioned by the Home Office was published on 31 January. The report, compiled by the project team based at the University of Derby, is based on a literature review and initial consultation with relevant organisations and agencies. The report reviews the relationship between religion, ethnicity and social policy; deals with the history of the religious discrimination issue; considers the way religious identity is dealt with at present within UK law and offers a survey of overseas practice. It also sketches the religious landscape of the UK, discusses whether religious identity should be seen as a 'private' or 'public' matter; and reviews possible policy options.

In its work leading to its final report the project team will be circulating a structured questionnaire to a sample of local, regional and national religious organisations, holding formal consultative meetings and engaging in local fieldwork in Blackburn, Cardiff, Leicester and Newham. The final report is due in September 2000.

NETWORK NEWS

Executive Committee Members

The Anglican Bishop of Southwark, Rt Revd Dr Tom Butler succeeded Rt Revd Roy Williamson as a Co-Chair of the Network on 4 January. He has a keen interest in developing better inter faith relations in this country. He serves on the Inner Cities Religious Council and was involved with the work of the Leicester Council of Faiths while he was Bishop of Leicester. He sits as a member of the House of Lords.

Revd Simon Reynolds, Minister of the Calvary Church of God in Christ in Tottenham, London was co-opted as a member of the Network's Executive Committee in September representing the black majority Christian Churches.

Network Volunteer

The Network was fortunate to have the assistance of William Hopkinson as a volunteer during November and December. He had recently graduated from the University of Nottingham. The Network is grateful to him for his help during a particularly busy period. We wish him well as he begins his career with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

The Inter Faith Network for the UK

The Inter Faith Network was founded in 1987. It works with its member bodies to promote good relations between the major faith communities, to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make the UK a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions where all can practise their faith with integrity.

The Network:

- Provides information on faith communities and on inter faith affairs
- Advises on multi faith projects and inter faith issues
- Publishes materials to aide work in the religious and inter faith sectors
- Fosters inter faith co-operation on social issues
- Holds regular meetings where social and religious questions of concern to the different faith communities can be examined together
- Links 86 member organisations including: representative bodies from the different faith communities; inter faith organisations; local inter faith groups; academic institutions and bodies concerned with multi faith education.

Inter Faith Update is the newsletter of the Inter Faith Network for the UK. It keeps a wide range of organisations and individuals interested in developing good inter faith relations in touch with UK events and projects with a significant inter faith component.

For publications which contain in depth articles on inter faith topics, relevant book reviews or items related to individual faith communities ask the Network office for details.

Please send any contribution of articles and diary dates for consideration for inclusion in the next issue by 19 May to:

speaker. He called for the new millennium to be “an age of faith”. He also spoke about the importance of values central to various faiths, such as justice, mutual respect, compassion and community and stressed the importance of tolerance and education in a multi-cultural society.

The programme for the event was structured around a number of these values, which are of particular significance as we look to our future together. The separate and distinct faiths have different understandings of many aspects of life and, indeed, of the basis of inter faith co-operation. Yet, as members of these faiths affirmed at the event, they also enshrine common values which can form a solid basis for shared life and citizenship.

Values highlighted at the event

“Community” embraces many strands: home, family, relationships and links between the generations. It also includes the faith community itself which helps shape the beliefs and practices of its followers.

“Caring and compassion” are two linked values which encapsulate the ideals and virtues which help make life good. They refer to the kindness that binds us together and the selfless ways in which this kindness is exercised by many.

“Justice” includes many elements - from the importance of just laws, and respect for them, to broader questions of social and economic justice.

“Respect” is present in all relationships based on trust, and implies a due recognition of the dignity of persons and of the importance of other creatures and of our beautiful, fragile planet.

Each value highlighted was introduced by speakers from the faiths who included leaders and lay members of different ages. Over 40 leading men and women from the nine faiths led all present in an “act of commitment” to mark the beginning of the year 2000 in the national calendar. This had been developed over the preceding months with the involvement of all these faiths.

Planning for the event was a major enterprise involving officials of DCMS, the Inter Faith Network, and two planning groups including representatives of all the nine faiths. Advice on a programme and a guest list covering the nine faiths and the four nations of the UK was given by the faith community organisations. Representatives on the group included Hon Barnabas Leith (Baha’i); Mr Paul Seto (Network of Buddhist Organisations); Revd Michael Ipgrave (Churches Together in Britain and Ireland CCIFR); Mr Om Parkash Sharma (National Council of Hindu Temples); Dr Natubhai Shah (Jain Samaj Europe); Dr Manazir Ahsan (Islamic Foundation); Mr Indarjit Singh (Network of Sikh Organisations); and Mr Jehangir Sarosh (Zoroastrian Trust Funds of Europe).

An Act of Commitment

In a world scarred by the evils of war, racism, injustice and poverty, we offer this joint Act of Commitment as we look to our shared future.

*We commit ourselves,
as people of many faiths,
to work together
for the common good,
uniting to build a better society, grounded in values and ideals we share:*

*community,
personal integrity,
a sense of right and wrong,
learning, wisdom and love of truth,*

*care and compassion, justice and peace,
respect for one another,
for the earth and its creatures.*

*We commit ourselves,
in a spirit of friendship and co-operation,
to work together
alongside all who share our values and ideals, to help bring about a better world
now and for generations to come.*

Copies of the full length video of the event provided by the BBC are available from the Network office at £4.50 (including p + p). It is also planned to publish a transcript of the presentations in due course.

Faith Zone at Millennium Dome

The Dome at Greenwich has now opened. Among its “zones” is Faith Zone. The Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr George Carey, described it as “magnificent” following his visit and his praise has been echoed by leaders of other denominations and faiths.

Faith Zone’s simple but beautiful canopied arched structure, designed by Eva Jiricna Architects, stretches above an exciting exhibition reflecting religious faith in the UK today. Text, video and image evoke 2000 years of Christianity and its impact on this country and its people. Tall glass pillars highlight life points common to all faiths, such as the birth of a child, marriage, the farewell at death. Photographs were specially commissioned for these and show the life points as they are experienced in the Baha’i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jain, Jewish, Muslim, Sikh and Zoroastrian traditions. On each pillar all faiths are represented but one is given primacy. Many organisations and individuals from each faith community helped to find the photograph locations and shape the accompanying text for these inspiring columns. Close by is an exhibition of the calendars of the different faiths, highlighting their festivals.

Other contents of Faith Zone also find a balance between honouring and illustrating the significance of the Christian tradition in the history and life of this country while at the same time taking account of the significance of other faith communities in UK life today. These include sections reflecting on conflict and co-operation and an area where visitors can reflect on the fundamental question “How shall I live?” and leave for posterity a note of their own Millennium hopes.

At the heart of the zone is a contemplation space which features a light installation by one of America’s best known light sculptors, James Turrell. It is called Night Rain and its gauze clad interior changes through a spectrum from pink to blue to white, given a sense of looking beyond the enclosure into unlimited space. At the end of the Zone is a celebration of the varied faith landscape as images from the zone are mixed with the reflections of visitors to form a crowd of “companions” with whom the journey continues beyond the zone and into the future.

Foundation, the Laing Family Trusts, the Jerusalem Trust and a group of other Christian charitable trusts, and others. Its contents were developed by Words and Ideas and realised by Jasper Jacobs Associates, in close consultation with the Lambeth Group. The Lambeth Group was also involved in the discussions about the shared prayer space at the Dome and the Muslim prayer space just outside it which has been sponsored by members from within that community. A number of special events related to particular faith communities are planned at the Dome, details will be released as they are confirmed.

Faith in a reformed second chamber

The Royal Commission on the Reform of the House of Lords published its report A House for the Future on 20 January. At present 26 Archbishops and senior Bishops of the Church of England sit as members of the House of Lords. The Commission suggests that religious representation in a reformed second chamber should be broadened to embrace other Christian denominations in all parts of the UK and other faith communities. It proposes that there should be 26 representatives of the Christian Churches, including 21 for those in England of which 16 should be assigned to the C of E and 5 to members of other Christian denominations. The remaining 5 places for members of Christian denominations should be for representatives from Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. It recommends that “at any one time” there should be “at least 5” members selected to represent other faiths but it does not specify from which faiths these representatives should be drawn.

The report recommends that a reformed second chamber should include a majority of members appointed by a new independent Appointments Commission with a minority of “regional” members elected under one of the three “electoral systems” offered in the report. It proposes that the Appointments Commission should have the ultimate responsibility for appointing individuals to fill the places allocated to English Churches, other than the Church of England, and those allocated to Churches in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland and to other faith communities.

The report considers problems which might be encountered in deciding which individuals should represent particular faith communities, including the Christian Churches. The Commission recommends that both elected and appointed members should serve fixed (but renewable) terms of 15 years. While recommending that members should be able to retire before their term of office is completed, the report does not consider the situation in which an appointed representative of a faith community ceases to be an appropriate "representative" of that community.

In view of the mixed reception given so far to the Commission's proposals as a whole, it is not yet clear what action will be taken on them. Some faith communities have already expressed concern that internal difficulties could arise from any process of nominating single individuals to represent them.

Jubilee 2000

The Chancellor of the Exchequer announced on 22 December that Britain would cancel 100% of bilateral debts owed to it by some of the poorest nations of the world, on condition that the resources released will be spent on poverty alleviation. About 25 countries are expected to benefit by the end of 2000. The Jubilee 2000 Coalition, which includes a number of faith community organisations, has been campaigning for the last few years for the year 2000, to be the year for debt cancellation for the world's poorest nations. Many of these currently spend more money on servicing their debts to industrialised nations than they do on health, education or alleviating poverty. Many high profile personalities have joined the campaign, the fruits of which are beginning to be seen. The British Government's move follows a similar pledge made by President Clinton on behalf of the United States Government in September 1999.

The Jubilee 2000 campaign continues to persuade other countries to follow suit and pressing for a review of the situation of other countries which have not been offered debt cancellation. Further information about the campaign can be seen at the web site www.jubilee2000uk.org.

Religious question in 2001 Census

Legislation required to enable a question on religious identity to be included in the 2001 Census in England and Wales has been introduced in the House of Lords by Lord Weatherill as a Government supported Private Member's Bill. This received an unopposed Second Reading on 27 January, although questions were raised about the failure of the proposed census question to list different Christian denominations.

The Scottish Executive has decided against including a question on religious identity in the Census in Scotland, but representations are being made about this decision.

Changing world economics

The 1999 International Interfaith Centre Lecture in association with the World Faiths Development Dialogue was held at Mansfield College, Oxford on 14 October. Andrew Rogerson, the World Bank representative in the UK, spoke about the lessons the World Bank had learned as it tries to fulfil its goal of poverty eradication. He said that they have discovered that technical and financial solutions are not enough and a holistic approach that takes into account cultural values is required. In this context, he argued that dialogue between faith groups and the World Bank has become necessary and welcomed the World Faiths Development Dialogue as a sincere attempt to build such dialogue.

Wendy Tyndale of the World Faiths Development Dialogue raised a challenge to the faith communities in her closing remarks. She asked if they have anything to offer to the people of industrialised countries for whom she thought consumerism has replaced God. She said that it was difficult to take a stand, but that the way ahead was to look for practical "value-based" solutions.

Scottish Inter Faith Council

The new Scottish Inter Faith Council was launched at St Mungo's Museum, Glasgow on 10 October. The launch was attended by Patricia Ferguson MSP, Depute Presiding Officer of the Scottish Parliament, and also by members of the Inter Faith Council and faith communities in Scotland.

On 19 January the Scottish Inter Faith Council's Chairman, Rawdon Goodier, was given the welcome opportunity of saying a few words about the new Council at a well attended reception hosted by the Rt Revd John Cairns, Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, for members of the Scottish Parliament and representatives of faith communities in Scotland. Several members of the Scottish Inter Faith Council attended and were pleased to hear the encouraging addresses given by the Moderator, Sir David Steel (Presiding Officer of the Parliament) and Donald Dewar (First Minister).

The Scottish Executive is to set up an investigation into religious discrimination in Scotland. In particular discrimination against Catholics, Muslims and others will be investigated by an "equalities unit", which will be set up with the help of the Commission for Racial Equality and the Scottish Inter Faith Council.

MBE's were awarded to: Revd Stephen Lynas both for services to the Millennium Celebrations; Paul Mendel, formerly Director of the Council of Christians and Jews, for services to ecumenicalism; and Deepak Naik, for services to the Churches and Other Faiths Millennium Group and to Community Relations.

New WCRP Europe President

The European Governing Board of the World Conference on Religion and Peace, which met in Amman in November, elected Jehangir Sarosh of the Zoroastrian community President of WCRP Europe. He is Chair of WCRP UK and a member of the Inter Faith Network Executive Committee.

New Centre at Selly Oak

A Centre for the Study of Christianity and Asian Religions is to be set up as part of the University of Birmingham at Selly Oak. Its aim is to promote mutual understanding, dialogue and respect between Christianity and Hinduism, Buddhism, Sikhism and Jainism. The Centre will be launched on 5 May 2000 and is seeking to establish courses and projects that are of use and interest to those communities. Working with other centres in Selly Oak, such as the Centre for the Study of Islam and Christian-Muslim Relations, a new MA/M.Phil programme entitled 'Interreligious Relations' is proposed for September, 2000. For more information please contact: Dr David Cheetham,

Chair in Interfaith Studies

In September the Centre for the Study of Islam and Christian-Muslim Relations, based at the University of Birmingham, signed an agreement with UNESCO to establish a UNESCO Chair in Interfaith Studies at the University. The establishment comes after a successful UNESCO programme called “Routes of Faith”, which concluded that a network of academic chairs should be established. The other chairs will be established in Tunis, Troyes (in France) and Bishkek (in Kyrgyzstan).

Professor of Inter-Religious Relations

Dr Paul Weller of the University of Derby Religious Resource and Research Centre was made a Professor of Inter-Religious Relations in the autumn. This is the first such professorship in the UK.

Seminar on Karma

The International Interfaith Centre held a one day seminar, “Karma: Individual and Collective Responsibilities” at Somerville College, Oxford on 21 January. The meaning, purpose and laws of karma were examined from the perspectives of different faiths. The first session, chaired by Rt Revd Richard Harries, Anglican Bishop of Oxford, heard from Vinod Kapashi (Jain), Saraswati Dave (Hindu), Gopinder Kaur (Sikh) and Paul Trafford (Buddhist) who explained the importance of karma in their individual faiths. The second session heard from Ibrahim Mogra (Muslim), Ian Markham (Christian) and Vivienne Cato (Jewish) and considered if there was an equivalent or comparative concept in these faiths.

Inter faith profile

Wolverhampton Inter-Faith Group recently celebrated its 25th anniversary. We thought this would be a good time to ask a few questions of its current Chairman, Sehdev Bismal.

Q How did you first become involved with the work of the Wolverhampton Inter-Faith Group?

In 1987 a series of meetings was set up between the Inter-Faith Group and the Local Education Authority to explore possible collaborative projects. As Co-ordinator of the LEA's Multi-cultural Education Service, I represented the Education Department at those meetings. The dialogue that ensued on multi-cultural, multi-faith matters got me interested in the activities of the Group. I found my conversations with Ivy Gutridge and Tim Fyffe, representatives of the Inter-Faith Group so resonant that I decided to join the Group. Our collaborative planning resulted in the production of several resources on various minority ethnic communities.

Q What do you see as the main achievements of the Group?

Q I think the biggest achievement is our successful contribution to the formation of a truly multi-cultural society in Wolverhampton. It is widely recognised that the Wolverhampton Inter-Faith Group has made a major contribution to ensuring community understanding and positive relationships. People of different beliefs, faiths and cultures live in this town where to be different is something readily accepted and sometimes appreciated. Communities are working together in a constructive dialogue to put into action many of the values shared between different faiths. Diversity is celebrated as a matter of routine and there is a genuine desire for harmony and peace.

The Inter-faith Group has raised its voice against injustice, be it in India, Pakistan, in this country or anywhere else. We have always made our feelings known whenever we have across minority ethnic communities under oppression. Whether it was the turban issue in schools, when pupils were not allowed to wear a turban, or the current climate of suspicion surrounding issues to do with Muslims, or the demolition of the Ayodhya mosque, we have consistently raised our voice and counselled against prejudice and injustice.

I must also mention the substantial resources the Group has produced to promote inter-faith understanding. We have produced a directory of places of worship which is widely used and a photographic exhibition, Ways of Worship which illustrates the rich diversity of faiths in Wolverhampton.

Q Do you feel that public bodies (such as the local authority) value the work of the Group?

Most definitely yes! The collaboration between the local authority and the Inter-Faith Group is still continuing. The directory of Places of Worship was a joint project with the local education authority. Q We contributed to the Agreed Syllabus in R.E which the local education authority produced for use in schools. I think local politicians of all parties have a high regard for the work of the Group and our members are regularly consulted on a number of issues affecting our multi-faith society. We also have on-going links with the police, probation service and the local National Health Service Trust.

Q In which direction does the Group plan to develop in the coming years?

The nature of British society has changed enormously in recent times. We are of the view that the Inter-Faith Group has to change the focus of its activities to reflect a society which is now irrevocably multi-faith, multi-cultural in nature. It is very important for us to involve as many people as possible, not to preach only to the converted but also to encourage more and more people to seek ways in which they can meet and engage in a dialogue with people from different faiths. And our aim is to encourage more participation by young people. I think a lot needs to be done to engage them because without their active involvement walking into a hopeful future together will remain a dream.

Q What do you find the most interesting about inter-faith dialogue?

The most interesting thing about inter-faith dialogue is that it doesn't dilute your own faith. Since I joined the Inter-Faith Group, I feel I have a better grasp of Hinduism, my own faith. I think I have become more receptive to other people when they are talking of their beliefs. Another interesting thing that I have noticed is the vast number of values we share with each other. For example, the value of respect for other people and the environment, the values of family, care and love and the value of justice. There is so much in common between faiths that sometimes we forget to highlight it, at times we dwell too much on differences!

Blackburn with Darwen

The Blackburn with Darwen Interfaith Council was launched on 7 November. Over 60 people representing Christian, Hindu, Muslim and Sikh faiths in the Borough attended the event where Councillor Malcolm Doherty, leader of Blackburn with Darwen Borough Council, launched the new initiative.

The aim of the Interfaith Council is for its members to work together to overcome ignorance and encourage understanding between the different faith groups living in the Borough. It also aims to increase understanding of the positive role religion can play in many people's lives and to help improve the quality of life for local people by working together on projects to develop a strong community spirit.

Other speakers at the launch event were Revd David Rayner of the Inner Cities Religious Council, Ishwar Taylor, President of the Gujarat Hindu Society, Abdul Hamid Qureshi for the Muslim community, Rt Revd Alan Chesters, the Anglican Bishop of Blackburn representing the Christian community and Mrs Charan Bhamra for the local Sikh community.

Regional Roundup

Birmingham. Members of the Birmingham Council of Faiths celebrated its 25th anniversary on 28 November. Members and guests of the different faith communities attended and contributed music, dance, readings and food. The party, held at the Ladywood Community Centre, was addressed by Edward Peters of the Clean Slate campaign.

Bradford. The Faith to Faith Project based at the Touchstone centre in Bradford published, in December, a report of a project that researched the potential for local churches to become involved in multi-faith initiatives. Researchers Gail Patrick and Helen Reid interviewed a number of people from churches in the Great Horton and Lidget Green areas of Bradford. During the interviews, people explored many ideas for multi-faith initiatives, which the report divides into six broad categories: faith, dialogue, education, social, youth affairs and social action activities.

Derby. The University of Derby launched a fundraising campaign to raise funds to build and open the planned Multi-Faith Centre in 2001. Representatives of various local and national faith communities joined members of the University, voluntary sector and the Derby City Council at the launch. The campaign was simultaneously launched on the internet with a special live presentation. Further information can be obtained at the web site: <http://www.multifaithnet.org> or the University Tel: 01332 622222

London. A multi-faith festival was held on 6 November at the Dominion Centre in Southall. It was organised by London Youth Matters in association with a number of local youth organisations. Over 300 people took part in various arts workshops which were followed by performances of music, dance and poetry. During the workshops young people were able to investigate the origins of various arts from different cultures and their meaning and effects on particular faiths and cultures.

London. The South London Inter Faith Group held a Celebration of Lights at St Matthew's Church in Brixton on 27 November. Members of the local Jewish, Hindu and Christian communities lit lights of Hanukkah, Diwali and Advent, with short explanations of each festival.

Manchester. Friendship weeks organised by the Manchester branch of the Council of Christians and Jews took place between 6 and 21 November. They are a regular annual feature, bringing the Jewish and Christian communities together. A series of meetings, lectures, concerts and religious services at locations around the city were held including Dr Alan Unterman speaking on "Belief in God: Problem or Solution" and musical performances by Chetham's School of Music and the King David High School. A civic service was also held at the

Manchester Synagogue. Millennium Celebrations

There have been a number of local inter faith celebrations for the new Millennium. "Marking the Millennium in Brent", an event involving Brent Churches 2000, Brent Council and Brent Inter Faith was held on 23 November. Speakers included the Deputy Mayor of Brent. The event also included a series of short presentations by young people of different faith communities, sharing their views on faith in the future. The London Sevashram Sangha hosted a Millennium celebration on 2 January at the SKLP Community Centre in Northolt. Among the speakers at the event were Most Venerable Vajiragnana (Buddhist), Dr Natubhai Shah (Jain), Jaspal Singh Bambhra (Sikh) and Swami Nirliptananda (Hindu). "Eternal Love: The Spirit of the Millennium", an inter faith celebration was held at the Friends Meeting House in Finchley on 16 January.

INTERNATIONAL UPDATES

Vatican assembly

200 delegates from around the world gathered in Vatican City from 24-29 October for an Interreligious Assembly held under the auspices of the Central Committee for the Great Jubilee and the Pontifical Council for Interreligious Dialogue. At the concluding celebration in St Peter's Square, six participants, including Brian Pearce, Director of the Inter Faith Network, delivered short messages. Pope John Paul II delivered an address in English in which he said, "Religion and Peace go together: to wage war in the name of religion is a blatant contradiction... The task before us is to promote a culture of dialogue." The closing ceremony was also attended by His Holiness the Dalai Lama and was broadcast live on Italian television.

WCRP Assembly in Jordan

The Seventh Assembly of the World Conference on Religion and Peace took place from 25-29 November in Amman, Jordan. The theme of the assembly was Global Action for Common Living. Delegates and participants of fifteen religious traditions from seventy countries gathered to commit themselves to join together for common living and to build a global culture of peace. A number of resolutions were made including commitments to common humanity, security, interdependence, comprehensive education for peace and to a common future.

Third World Parliament of Religions

The third World Parliament of Religions took place in Cape Town, South Africa from 1-8 December. Almost 7,000 participants from around the world including the UK and from many different religions gathered at sites in and around the University of Cape Town. Over 800 lectures, dialogues, presentations and workshops on various topics ranging from the response to conflict to the environment were held over the 8 day convention. "A Call to our Guiding Institutions" was prepared by participants and organisations and individuals were encouraged to make pledges of "Gifts of Service to the World".

HRH the Prince of Wales visited the London Inter Faith Centre in Queen's Park, London on 10 May. He was greeted by around 300 school children and presented with flowers by 9 year old Yasmine Afnan of the Baha'i community. The Prince met people of many faiths together with tutors and students of the Certificate in Inter Faith Relations, which is run at the Centre by its Director, Revd Fergus Capie. The Centre is home to a range of local initiatives: Brent Inter Faith; West London Three Faiths Forum; the Willesden branch of the Council of Christians and Jews; and London Ecumenical Inter Faith.

Members of these and other groups joined the Prince at an informal reception where Seeta Lakhani, 15, from the Hindu community played a musical interlude on the santoor. The Prince also met representatives of various national inter faith initiatives including the Inter Faith Network, Inner Cities Religious Council, World Congress of Faiths and Churches' Commission on Inter Faith Relations. Before leaving, the Prince said that he was encouraged by the work of the Centre and by meeting so many who are working towards better inter faith relations. He said, "We need to remember that what unites us is greater than what divides us." The visit followed the Prince's tour of the nearby Islamia School, the first voluntary aided Muslim school in Britain, where he joined the school for an assembly.

Greater London Assembly to consult faith communities

London elected its new Mayor and Assembly on 4 May. Under the terms of the Greater London Authority Act 1999 the new Authority is obliged to consider consulting with "bodies which represent the interests of different religious groups in Greater London". London's faith communities have been asked to nominate a representative to take a place on the Board of the London Development Agency and faith community leaders are currently in discussions about forming a London-wide faith communities forum or other such structure, which could be available for consultation by the Authority.

The Inter Faith Network for the UK

The Inter Faith Network was founded in 1987. It works with its member bodies to promote good relations between the major faith communities, to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make the UK a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions where all can practise their faith with integrity.

The Network:

- Provides information on faith communities and on inter faith affairs
- Advises on multi faith projects and inter faith issues
- Publishes materials to aid work in the religious and inter faith sectors
- Fosters inter faith co-operation on social issues
- Holds regular meetings where social and religious questions of concern to the different faith communities can be examined together
- Links 86 member organisations including: representative bodies from the different faith communities; inter faith organisations; local inter faith groups; academic institutions and bodies concerned with multi faith education.

Inter Faith Update is the newsletter of the Inter Faith Network for the UK. It keeps a wide range of organisations and individuals interested in developing good inter faith relations in touch with UK events and projects with a significant inter faith component.

For publications which contain in depth articles on inter faith topics, relevant book reviews or items related to individual faith communities ask the Network office for details.

Please send any contribution of articles and diary dates for consideration for inclusion in the Autumn/Winter issue by 16 October to:

NETWORK NEWS

Make your donation go further

A very welcome change to the tax relief system on donations to charities in this years budget has made it easier for individuals and companies to make tax-efficient donations to charities, such as the Network. The new Scheme removes the minimum donation amount for Gift Aid. So that the Network can now claim tax relief on all donations made by individual tax payers.

Further good news for donors to the Network, including Trusts, is that for every pledge up to an agreed "challenge" level to make donation in each of the three years 2000 to 2002 a major trust will add 33% to the value of the pledge.

For more information about making a donation towards the work of the Network please contact the Network Office Tel: 020 7388 0008.

Network's Director awarded the Interfaith Gold Medallion

At a ceremony held on 29 February at the Board of Deputies of British Jews, Brian Pearce, Director of the Inter Faith Network was presented with the Interfaith Gold Medallion. The Medallion, which is awarded by the International Council of Christians and Jews (ICCJ), was presented by HE Archbishop Gregorios of the Greek Orthodox Church in Britain. Speakers at the ceremony, which was attended by representatives of various faith communities, included Eldred Tabachnick QC, President of the Board of Deputies and Sir Sigmund Sternberg, Patron of the ICCJ.

Keeping places of worship secure

The National Churchwatch conference on 15-16 May in Liverpool launched a new Home Office funded initiative to improve the security of places of worship and religious personnel. In 1999 police forces in England and Wales recorded over 18,000 crimes against places of worship. National Churchwatch, which will work with places of worship from all religions, aims to enable police forces, local authorities and religious organisations to work together to bring about a real and lasting reduction in crime against places of worship. Over the next 18 months it plans to offer every area of the UK the chance to begin their own local Churchwatch initiative. A video and booklet, which will be sent to crime prevention officers in each police force and to local religious leaders, have been produced to show the benefits of the scheme. Among those appearing in the video are Revd Harry Ross, an Anglican vicar, Dr Shiv Pande of the Hindu Community and Mr David Coleman of the Jewish Community.

Pilot schemes run by Churchwatch in Coventry and Bath and Wells have already claimed around a 60 per cent reduction in crime relating to places of worship. The schemes have shown that if sensible security procedures are adopted alongside the installation of suitable security equipment then places of worship do not have to be locked shut at all times. In his message of support to National Churchwatch the Home Secretary wrote, "Watch schemes are a good example of communities getting together to prevent crime. I am therefore pleased to see the establishment of National Churchwatch. I am sure that it will make a significant contribution to the drive towards safer communities. After all, places of worship are so often at the heart of communities."

Census question in doubt for England and Wales

Issue 12 of Inter Faith Update reported that the legislation required to enable a question on religious identity to be included in the 2001 Census in England and Wales had progressed through the House of Lords. However, the Private Member's Bill piloted there by Lord Weatherill and presented to the Commons by Mr Jonathan Sayeed, a Conservative back bench MP, has failed to receive a Second Reading. Representations have been made to Ministers by the 2001 Census Religious Affiliation Group about the need to provide Government time for the Bill.

Meanwhile, the Scottish Executive announced its decision to include a question on religious identity in the 2001 Census in Scotland. This follows representations by faith communities against the Executive's earlier decision not to include one. The proposed question will ask, "What religion, religious denomination or body do you belong to?" The proposed categories of response are: none; Church of Scotland; Roman Catholic; other Christian; Buddhist; Hindu; Muslim; Jewish; Sikh; other. The question will also ask in which religion people were brought up.

The necessary enabling legislation has already been debated and enacted by the Scottish Parliament.

Multi faith perspectives on human organ donation

On 20 March, 275 delegates and participants met at the National Museum of Photography, Film and Television in Bradford to discuss religious and ethical issues relating to organ transplantation. The conference was organised by the Bradford Hospitals and Leeds Teaching Hospitals NHS Trusts with support from the Department of Health (DoH) and drew a wide attendance including religious delegates, patient groups, community health councils, health professionals and managers and representatives from the DoH.

A welcome was given by the Rt Revd David Smith, Anglican Bishop of Bradford. The opening address was delivered by Lord Hunt, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Health (Lords), who drew attention to the developing national crisis in transplantation in which more than 5000 patients in the UK are awaiting life saving organs. Unfortunately there is a growing gap between supply and demand of organs. During the main part of the day the conference heard from; Sheikh Dr Zaki Badawi (Muslim); Professor David Katz (Jewish); Rt Revd Michael Nazir-Ali and Father John Wilson (Christian); Dr B Bhala (Hindu); Dr Jasdev Singh Rai (Sikh); and the Most Ven P Piyatissa (Buddhist) who gave individual commentaries from their faith perspectives.

Though each speaker gave a differing emphasis, the overwhelming impression was of general agreement between the faiths. For all, the donation of an organ was to be welcomed but was only acceptable within an ethical framework of respectful human dignity. Speakers explained that resistance to organ donation reflects cultural sensitivity rather than any religious code. This resistance can only be overcome by continuing education. One example of this is the fatwa issued in 1995 by the Muslim Law (Shariah) Council which formally removed any religious objection to donation. Living donation of a kidney was seen as a positive act of altruism when freely given without payment or coercion.

There was a firmly expressed belief that religious organisations should be more pro-active in encouraging organ donation, and in helping to dispel myths and misconceptions. The challenge for all is to cascade this consensus into the wider community.

(Report by Dr R F Jeffrey, Consultant Nephrologist, Bradford Hospitals NHS Trust)

Hugo Gryn Fellowship in Religious Tolerance

The Hugo Gryn Fellowship in Religious Tolerance is being set up at the Centre for Jewish-Christian Relations in Cambridge to examine the concept of religious tolerance through lectures, research and dialogue. The Fellowship will serve as a living monument to the late Rabbi Hugo Gryn (a previous Co-Chair of the Inter Faith Network) who did so much to champion this cause. A new Fellow will be appointed each year so that this field can be explored in a variety of ways. The Fellowship was launched at a fundraising dinner at Middle Temple Hall on 28 March. Among the special guests at the evening were Jackie Gryn, Lord Woolf, Master of the Rolls, and HRH Prince Hassan of Jordan.

Faith in the Dome

Faith is being celebrated at the Dome with performances and events by different faith communities. The Jain community held a celebration of Mahavir Jayanti (the birth celebration of Lord Mahavir) on 16 April. 150 school children performed a 30 minute dance drama depicting the life of Lord Mahavir four times during the day.

This was the first religious event of this scale within the Dome. Celebrations from other communities are planned later this summer and autumn, including a celebration of the Christian festival of Pentecost on 11 June; a Jewish community day on 9 July as part of the Jewish Music Festival; Hindu celebrations of Diwali; and a Sikh Celebration of Vaisakhi.

An inter faith pilgrimage from Greenwich Park to the Millennium Dome is being organised by the Greenwich Multi-Faith Forum on 18 September (see diary dates).

New Archbishop of Westminster installed

The new Roman Catholic Archbishop of Westminster, Rt Revd Cormac Murphy O'Connor, was installed on 22 March as successor in this post to the late Cardinal Basil Hume. At a ceremony at Westminster Cathedral, the Archbishop told the congregation he was optimistic about the future of the Catholic Church. He also called on Catholics to work towards ecumenical goals, although he was aware of the obstacles and difficulties on the road to Christian unity. The Archbishop's appointment has been welcomed by the Anglican Church and by other faiths and denominations.

The new Archbishop has also accepted an invitation to be a patron of Westminster Interfaith.

MCB elects new Secretary General

Yousuf Bhailok was elected as the new Secretary General of the Muslim Council of Britain at its Annual General Meeting on 13 May. He is from Preston and has many years experience in community work with a special interest in education. Speaking after his election at the meeting in Brent Town Hall, London, he said that Muslims have an important role in building a better Britain for all its citizens. The outgoing Secretary General, Iqbal Sacranie, who has served the maximum two years in that position said, "We are still at a stage where we feel like clamouring for due rights when our heritage tells us that we should rather be engaged in helping to contribute to the fund of what is right in society". The MCB now has over 300 affiliated organisations.

Centenary for Religious Freedom

The International Association for Religious Freedom celebrates its centenary on 25 May. Originally founded as the “International Council of Unitarian and Other Liberal Religious Thinkers and Workers” in 1900 in Boston, USA, it held its first congress in London in 1901. Its aim of resisting intolerance remains as relevant today as when it first began. Its members, from more than thirty countries on four continents, now include Buddhists, Christians, Hindus, Humanists, Jews, Shintoists, Sikhs, Unitarians, Universalists, and members of indigenous communities.

New Centre launched at Selly Oak

The Centre for the Study of Asian Religions and Christianity was launched on 5 May. The Centre is part of the Department of Theology and Religion on the Selly Oak campus of the University of Birmingham. Its purpose is to study and research the relations and encounter between Christianity, Buddhism, Hinduism, Jainism and Sikhism. It will contribute to MA and MPhil courses in Interreligious Relations in co-operation with the other Centres in the Department of Theology. As well as organising international and local conferences, the Centre aims to work with the faith communities concerned and will offer courses and projects that are supported by them.

National Millennium Faith Experience

“Life Force”: the National Millennium Faith Experience is due to open in Bradford this June. The £5 million visitor attraction is located in Forster Square close to Bradford Cathedral. It will use state of the art audio-visual techniques to enable visitors to experience life-cycle events of members of six different faiths - Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh. The centre will feature three attractions; Labyrinth in which visitors will travel through the lives of “virtual” characters; the Observatory which will examine how faith has inspired various personalities; and Digital City which will allow visitors to leave a taped record of their thoughts and beliefs. The Centre also features a Millennium Restaurant, which will serve a variety of foods associated with religious festivals of different faiths. Further information is available at the web site: www.lifeforce.org.uk.

Faith in Guiding

A seminar took place on 23 May at the Headquarters of the Guide Association. Its focus was on faith and Guiding and it looked at possible ways to develop work in this area. ## News from inter faith organisations

The Council of Christians and Jews

The young leadership section of the CCJ held a weekend study event on social justice from 10-14 February. It was held in London at the convent of Our Lady of Sion with sessions at West London Synagogue and St Martin-in-the Field. The weekend explored the theme using the biblical prophet Amos. The students and young people that took part looked at concepts that unite the two faiths as well as those features that distinguish them.

The International Interfaith Centre

The IIC held its Annual Conference entitled “Interfaith Contributions to Education for Peaceful Living” at Harris Manchester College, Oxford on 8 and 9 April. Participants came from Israel/Palestine, Northern Ireland, India, Germany, South Africa, Canada, Netherlands, Philippines, Chile, Kosovo, Switzerland, USA and the UK. The Centre also held its Annual Interview, “Creating a Culture of Peace in the Middle East” on 22 May at

The Maimonides Foundation

The Maimonides Foundation, in association with Palestinian and Israeli students at the London School of Economics held an open meeting on 15 May, "Exile and Hope: Jerusalem, Culture and Identity in Israeli and Palestinian Discourse". Dr Ahmad Samih Khalidi, former advisor to the Palestinian delegation at Washington and Taba 1991-1993 and Dr Emanuele Ottolenghi, both of St Anthony's College, Oxford led the productive discussion which, although emotional at times, was conducted with an atmosphere of respect.

The Three Faiths Forum

The Three Faiths Forum Parliamentary Group was launched on 21 February at the House of Commons. Lord Weatherill and Ivor Caplin MP are joint Chairmen with Lord Archer of Sandwell as Secretary. Mohammed Sarwar MP and Rudi Vis MP are also on the steering committee, which in due course hopes to secure recognition as an All Party Parliamentary Group. Speaking at the launch, Lord Weatherill said it was important that members of both Houses of Parliament had a meeting place where they could explore their differences of faith as well as what they held in common.

The World Congress of Faiths'

The WCF annual Sir Francis Younghusband Memorial Lecture was given on 2 May in London, by Dr Mato Zovkic, Vicar General of Sarajevo on the topic "Christians and Muslims in Multi-religious Europe in the New Millennium". This was followed by responses from Professor Abdul Ali Hamid of the Muslim College, London and from Professor Jorgen Nielsen of the Centre for the Study of Islam and Christian-Muslim Relations, Birmingham. The event was co-sponsored by the World Conference on Religions and Peace.

Scottish Update

Glasgow. An inter faith festival is being held at the St Mungo's Museum of Religious Life and Art from 1-4 June. Activities over the weekend include story telling from different faith traditions and art, craft and drama workshops. A tranquillity zone has been set up by the Baha'i community for use as a contemplation/quiet space. The weekend, which incorporates the annual "Meet Your Neighbour" event, ends with a children's multi cultural event.

The festival is being supported by Glasgow City Council, the Churches' Agency for Inter Faith Relations in Scotland, the Glasgow Sharing of Faiths Group and the Glasgow Council of Christians and Jews.

Edinburgh. "Creative living together in a multi-faith world" was an event and exhibition organised by the University of Edinburgh in association with the Edinburgh Interfaith Association to celebrate the year 2000. It was held on 31 January at the Playfair Library of the University of Edinburgh and speakers from several different faiths included: Rt.Rev. Munawar Rumalshah, the Anglican Bishop of Peshawar in Pakistan, Dr Mona Siddiqui (Muslim) and Mr Rawdon Goodier (Buddhist). Presentations of music, drama and readings were made by members of the local faith communities.

Inter faith profile

Rosalind Preston OBE is a prominent member of the Jewish community and is a long standing member of the Network's Executive Committee. She is currently one of its Vice-Chairs.

Q How did you first get involved with inter faith dialogue?

I have been involved in some form of dialogue as long as I can remember. From the age of nine I attended a Church of England boarding school and, having had a strong traditional Jewish upbringing, I often found myself explaining my religion and way of life. I also learnt a great deal about Christianity. Later in life, especially when I started working on international projects, I came into contact with many people of different faiths and my interest in dialogue developed through these contacts.

Q You told organisers of the Self-Portrait Zone in the Millennium Dome that the Inter Faith Network, in your view, represents what is best about British Society. What do you feel have been the main achievements of the Network?

The Inter Faith Network has given minority faiths a dignified and effective voice on the national scene. It has also provided small community groups with a comfortable framework in which to meet, discuss issues of mutual concern and form links of friendship and understanding.

The Network has provided a platform on which to discuss and debate civic rather than theological issues, and, in this regard, has provided an opportunity for peoples of different faiths, including Christians, to learn from each other in the best British traditions of tolerance, respect, and civility.

The various major events that the Network has organised have shown, on a very practical level, how faith communities can now work together.

Q Can you tell us a little about your work in promoting the role of women within religious communities?

I realised many years ago when I first began attending United Nations conferences, that women from a vast range of different cultures, traditions and faiths share many common experiences. Women from both developed and developing countries face similar challenges and struggles in their daily lives as they attempt to build families, create harmonious communities and fulfil their own potential within a religious framework.

When I was President of the National Council of Women GB from 1988 to 1990 my work involved furthering equal rights in education, employment and health, all of which highlighted the additional problems faced by women and girls in certain faith traditions.

Many women world-wide continue to experience degrees of inequality in their religious traditions, including my own, where I am hoping to see Orthodox Jewish law re-interpreted on the vital matter of divorce. Similar challenges have faced women of other faiths, such as the struggle for ordination in the Church of England.

As well as being Vice Chair of the Network, you are also joint Honorary Secretary of the Council of Christians and Jews. In what ways do bilateral and multi-lateral inter faith initiatives complement each other?

Q One is a natural extension of the other. Jews and Christians share a long and at times painful history and dialogue through the CCJ has helped to overcome the memories and experiences of past tragic episodes. The relationship which now exists between our two faiths has changed so much that it is almost miraculous.

The CCJ has shown that certain specific issues are best discussed bilaterally, as other faith communities are now recognising, and this then enables many communities to enter into multi-lateral encounters and programmes with a clearer understanding of each other's perspectives.

Q In what ways do you see the work of inter faith organisations developing in the coming years?

By nature I am an optimist, but here I sound a note of deep concern. If the work of the inter faith movement does not strengthen and flourish at grass-roots level we may not see further progress made. The concept of inter faith dialogue between families, neighbours and communities becoming an every day reality will depend on a vast increase in both human and financial resources and national will.

Q The question remains; how can we encourage more people to come and work with us? We must find the answer as the benefits to each faith community, and to the wider society, will continue to be enormous.

REGIONAL UPDATES

East Midlands Regional Link Meeting

A regional link meeting for the East Midlands was held on 2 March hosted by the Leicester Council of Faiths at their Welcome Centre. Each of the groups represented offered a summary of news from their area.

Derby Open Centre Multi-Faith Group. The Open Centre is now a limited company. It is a very busy place which is widely used for meetings (including those of the Multi-Faith Group and of the local SACRE). It provides a lunch on the first Monday of every month and this leads to many new people becoming aware of the Centre and of activities that happen there. The Multi-Faith Group suspended its work for a while due to budget problems but now new volunteers want to try to get it going again.

Leicester Council of Faiths began in 1984. It is one of the more firmly established councils of faith in the UK and is regularly contacted by people from other towns and cities for advice on inter faith issues. It has representation from all the major faiths and produces a newsletter three times a year. The LCF has organised seminars, lectures, essay competitions and other events and projects. LCF volunteers are also involved with the new Health and Faith Forum and the local SACRE. The new Welcome Centre has been the focus of much of its recent work. It is currently looking for a new part-time administrator to develop the Centre's work which includes arranging visits to different places of worship. Members also hope to build up a library which can be used as a resource for local people interested in inter faith and faith specific issues. A major current issue for the LCF is whether significant monies will be forthcoming from Leicester City Council. This is at present uncertain and general budget cuts may affect the situation.

Loughborough Council of Faiths has a good working relationship with Charnwood Borough Council and is pleased that the Council is now doing a good job of marking in a public way the festivals of the different faiths. The LoCF is developing a pattern of open meetings to draw in more participants. The Mayor attended their last committee meeting. Some meetings focus on special topics, for example a recent one on genetic engineering. A multi-faith fair is planned with involvement from local schools. In Loughborough there is a plan to put up a stone circle in Stableford Park which will reflect the unity of the different faiths.

The Nottingham Inter-Faith Council has been running for 20 years, having begun originally in the context of a Christian ecumenical initiative. The present Secretary of the Inter-Faith Council worked in education for many years and has organised a number of events for teachers linked to the different faiths in the area. Nottingham City Council received a Millennium Festival awards grant on the basis that their programme would include an inter faith dimension and are keen to take this forward in partnership with the Churches and with the Nottingham Inter-Faith Council. This link is particularly important to the City Council since it does not have formal links with the faith communities' places of worship and would like to see these developed. A number of activities are planned including an inter faith pilgrimage in which the Mayor will take part.

University of Derby. Three projects are presently in progress there. MultiFaithNet is an on-line resource for those who want information on a range of aspects of religion. The electronic version of the multi faith directory Religions in the UK is available as part of the package to which users can subscribe. Secondly, the University is also carrying out a research project on religious discrimination for the Home Office. Four site visits are part of the research and the locations selected for these are Blackburn, Cardiff, Leicester and the London Borough of Newham. The third project is the planned Multi Faith Centre which will be a resource for the University, for the region and beyond. Fundraising for this is well under way with half a million pounds already raised. The Centre will be run by a steering committee which will include members of the different faiths and will be chaired by the Anglican Bishop of Derby.

Wellingborough Multi-Faith Group meets once a month at the Victoria Centre. The last few years have been relatively quiet but starting last Autumn the Group has been running a series of talks on different faiths and hopes this will increase interest in their work. The Group has a distinctly "personal" feel; there is no steering committee as such and most of the work is carried forward by the organiser.

The East Midlands Regional Assembly

The meeting went on to discuss the new East Midlands Regional Assembly and the nature of faith community input to this. Raj Kumar Bali and Revd Keith Orford, the two faith representatives on the East Midlands Assembly, presented a general overview of the work of the Assembly and their role within it.

The Government's policy is to devolve government activity to the regions in England. These "regions" have been in existence for some time and are highly significant in terms of European funding. Regional offices were set up 8 years ago and have now been strengthened with the transfer of a number of functions to them. As part of this process a Regional Development Agencies and Regional Assemblies have been created.

The Regional Assembly is a voluntary body and its members are put forward from a variety of sectors including business, health, environment and the voluntary sector. They are not elected but nominated. In the East Midlands Assembly the faith communities have been able to secure two of the places in their own right. Both of these members see themselves as representing the faith communities of the East Midlands as a whole rather than just their own communities.

Regional Roundup

Coventry. The Coventry Multi-Faith Forum, which has now become a charitable company, has been offered a room for use as a multi-faith centre, in Coventry City Council's proposed Millennium Building. Currently members of the group are raising funds for the purchase of equipment and furniture for the centre.

Leeds Concord Inter-Faith Fellowship held a memorial lecture and dinner on 7 March in honour of Dr Peter Bell, the founder and long time chair of the group. The guest speaker was Revd Inderjit Bhogal, President-Elect of the Methodist Conference. Over 100 guests gathered in the Farthings restaurant at Thomas Danby College where its catering students prepared the meal.

Leicester. On 23 February the Lord Mayor of Leicester inaugurated a new multi-faith prayer room at Leicester Royal Infirmary. The Chairman of the NHS Trust acknowledged the contribution of Leicester Council of Faiths to the setting up of the room. Among other speakers at the inauguration were S. Faiyazuddin Ahmad and TV Morjaria, President and Chairman respectively of Leicester Council of Faiths and the Anglican Bishop of Leicester, Rt Revd Timothy Stevens.

London. The Anglican Southwark Diocesan Board for Church in Society Inter Faith Group hosted a "A World of Faith" forum on 11 March at Southwark Cathedral. The occasion was introduced by Canon Michael Ipgrave and provided an opportunity to listen to readings from the scriptures from the Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Muslim and Sikh faiths, which were read simultaneously in different locations in the Cathedral.

London. As we go to press preparations are in full swing for the 15th London Multifaith Pilgrimage for Peace on 3 June. Organised by Westminster Interfaith, this year's pilgrimage is the most ambitious yet. Walkers will gather at seven different starting points all over London visiting several different places of worship before coming together at the Battersea Peace Pagoda for the final leg of the pilgrimage to Westminster Cathedral. Details from: Alfred Agius Tel: 020 8570 8639

Manchester. On 3 May the first formal meeting of the Manchester Interfaith Forum took place and an Executive Committee was appointed from among the various faith communities across Manchester to plan and develop the work of this new city-wide body. The new forum wants to encourage and nurture links between faith communities and bodies in the Manchester area. Links have already been established with departments within Manchester City Council.

Tyne & Wear. A series of Millennium lectures were organised by the North East Churches in association with the Universities of Northumbria and Sunderland. The first set of four lectures were held in February in Newcastle and explored the history of Christianity in different parts of the world especially the Commonwealth. Lectures included Dr Eamon Duffy and Revd David Thompson. The second set of lectures held in May in Sunderland looked at the Church and Other Faiths. Lecturers from other faiths included Rabbi Dr Norman Solomon and Dr Jabal Buaben. The final set of lectures will be held in October in Durham and will look at the Church and Society.

Inter faith co-operation, local government and the regions: councils of faith as a resource for the 21st Century. This conference was held in Birmingham on 12 June by the Inter Faith Network in association with the Inner Cities Religious Council of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and with support from the Active Community Unit of the Home Office. The conference built upon last year's publication of The Local Inter Faith Guide, about the setting up and running of local inter faith initiatives.

The 120 participants included representatives from faith communities, including national leaders and members of local faith communities actively involved in creating local inter faith structures in multi-faith towns and cities; local authority officers involved in regeneration programmes; and civil servants from Government Departments with a special interest in the issues (DETR; Home Office; Active Community Unit; and the Social Exclusion Unit).

The conference looked at:

- how local government and faith communities can work together to ensure the development of inter faith structures which can promote harmonious and co-operative relationships and provide a reliable pattern of contacts for consultation and partnership
- how faith communities can play an appropriate role in relation to the work of local authorities, regional structures, other public bodies and services, as well as regeneration initiatives such as the New Deal for Communities (NDC)
- some of the challenges which face faith communities and inter faith

Faith question for census

Issue 13 of Inter Faith Update reported that the necessary legislation to enable a question on religious identity to be included in the 2001 Census in Scotland had been enacted by the Scottish Parliament, but that a Private Member's Bill to enable a question to be included in the Census in England and Wales was failing to make progress in the House of Commons, having passed through the House of Lords. Following intense lobbying by faith communities, the Government provided time of its own for the Bill to be debated and the legislation received the Royal Assent on 28 July. No amending legislation was needed in Northern Ireland where a question on religious identity has been asked in previous Censuses.

So in the 2001 Census a question on religious identity will be asked throughout the UK, although its wording will differ from country to country.

Some key points of the Local Inter Faith Conference

- Faith communities and inter faith organisations have great potential to contribute to the “social inclusion” agenda.
- The prevailing culture can be resistant to faith community involvement in local and national life. Work to tackle ignorance and prejudice about religion is crucial, as is tackling racism.
- There is an increasing desire on the part of central and local Government to bring faith communities into a structured process of consultation.
- There are many different areas of local government policy where the input of faith community and inter faith organisations can be given.
- Local faith community and inter faith organisations rely heavily on the work of volunteers. This is a tremendous strength. It is also a reason why it can be difficult for them to put forward, at short notice, appropriate individuals to give input on their behalf to projects and policies.
- Faith communities and inter faith organisations need to be well informed and prepared if they are to play a significant role in public life. Lack of funding and appropriate infra structures can be a problem.

organisations in multi faith towns and cities as they seek to develop representative and adequately serviced responses to invitations to contribute to the formation and implementation of public policy

The Conference was Co-chaired by Brian Pearce and Revd Alan Greenbat. The morning session included presentations from Angela Sarkis, Chief Executive of the Church Urban Fund and adviser to the Government’s Social Exclusion Unit and Howard Simmons, Director for Cultural and Community Investment, London Borough of Hounslow and adviser to the Local Government Association on community issues.

Angela Sarkis spoke of her belief that faith communities have a significant role to play in all aspects of British life and about how public bodies are now beginning to seek to work with faith communities, especially at the local level. Howard Simmons set out the ways in which faith groups can get involved with local government and of the current requirements for local government to consult their local communities.

Harriet Crabtree and Bhupinder Singh, of the Network office, gave an overview of different types of local inter faith organisations. This was followed by presentations from three local initiatives all at different stages of development: Wolverhampton Inter-Faith Group, one of the oldest inter faith initiatives in the UK; Coventry Multi-Faith Forum, which has evolved alongside the Coventry Inter Faith

The Inter Faith Network was founded in 1987. It works with its member bodies to promote good relations between the faith communities in the UK, to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make the UK a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions where all can practise their faith with integrity.

The Network:

- Provides information on faith communities and on inter faith affairs
- Advises on multi faith projects and inter faith issues
- Publishes materials to aid work in the religious and inter faith sectors
- Fosters inter faith co-operation on social issues
- Holds regular meetings where social and religious questions of concern to the different faith communities can be examined together
- Links 89 member organisations including: representative bodies from the different faith communities; inter faith organisations; local inter faith groups; academic institutions and bodies concerned with multi faith education.

Inter Faith Update is the newsletter of the Inter Faith Network for the UK. It keeps a wide range of organisations and individuals interested in developing good inter faith relations in the UK in touch with UK events and projects with a significant inter faith component.

For publications which contain in depth articles on inter faith topics, relevant book reviews or items related to individual faith communities ask the Network office for details.

Please send any contribution of articles and diary dates for consideration for inclusion in the next issue by 26 January 2001 to:

Group, and is working in partnership with Coventry City Council; and Blackburn with Darwen Interfaith Council, which is a new group and which has had strong backing from the local authority right from the outset.

The afternoon session heard from Jane Slowey of Birmingham Voluntary Services Council on good management of voluntary organisations; Maheeb Ladha, Chief Executive's Office, Leicester City Council, who gave a local government perspective on supporting local inter faith structures; and Heather Swailes of the Allen Lane Foundation who spoke about funding from Trusts.

Participants then contributed to five workshop sessions which looked at topics ranging from, working towards and maintaining a "representative" council to partnership between local government and councils of faiths".

The final plenary included a presentation from David Rayner, Secretary of the ICRC.

The report of the conference is available from the Network Office priced £4.75 including p&p.

Vatican document stirs debate

In early September the Vatican published a declaration on the Catholic faith entitled Dominus Iesus which included statements about the status of other Christian Churches and of other faiths from the perspective of the Roman Catholic Church. Pope John Paul II and Cardinal Ratzinger have underlined the fact that the document only defines existing Catholic doctrine. However, some of the phrases in the document, highlighted in media reports, have caused controversy and critical comment. The text of the full document can be found on the Vatican website: <http://www.vatican.va>.

The Committee for Other Faiths of the Roman Catholic Bishops' Conference of England and Wales have indicated that later this autumn they will be issuing comments on the text and reactions to it.

Human rights and religious ### discrimination

The Human Rights Act 1998 came into force on 2 October 2000. It incorporates within UK law the provisions of the European Convention on Human Rights which the UK Government signed in 1951. This means that UK citizens will be able to enforce these rights in UK courts instead of having to take their case to the European Court of Human Rights.

The Act makes it unlawful for public authorities, including private bodies when carrying out public functions, to act in a manner which is incompatible with the Convention rights. These rights include "the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion," including freedom [for the individual] to change his or her religion or belief and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his or her religion or belief in worship, teaching, practice and observance." The freedom to manifest one's religion or beliefs is "subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of public safety, for the protection of public order, health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others." Section 13 of the Human Rights Act says that "if a court's determination of any question arising under this Act might affect the exercise by a religious organisation (itself or its members collectively) of the Convention right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, it must have particular regard to the importance of that right."

The provisions of the Human Rights Act could be very significant for individuals and organisations with a religious identity. However, a good deal of caution is being shown in offering advice on the Act's precise impact. This may not be clear until a number of legal cases have been brought under it. Nevertheless, its enactment might well have an immediate effect on those anxious to avoid falling foul of its provisions.

So far as religious discrimination is concerned, it is important to note that while it will be illegal for public authorities to act in a way which is incompatible with the Convention rights, private and voluntary sector organisations are covered by it only if they are carrying out "public functions". An example would be a voluntary organisation that carries out a public function for central or local government, such as running residential homes under contract. The Human Rights Unit at the Home Office is available to give advice on the implications of the legislation.

During October there will be a meeting of the European Community Council of Ministers to consider further a draft Directive which is designed to give protection against discrimination in employment and occupation and covers various forms of discrimination: sex, racial or ethnic origin, religion or belief, disability, age or sexual orientation. Following their adoption by the Council of Ministers, Directives must be given effect within a specified period in the national legislation of member countries which can apply their provisions in ways which are appropriate to their different circumstances.

While there has in general been a welcome for the measure's intention to combat discrimination on religious grounds, faith communities have been concerned that its provisions might affect the freedom of religious organisations, including schools, to discriminate in their own employment practices in favour of members of their own faith in order to maintain their ethos. However, a Ministerial assurance has been given in the House of Lords that the Government will seek to ensure that the Directive protects the legitimate rights of religious organisations.

A third development relating to religious discrimination will be submission to the Home Office by the University of Derby's project team of its final report on its research on religious discrimination in general.

So the picture of current and prospective developments in this field is a complex one. The Network will be keeping its member organisations in touch with developments and will report on them in Inter Faith Update.

The future of multi-ethnic Britain

The Commission on the Future of Multi-Ethnic Britain, which was set up in 1998 by The Runnymede Trust, published its report, The Future of Multi-Ethnic Britain on 11 October, as Inter Faith Update was going to print. The 400 page report makes over 130 recommendations "to the government in Cardiff, Holyrood and Westminster" and to other public authorities in a number of categories ranging from education and employment to health and policing. The section on "Religion and Belief" makes the following recommendations:

- In all faith communities there should be closer connections between anti-racism and work to improve inter faith relations.

- Legislation should be introduced prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination on grounds of religion or belief.
- A statement of general principles should be drawn up on reasonable accommodation in relation to religious and cultural diversity in the workplace and in schools, and case-study examples of good practice should be provided.
- A study should be made of police responses to hate crimes containing a religious component.
- A commission on the role of religion in the public life of a multi-faith society should be set up to make recommendations on legal and constitutional matters.

Further information is available at the website: <http://www.runnymedetrust.org.uk>. The full report (RRP £10.99) is available from Profile books Tel: 020 7404 3001, email: corinne.anyika@profilebooks.co.uk

Faith community support for the International Criminal Court

A delegation of faith community representatives met with Foreign Office officials on 26 May to press for the early ratification of the International Criminal Court treaty by the UK government. In August the text of a draft Bill for this purpose was published and faith communities have offered comments on this.

The treaty to create the Court was originally agreed at an intergovernmental conference in Rome in 1998. Out of the 120 governments who voted to create the court, 98 have signed the treaty and to date, 13 have ratified it into their national legislation. The new court will have the capacity to indict and try individuals all over the world that have been charged with having committed the crimes of genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity. It will also have the power of redress to compensate victims of such serious crimes.

First Muslim state secondary school

The Secretary of State for Education, Rt Hon David Blunkett MP announced on 6 October that the Feversham Girl's School in Bradford is to receive more than £5 million to finance a switch from the independent sector to voluntary-aided status. The school, which is run by the Muslim Association of Bradford, currently has just over 200 pupils. It hopes to increase numbers to about 580 girls with a move to the buildings of a former Roman Catholic School. Feversham follows the Islamia primary school in London and the Al Furqan primary in Birmingham into the state system. Since 1997 one Greek Orthodox, five Jewish, one Seventh Day Adventist and two Sikh schools have also been given voluntary-aided status.

Sacred voices sacred spaces

The Sacred Voices Millennium Music Village Festival took place from 28 June to 16 July in various venues around London. The festival featured an array of religious singers from different faiths and countries as far apart as the Balkans, India, Jamaica and South Africa. Several UK based artists also performed at the three major weekend music festivals. In addition to the music festival a conference and series of workshops were held on "The Healing Power of Sound and Music" and a series of talks were held about peace in the various faith traditions. Over 1,700 school children took part in the schools programme which included workshops on peace and healing.

Sacred Spaces was the theme of a photographic exhibition at the Victoria and Albert Museum which brought together photographs taken by members of different faiths of their communities. It is proposed to make this exhibition available for display by local communities around the country. For details please contact: Ethne Nightingale, Education Department, Victoria and Albert Museum, South Kensington, London SW7 2RL.

Religious events at the Dome

The Millennium Dome hosted a Day of Jewish Culture on 16 July as part of the International Jewish Music Festival. Over 500 singers and dancers entertained visitors. As well as music, song and drama there was an exhibition of sculptures and poetry recitals by Jewish artists.

14 August saw the launch of the UK branch of United Religions Initiative (URI) in the Our Town Story area of the Dome. The Rt Revd William Swing, Anglican Bishop of California and the initiator of URI International joined leaders of several faiths who signed the URI Charter. Members from different faith community and inter faith organisations from around the country were in the audience. They were joined by a delegation of young people from across Europe who were taking part in the Coventry 2000: Values Have No Boundaries Conference organised by Minorities of Europe.

About 8,000 members of the Hindu community were present at the Dome on the following day, 15 August to celebrate Raksha Bandan. Four cultural presentations by Hindu groups from around the country took place on the Our Town Story stage. Visitors to the Dome were offered a Rakhi and were also treated to performances by a Hindu community band in the Main Square just outside the Dome.

The Baha'i community is holding a celebration of the Birthday of the Báb at the Dome on 21 October.

NETWORK NEWS

Inter Faith Relations in the UK: the Next Decade

The 2000 AGM and National Meeting of the Inter Faith Network took place on 4 July at Rosebery House in London. It was chaired by Dr Manazir Ahsan and Rt Revd Tom Butler. The theme of the National Meeting was “Inter Faith Relations in the UK: the Next Decade” and the day was designed to allow a chance to reflect on the future developments which need to be encouraged in the inter faith field and the contribution which member organisations and the Network itself can make to these.

Back in 1987, when the Network was founded, the significance of the faith dimension of relations between different communities was often ignored or challenged and many people were wary of inter faith encounter. There are still sceptics and even those who are hostile, but the importance of good inter faith relations is now much more widely accepted, both within faith communities themselves and by wider society. The Government has also become more aware of the significance of faith identity, and faith communities have developed ways of working together in their dealings with Government. One example is the success in persuading the Government to include a question on religion in the 2001 Census. Another is the readiness of the new Scottish Parliament to listen to the newly formed Scottish Inter Faith Council. The Shared Act of Reflection and Commitment by the faith communities of the UK, which was held in the Houses of Parliament as part of the First Weekend celebrations of the new Millennium in many ways symbolised the progress which has been made in recent years, but on which there is now a need to build.

There were opening presentations on ways ahead by Brian Pearce, Network Director; Iqbal Sacranie of the UK Action Committee on Islamic Affairs and Muslim Council of Britain; and young Jain doctor Sapna Shah. In the discussions that followed, participants tackled such topics as how the inter faith situation has changed in recent years; the new challenges for organisations in the inter faith field; possible dangers to be faced and pitfalls to be avoided; and new initiatives which might need to be taken. Representatives from each of the four categories of Network membership (national faith community; national inter faith; local inter faith; and educational and academic) met separately during the afternoon.

Inter faith profile

Most Venerable Pandith Dr Medagama Vajiragnana, was elected as a Vice-Chair of the Network at its recent AGM. The following is a short interview conducted by Bhupinder Singh.

Q What does your work as a leader of the Sri Lankan Buddhist community in this country involve?

My position as Sangha Nayake of Great Britain is primarily one of being a central focus for the Sri Lankan Sangha (i.e. monks) resident here or visiting. As the years proceed, many more monks are arriving in this country and new viharas (monastic temples) are being set up. Buddhist monks have great independence from each other. Monks are not tied to any centre or organised community and can move between temples whenever it is agreeable to both sides. Each monk has to observe the same 227 monastic rules, but he is respected as an individual endeavouring to succeed in his spiritual quest. Hence, the Sangha Nayake takes an attitude more of a father figure than a disciplinarian.

I am also Abbot of the London Buddhist Vihara and my role here is one of taking care of the religious needs of the Buddhist laity of any nationality. However, we find that most traditionally Buddhist countries now have their own centres here, hence the London Buddhist Vihara is mainly catering for British and Sri Lankan devotees. We also find a need to help the Sri Lankans to keep in touch with their national identity by teaching children their native tongue and organising cultural events.

Q What is your understanding of the need for inter faith dialogue?

On my arrival in England in 1967, I found great ignorance among most people concerning "imported" religions. The "Abrahamic" religions were well established here and their differences tolerated, but there was great suspicion regarding those religions coming from the Indian continent and the Far East.

My understanding of the need for inter faith dialogue is that it reduces the fear and suspicion so prevalent among many. It attempts to build bridges of understanding so that all can follow their respective religious preference without fear of discrimination or incrimination by their neighbours or work-mates.

For me, the need for inter faith dialogue is in no way connected with any force of "blending". As a Buddhist, I stand firm on the principle that no compromise should be allowed to influence any person to overlook certain parts of their belief for the sake of politeness. For example, a number of times I have refused to sit on a platform when the topic for discussion is "We all believe in the same God", as my tradition is non-theistic.

Respect for the individual's religious choice is paramount. Buddhism and "dogma" are not compatible, and neither is any form of condemnation for another's choice of belief.

Q How did you first get involved with inter faith dialogue?

Harmony without any religious intolerance is an established part of Sri Lanka's history and culture. There are four main religions thriving there - Buddhism, Hinduism, Christianity and Islam. Whilst in Sri Lanka I was the secretary of the "United Religious Organisation" (URO), a worthy group of religious leaders doing great work in the island. Very early after my return to Britain in 1985, Brian Pearce and Rabbi Hugo Gryn approached me to discuss the formation of the Inter Faith Network for the UK. Immediately, I agreed to do what I could to aid them in this fine proposal. My enthusiasm is still as great as ever.

Q You have been a member of the Network's Executive Committee since it was founded, what do you think have been its main achievements?

Having been involved since the very beginning, I feel the Network's main achievements are exactly in line with its original objectives, as I understand them:-

- To bring together like-minded groups of individuals who wish to break the barriers of fear, suspicion, and ignorance among people with different religious beliefs
- To enable fast and genuine dialogue to take place between religious leaders across the entire religious spectrum in the country
- To instigate a forum to discuss pertinent problems currently present in society, with each religious view being aired

This country is a multi-cultural one and the religious views of each group must be represented and respected (though not necessarily agreed with). Inter faith dialogue is only healthy when carried out intelligently in a well organised manner. The Inter Faith Network succeeds in doing this.

Q In what ways do you see inter faith work developing in the coming years?

The achievements to date may be great, but there is still much to do in achieving certain parts of the Network's aims. Only the other year I personally witnessed nuns objecting with banners outside Westminster Cathedral when a multi-faith programme was held there. Great fear is still present, much of it deep-seated so that it may well take a generation to clear. Grudging tolerance is not enough, it still leaves unhealthy attitudes undercover!

 I recommend that in the coming years the work of the Inter Faith Network UK furthers even more intensively the cause of understanding and harmony between followers of different beliefs.

At the Network's Annual General Meeting on 4 July applications for membership of the Network were accepted from: The Muslim Council of Britain; The Unitarian and Free Christian Churches Inter Faith Sub-committee; The International Interfaith Centre, Oxford; The Scottish Inter Faith Council; Bolton Inter Faith Council; and Luton Council of Faiths.

New Vice-chair

Most Ven Dr M Vagiragnana of the Sri Lankan Sangha Sabha GB was elected to serve as a Vice Chair of the Network.

MBE for Network Co-chair

Dr Manazir Ahsan was appointed an MBE in the Queen's Birthday honours list for services to the Millennium celebrations.

Brian Pearce receives Papal Knighthood

Network Director Brian Pearce was presented with his appointment as a Knight of the Papal Order of St Gregory (KSG) by Most Revd Michael Bowen, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Southwark, at a small reception at his house in July. Those who spoke at the event included Rt Revd Charles Henderson and Sir Sigmund Sternberg KCSG.

RECENT CONFERENCES

Valuing Faith: a multi-faith conference

On 11 September a multi-faith conference, funded by the Millennium Festival Trust, took place at Bradford College in partnership with Bradford's Q21 Centre. Participants from many faith backgrounds came together to discuss such issues as: the role of women; funding and faith communities; inter-personal skills in faith settings; managing volunteers; the impact of the Internet; faiths in schools; and faith and the media. Workshops to enable sharing of good practice were a key part of the day.

The conference was the first major initiative of Q21 (whose name comes out of the phrase "questions for the 21st century"). It was founded in 1995, by a small group of people from a variety of backgrounds, to renovate the derelict Victorian schoolhouse building next to Bradford's Interfaith Education Centre in the Listerhills district of the inner-city to become the home of a centre. This will: promote knowledge and understanding of the religions and denominations of the world; promote intercultural learning and community development; facilitate inter-community liaison in various parts of the Bradford district; and promote dialogue between Bradfordians and people from other areas of the UK and other countries, with a focus on inter faith and inter cultural issues.

For further information about the Centre or about the conference, contact David Fitch, Interfaith Education Centre, Listerhills Road, Bradford, West Yorkshire, BD7 1HD.

Faith makes communities work

This is the title of a report produced as a result of a two-year project by the Shaftesbury Society in association with the DETR (Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions). The research found that faith based community projects frequently struggle to find the funding they require, working out of premises which need upgrading. However, they can expand their resources through the significant commitment of a volunteer base and goodwill within the community. The report, written from a multi-faith perspective, covers topics ranging from motivating volunteers and working with other faiths, to accessing funding and overcoming discrimination.

The first of two one day conferences based on the research on the theme of Faith and Community Development took place at Goldsmiths' College, London on 12 September. A range of practitioner materials were also launched at the London gathering where the keynote presentation was from Rt Hon Hilary Armstrong MP, Minister for Local Government and the Regions. Other speakers included: Angela Sarkis, Church Urban Fund; Fran Becket, Shaftesbury Society; Ram Gidoomal, South Asian Development Partnership; and David Rayner, Inner Cities Religious Council.

Further information can be found at the web site: www.faithandcommunity.org.uk or from the Shaftesbury Society Tel: 020 8239 5555.

Inter faith seminar at Birmingham Gurdwara

An inter faith seminar was held at Guru Nanak Niskam Sewak Jatha Gurdwara in Birmingham on 10 June. Bhai Mohinder Singh, Chairman of the Gurdwara, gave an opening address. Speakers at the seminar talked about their faith's perceptions of divinity. The speakers included: Rt Revd John Austin, (Anglican Bishop of Aston); Dr Jabal Buaben (Muslim); Mr Phramaha Laow Panyasiri (Buddhist); Mrs Sharada Sugirthrajah (Hindu); and Dr Natubhai Shah (Jain). An exhibition of the different faiths was on display and delegates were taken on a tour of the Gurdwara. The afternoon session then heard from Dr David Cheetham speaking about inter faith work in Birmingham; Dr P Kumar on "total surrender"; Dr Owen Cole on the future of inter faith work; and Professor John Hull on education for the new generation.

Buddhist Christian Network opens inter faith centre

The newly formed Buddhist-Christian Network aims to promote friendship and mutual trust between followers of these two faiths, but also welcomes anyone interested in meditation and the contemplative journey. The Network has recently established an inter faith centre, which includes a meditation room and library/meeting room. For more information on the Network and its centre please contact Elizabeth West, The Interfaith Centre, 43 Bramley Road, London N14 4HD, email: ewest@onetel.net.uk

Meetings with the Scottish Parliament

Members of the Scottish Inter Faith Council (SIFC), now a Network member body, met with Jim Wallace MSP, the Deputy First Minister of the Scottish Parliament, on 31 May. Donald Dewar MSP, the First Minister, was due to be present, but was prevented by illness. The meeting, which will be an annual event, discussed issues of mutual concern to the faith communities and Scottish Parliament. Since then SIFC representatives have met again with Mr Wallace to discuss the newly published White Paper on Family Law in Scotland.

Holy Isle Inter Faith Centre

On 16 September members of the Scottish Inter Faith Council were invited to Holy Isle, the Buddhist owned island off the Isle of Arran, to mark the opening of the new inter faith centre there. During the day Lama Yeshe, the leader of the Buddhist community based on the island led the visiting group to a cave where the group sat in silent meditation. It is said that a 6th Century Celtic saint named Molaisa lived as a hermit on the island for eight years and regularly meditated in the cave. The visitors were also able to drink from the well from which Saint Molaisa used to drink. The group then returned to the inter faith centre to talk about the future of Holy Isle as a resource for all faiths. Some of the participants stayed on the island for a week's inter faith retreat.

REGIONAL UPDATES

Bedford. Bedford Council of Faiths held an event called “Food for Festivals” on 12 August at the Bedford Quaker Meeting House. Members from Baha’i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu and Muslim faiths shared food and explained its religious significance for them.

Gloucester. Gloucestershire Inter Faith Action helped to organise an inter faith marquee at Gloucester’s Millennium Festival held at The Park from 22 to 23 July. The marquee, which was funded by the City Council, was decorated with posters and artefacts from several faiths and visitors were greeted by members of the faiths at various stalls.

Leicester. The Inter Faith Sensory Garden was officially opened on 17 June. The Chairman and representatives of Leicester Council of Faiths were among those who gave blessings at the opening of the garden which is in the grounds of Glenfield Hospital for people with learning disabilities.

London. Westminster Interfaith held its fifteenth London Multifaith Pilgrimage for Peace on 3 June. This year’s event had five different start points: North, South, East, West and Central London. The five separate groups converged at the Battersea Peace Pagoda, visiting different places of worship along each of their routes. All the groups then made their way to Westminster Cathedral. After a short prayer by the tomb of Cardinal Hume, the pilgrims gathered in the Cathedral Hall where short presentations were made by people of a number of different faiths.

The Greenwich Multi-Faith Pilgrimage took place on 9 September. Over 100 people made the walk from Greenwich Park to the Millennium Dome, where they were joined by a further 100 for a meal provided by the Ramgarhia Sikh Gurdwara and presentations from seven different faiths. Also in Greenwich, the Mayor opened a multi-faith exhibition on 28 September at the Borough Museum which is open until 27 October.

Luton. The Luton Council of Faiths was formally launched on 6 July at the University of Luton. Previously known as Luton Inter Faith Forum, the new organisation has adopted a formal constitution and is aiming to develop its relationship with the local education authority. A range of presentations were made by different faith communities and by local schools. Speeches were given by the local MP, the Mayor of Luton, personnel from the local authority; the education authority; the University of Luton; and several inter faith organisations.

teacher joined Wolverhampton Inter-Faith Group for a week to produce a work pack for children visiting places of worship. WIFG also launched its “Meeting in the Millennium” (MIM) project at the annual Wolverhampton Town Show on 8 July. The launch was attended by the Mayor of Wolverhampton, and leading representatives from the town’s different faith communities. The project aims to encourage local faith communities to meet together to build trust and understanding. There was a joint Act of Commitment, using the text from the Millennium shared faith communities event in the House of Lords on 3 January. The words had been inscribed in a book, which was signed by those present and which is now being taken around to various places of worship and community centres in the town so that others may also sign it.

INTERNATIONAL UPDATE

Religious leaders meet at United Nations

At the end of August a Millennium World Peace Summit took place at the United Nations in New York. It brought together many religious and spiritual leaders from around the world. Among these were a number of representatives of faith communities and inter faith organisations in the UK. There was controversy over the absence of an invitation to the Dalai Lama, believed to be the result of pressure from the Chinese Government. Those present endorsed a document entitled “Commitment to Global Peace” which condemns all violence committed in the name of religion. In his address to the gathering in the UN General Assembly Hall UN Secretary General Kofi Annan said that “religion can be a realm of extraordinary power”. He went on to say, “Religious practices and beliefs are among the phenomena that define us as human”, but noted that “the practice of religion can also have its dark side”. He invited those present “to look within and to consider what they can do to promote justice, equality, reconciliation and peace.....[and] to set an example of inter faith dialogue and co-operation.”

A national commemoration of Holocaust Memorial Day was held on 27 January at Westminster Central Hall. It was attended by HRH The Prince of Wales, as well as by political and religious leaders and 1500 guests from around the UK, including Holocaust survivors.

The National Ceremony was broadcast live on BBC2 and Radio 4. It featured a programme of readings, poetry, music and video clips. Survivors of the Holocaust and the Bosnian, Cambodian and Rwandan atrocities and a number of celebrities such as Sir Bob Geldof and Sir Trevor McDonald gave presentations.

During his address, the Chief Rabbi of the United Hebrew Congregations of the Commonwealth, Dr Jonathan Sacks, said that: "We must never forget that God has given us many faiths, many races but only one world in which to live together. May we recognise His image in those who are not in our image, and may the memory of those who died teach us to sanctify life."

The event ended with a Statement of Commitment being made and the lighting of candles on the stage.

A few invitees chose not to attend the event. Among these were representatives of the Muslim Council of Britain. In a press release Yousuf Bhailok, its Secretary General, explained that whilst the MCB fully condemns the Nazi Holocaust and is "at one with fellow members of the British Jewish Community in their pains and anguish over this savage and shameful event in recent history", they had "reservations about the actual ceremony, which excluded the ongoing genocides in occupied Palestinian territories and in Jammu and Kashmir and elsewhere."

Faiths respond to earthquake

The earthquake which happened on 26 January in Gujarat bringing death and devastation to thousands has triggered responses from many faith community and inter faith organisations around the UK.

The Disasters Emergency Committee, a coalition of several well known charities as well as many faith community aid agencies and places of worship have launched appeals and are delivering aid to those affected by the quake.

Several communities have also held events to remember those affected by the quake. For example in Leicester, on 6 February, representatives from the Council of Faiths joined staff and pupils of the Rushey Mead Secondary School in organising an act of remembrance. Representatives of eight faiths presented prayers from their traditions and joined pupils in lighting candles. The event was broadcast on BBC local radio.

The memorial day was initiated following consultation carried out by the UK Government, which is a founding member of the Intergovernmental Task Force for Holocaust Education. Several other European countries including Germany, Italy and Sweden have held similar commemorations.

The commemorations aim to raise awareness and understanding of the events of the Holocaust and other more recent atrocities such as those in Bosnia, Cambodia and Rwanda. The aim is to ensure that they are neither forgotten nor repeated in any part of the world.

Local commemorations also took place in many locations around the country, many of them linked with projects that school children had been doing in the run up to the day. The Government has produced an education pack, entitled "Holocaust Memorial Day, Remembering Genocides: Lessons for the Future", which gives ideas for lesson plans and assemblies for children from primary through to sixth form level. The pack is also supported by the web site: www.holocaustmemorialday.gov.uk. It is planned to develop the pack and supporting materials which are designed to help children understand the value of diversity and tolerance.

NATIONAL UPDATE

Religious leaders unite over human cloning

A joint letter from eleven religious leaders of different faiths was sent to members of the House of Lords requesting that further consideration be given before a vote relating to the legalisation of partial cloning of human cells, allowing scientists to extend the types of research on early-stage embryos.

The letter, circulated to Peers on 15 January, argued that such a sensitive matter should not be rushed through Parliament, but be referred to a Select Committee and further research carried out before any decision is made. However, after the debate on 22 January, the House voted in favour of the new regulations and agreed to set up a committee that would look at the issues in more detail whilst not delaying research. The changes clear the way for researchers to clone the genetic material of humans to derive special cells that can be used to fight a range of degenerative diseases.

This is one of the first times that so many religious leaders have co-operated on such a morally sensitive issue. The letter was signed by the Anglican Archbishops of Canterbury and York; the Catholic Archbishops of Westminster and Glasgow; Dr Zaki Badawi, President of the

The Inter Faith Network was founded in 1987. It works with its member bodies to promote good relations between the faith communities in the UK, to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make the UK a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions where all can practise their faith with integrity.

- The Network:
- Provides information on faith communities and on inter faith affairs
  - Advises on multi faith projects and inter faith issues
  - Publishes materials to aid work in the religious and inter faith sectors
  - Fosters inter faith co-operation on social issues
  - Holds regular meetings where social and religious questions of concern to the different faith communities can be examined together
  - Links 89 member organisations including: representative bodies from the different faith communities; inter faith organisations; local inter faith groups; educational and academic bodies.

Inter Faith Update is the newsletter of the Inter Faith Network for the UK. It keeps a wide range of organisations and individuals interested in developing good inter faith relations in the UK in touch with UK events and projects with a significant inter faith component.

For publications which contain in depth articles on inter faith topics, relevant book reviews or items related to individual faith communities ask the Network office for details.

Please send any contribution of articles and diary dates for consideration for inclusion in the next issue by 22 May 2001 to:

Remembering together

For the first time national representatives of the Buddhist, Hindu, Muslim and Sikh faiths joined Christian and Jewish representatives in the official group headed by HM the Queen at the Cenotaph in Whitehall for the annual act of remembrance for those who gave their lives in the two World Wars. The changes were introduced by the Home Office and the Royal British Legion who organise the event, to make the annual event more inclusive. In an interview with the BBC, Om Parkash Sharma, President of the National Council of Hindu Temples and a Network Vice-Chair, said: "It is a good thing that the Government has finally recognised the role of our community and the other faiths in war time... The Commonwealth countries played a great role in the wars and the memory of those people should be honoured."

Census 2001

In the Census taking place on Sunday 29 April a question about religious identity will for the first time be asked throughout the UK. The question will, however, be in differing forms in different parts of the UK. Unlike other questions on the census form answering it will be voluntary. A number of faith community organisations are briefing their members to ensure that they answer the question so that the Census will provide accurate data on the number of people in their communities.

Conservative Party Faiths Conference

The Conservative Party held a one-day conference on the role of faith communities in British society on 26 October at the Emanuel Centre in London. Its leader, Rt Hon William Hague MP, made the opening presentation. Terry Pendergast, Chief Executive of Catholic Marriage Care and Iqbal Sacranie, Chairman of Muslim Aid, spoke on family life. Rumman Ahmed, Community Relations Advisor to the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea and Rabbi Naftali Brawer, member of the Chief Rabbi's cabinet, spoke about faith-based social action. Mark Sturge, General Director of the African and Caribbean Evangelical Alliance and Professor Harminder Singh, President of the WCRP UK and Ireland Chapter, spoke about religious education and "free" and "partner" schools. Peter Kerridge, of Premier Radio and Nitin Palan, of the Swaminarayan Hindu Mandir spoke about freedom of religious broadcasting.

Islamic Awareness Week

On 6 November, the Islamic Society of Britain launched its annual Islamic Awareness Week. This was its seventh year and it achieved a higher profile than previously. The aim of the week was to eradicate the stereotypes and misconceptions of Islam and to create more understanding and build stronger links between the various communities as well as organisations and agencies across the country. The launch event was held in the House of Commons, hosted by Mohammed Sarwar MP. A video message from the Prime Minister was shown and speakers at the event included the Home Secretary, Rt Hon Jack Straw MP, Conservative leader, Rt Hon William Hague MP and Liberal Democrat Home Office spokesman, Simon Hughes MP.

United Religions Initiative receives lottery funding

The United Religions Initiative – UK, the UK branch of a new international inter faith initiative, was launched in August 2000 at the Millennium Dome. It has been awarded a grant of just over £250,000, payable over three years, by the National Lottery Charities Board. Plans are now going ahead to establish an office, employ a development manager and a development worker, publish a magazine, create a website, and launch a programme of events focusing on five themes: encouraging youth involvement in inter-faith, which will include an annual 5 day residential inter-faith camp for 40 young people and a Youth Initiative Award scheme; working with faith communities in the context of urban regeneration; inter-faith workshops that explore one's own sense of the spiritual through aspects of art; examining ways in which global awareness and responsibility can be raised through the experience of local diverse cultures; and exploring

Northern Ireland Multi Faith Celebration

A multi faith celebration was held following the John Main International Seminar on 22 October. Almost 200 participants from seven different faith communities attended the event at St Anne's Anglican Cathedral in Belfast organised by the Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum. This was the first such celebration to be held in Northern Ireland and was linked to the visit to the Province of HH The Dalai Lama. Speakers were from a variety of faiths and presentations included music, song and readings from the scriptures from representatives of the Baha'i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh faiths. The annual John Main Seminar preceding the event was organised by the World Community for Christian Meditation.

Mansion House dinner for faiths

On Wednesday 11 October 2000 the Lord Mayor of London hosted the bi-annual dinner for "the Archbishops and Bishops of the Anglican Communion at Home and Overseas". For the first time leading representatives of other faiths joined the Bishops and their wives in the Egyptian Room at Mansion House for the dinner.

Ministers of Religion for Parliament?

The Government has introduced a Bill into Parliament to allow members of the clergy and ministers of other faiths to stand for election to the House of Commons. The Bill, if passed, will repeal Acts of Parliament from the early 1800's which disqualified former and serving clergy from standing for election.

Shap Award

The Shap Working Party on World Religions in Education has presented its annual award to Dr Eleanor Nesbitt and Gopinder Kaur for co-writing 'Guru Nanak', published by the Religious and Moral Education Press, for 'making an outstanding contribution to the teaching of World Religions'. The award was presented at a ceremony held on 18 December in Birmingham and included a presentation given by the co-authors.

The book has as its focus the founder of the Sikh faith and also explores how factors such as community, society, history and culture can contribute to our understanding of a religious tradition. Dr Nesbitt teaches in the Religions and Education Research Unit at the University of Warwick and Gopinder Kaur works for the cross-cultural publisher, Barefoot Books and is a co-editor of the Sikh Bulletin.

Religion in Higher Education

Religion in Higher Education: the Politics of the Multi-Faith Campus by Sophie Gilliat-Ray was published by Ashgate in December 2000. It examines the increased religious diversity in the institutions of Higher Education in the UK. The book is based upon research commissioned by the Inter Faith Network in 1998. A summary of the research, Higher Education and Student Religious Identity, was published in 1999 by the University of Exeter in association with the Network. The new book offers a wider theoretical and historical discussion about religion in higher education.

Professor Ninian Smart

Professor Ninian Smart, died aged 73 on 29 January 2001 in Lancaster. He was a pioneer in the field of Religious Studies and multi faith Religious Education. He was a Professor of Religious Studies for over four decades first at the University of Lancaster and then at the University of California, Santa Barbara, USA. In 1969 he became a founding Co-Chair of the Shap Working Party on World Religions in Education. He was the author of more than 30 books and also played a leading role in the production of the BBC television series exploring world religions, The Long Search, originally shown in 1977.

Inter faith profile

Sister Isabel Smyth is the Secretary of both the Scottish Inter Faith Council and the Churches Agency for Inter Faith Relations in Scotland and is also a Network Executive Committee member.

Can you tell us a little about your religious background

I was brought up as a Catholic. My family were Catholic, I went to Catholic schools and trained as a Catholic teacher. I knew very little apart from the Catholic community which provided me with a religious, social and professional life. I entered a Catholic convent, the Sisters of Notre Dame de Mamur, and for much of my life have been involved in training teachers for the Catholic school system in Scotland. All this made me a very unlikely candidate for inter faith work.!

How did you first get interested in inter faith work?

When I was a young Sister I went to Lancaster University to do a degree in Education and Religious Studies. For the first time in my life I lived in a secular environment and was exposed to the beliefs of faiths other than Christianity. I loved it, though my studies did challenge my own faith. It also helped me see how narrow a perspective I had had on life. My time at Lancaster gave me a new understanding of my own faith as well as of other faiths. After Lancaster I returned to Scotland to be responsible for the World Religions element of the new B. Ed Degree in Secondary Education. I was determined not to limit my experience to the Catholic community and I became involved in the International Flat in Glasgow where an inter faith group met regularly. I became involved and have been involved in inter faith work ever since.

You were involved, at the outset, with the discussions leading up to the formation of the Scottish Inter Faith Council (SIFC). What were the main reasons for setting up the organisation?

There had been various attempts to set up some kind of national networking meetings in Scotland but the motivation and energy for the Scottish Inter Faith Council came from the setting up of the new Scottish Parliament. There was a real sense in Scotland of a new beginning and a desire to weave a new Scottish identity which recognised plurality and difference. The Scottish Parliament gave faith communities an opportunity to work together for a just and peaceful society. The members of the consultative group that set up the inter faith council felt that this was an opportune moment for faith communities to show solidarity and to make their voice heard in civic society.

What do you feel have been the main achievements of the SIFC to date?

It may be too soon to talk about achievements but we have been used by the Scottish Executive as a way of getting in touch with faith communities and there is a very strong sense in the Executive that all of its work must be multi-faith. In our own small way we have been able to keep that vision alive at meetings and discussions we have attended. Without any effort on our part, an annual meeting has been set up with the First Minister of the Scottish Parliament. We have already had one such meeting and look forward to the next one with Henry McLeish in May. This is the first time that Ministers have formally recognised the multi faith nature of Scottish society. Traditionally, the Secretary of State met with Church leaders and the annual meeting with the SIFC now gives members of the various faith communities in Scotland an opportunity to discuss matters of common concern and interest.

What are the main challenges for the SIFC? And how do you think they can be overcome?

It has had a good beginning but it needs resources if it is to fulfil its potential. We are very grateful to Glasgow City Council for providing an office in the St Mungo Museum of Religious Life and Art. This museum is one of only two museums in Europe which are specifically committed to religion. The mission statement of the museum fits in with the aims of the SIFC and we work together very well in providing a space for inter faith activity.

At the moment we are having to clarify certain policies - about membership, about representation and about making public statements. Because the number of faith groups that are members of the council is fairly small, it is important to communicate to all faith communities something of the work of the Council and encourage greater participation. We do recognise that we cannot speak on behalf of faith communities but we do want to encourage communities to be aware of national developments and participate in the democratic process. Only time will tell if the Council is to be as effective in Scotland as the Network has been in the UK overall.

REGIONAL UPDATE

North West Link Meeting

The North West Regional link meeting organised by the Inter Faith Network took place on 17 January at the Methodist Central Hall in Manchester. Participants from inter faith initiatives across the region attended and shared news from their groups.

Blackburn

The Blackburn with Darwen Interfaith Council was launched in November 1999 and the Council has held several successful events throughout 2000. The Council has a committee made up of 20 members (5 Christian, 5 Muslim, 4 Sikh, 4 Hindu, 1 Jew and 1 Zoroastrian). Mr Fawad Bhatti is the Development/Support Officer, whose appointment was made possible by a successful bid for Single Regeneration Budget (SRB) funding. The Interfaith Council is organising an inter faith ceremony to mark Holocaust Memorial Day in association with the Borough Council. A regular series of meetings with guest speakers is being planned.

Bolton

Tony McNeile of the Bolton Interfaith Council reported that the Council was set up about eight years ago and last year adopted a constitution and became a member of the Inter Faith Network. The Council's meetings normally focus on practical issues such as death rituals of the different faiths or education. The meetings are popular among teachers. The Council also arranges visits to different places of worship and has had some contact with local services and authorities such as the fire service who recently contacted the group with an enquiry relating to recruitment of Muslims.

A lunch time meeting is planned with shared food from different traditions as a way of learning about each others faiths. Each year a "Civic Sunday" event is held by the local authority. The group is now exploring with the local authority ways to make the annual Remembrance Sunday ceremony more inclusive.

Bury

The Bury Inter-Faith Council, represented by Mr and Mrs Trivedi, was formed about 12 years ago when the then Mayor of Bury organised an inter faith breakfast meeting. There are now two evening meetings a year hosted by the Mayor at which representatives from different faiths are invited to speak on a common topic. Smaller occasional meetings are also held.

Manchester

The Manchester area has two inter faith groups: the long established Manchester Inter Faith Group, which works in the South of the city, and the newly formed Manchester Interfaith Forum, which aims for a city-wide involvement. The Forum, which was established in early 2000, was represented by Henry Guterman, Charanjit Singh Heera, Hamid Hussain, Leslie Levy, Revd Jennifer McKenzie and Dr Valerie Roebuck.

The new initiative is supported by the Anglican Bishop of Manchester and by leading members of Manchester's other denominations and faith communities. The Forum holds regular meetings and organises visits to different places of worship. Upcoming events include a visit to a Sikh Gurdwara, the group's AGM and a social gathering. Henry Guterman reported that Holocaust Memorial Day was going to be commemorated in Manchester with a vigil in the peace gardens followed by a commemorative event in the Town Hall.

Merseyside

Canon Michael Wolfe, Brenda Fraser and Alison Hughes represented the Merseyside Inter-Faith Group, which was established about 15 years ago with the motto of "Listening, Learning, Liking". The group meets each month at different faith venues with 30 to 80 people attending each meeting. Sometimes the meetings are held in association with the local branches of the Council for Christians and Jews and United Nations Association.

The Group links interested individuals from the different faiths. A new Council of Faiths, which plans to link formally representative bodies of the area's faith communities, is being established alongside the existing initiative, with its support. The Merseyside Council of Faiths will be launched in May 2001 and aims to forge links with civic authorities

Pendle

Building Bridges, the Pendle Interfaith Group, has been working in the Nelson area for over 10 years. The aim of the group is to work towards harmony between the different faith communities through greater understanding of the religions. Damian Duggan, who has just been appointed as a Co-ordinator for Building Bridges, reported that SRB funding had been secured for his post. The group plans to hold six to eight meetings this year.

Preston

Revd Peter Thomas spoke about the Preston Inter Faith Forum, which is based in the Chaplaincy Centre of the University of Central Lancashire. One World Week organised an inter faith walk in Preston on 22 October last year, during which 17 participants visited four places of worship.

Rochdale

Rochdale Interfaith Action was established in 1986 and grew out of the background of the local Racial Equality Council. There have been several successful Christian/Muslim events such as celebrations to mark Christmas and Eid-ul-Fitr. The Group is also planning an event for Racial Justice Sunday.

Salford.

The newly appointed Enterprise Adviser for Salford Community Ventures, Adrian Ogle, introduced their work which includes helping to set up community groups and ventures/businesses in the area.

Regional News

Mgr John Devine, the Development Officer for the Churches in the North West, reported on his work based at the North West Development Agency. The Regional Assembly for the North West is keen on setting up a network of contacts in faith communities and inter faith initiatives, but so far has been unable to set up meetings of the relevant groups.

Revd Dale Barton reported on the setting up of the Lancashire Forum of Faiths, which has been in existence since September 1999. This is sponsored by Lancashire County Council and aims to promote good inter faith relations in the county.

Other News

United Religions Initiative – UK is a national initiative which has recently been awarded lottery funding for a three year programme of work (see article on page 3). Heather Wells reported on its plans to open an office which will be located in Manchester or Coventry and to hold a North West conference in the near future.

An account of the work of the Hibbert Trust was given by Eileen Forrester. The Trust was founded in the 18th century and organises an annual lecture series named after Eslin Carpenter. Famous lecturers in the past have included Rabindranath Tagore and Sri Ramakrishna. This year the theme of the lectures will be Religion and the Environment. The Trust distributes a small amount of funding each year.

Regional Roundup

Blackburn

Blackburn Cathedral was the venue for a meeting of the Blackburn with Darwen Interfaith Council on 13 October. The special guest for the evening was Revd Inderjit Bhogal, President of the Methodist Conference for 2000-2001. He spoke about his involvement with other inter faith groups around the country and in particular with the Wolverhampton Inter-Faith Group and went on to speak about his background and his commitment to religious freedom in the UK.

Redbridge

A seminar called “Culture of Peace” was held by the Redbridge Council of Faiths on 24 September to highlight the common bond of peace amongst all faiths. Speakers at the event in Manor Park, London included Revd. Mark Judge (Anglican Christian), Dr Navid Khan (Ahmadiyya community) and Patrick Hanley (RE teacher and Adviser to Newham for RE school curriculum) who presented their own experience, writings and stories from the scriptures to a multi-faith audience of 80.

Sheffield

The European Day of Remembrance for Road Victims, was commemorated at Upper Chapel in Sheffield on 19 November. It was hosted by the Chapel’s Unitarian congregation, Sheffield Inter Faith and Sheffield Council of Churches and was led by representatives of all three groups. The service included an opportunity for those that had lost loved ones in road accidents to write the names of those who have died on oak-leaf cards, which were fixed on a display board, and to speak briefly about their loss, to light candles of remembrance, and to share in quiet reflection.

Bristol

“Faith and Citizenship”, was the title of this year’s annual civic celebration held at the Council House on 2 November. The Mayor of Bristol attended the celebration along with representatives from different religious groups: Baha’i, Buddhist, Muslim, Shri Chinmoy, Sikh, Unitarian and United Reform Church.

Leicester

The faith communities of Leicester working with the Diocesan Board of Mission and Social Responsibility came together to brighten up the holiday season for 360 asylum seekers housed in a hotel in central Leicester. Toiletries, stationery, toys and clothing were collected from the communities and volunteers spent a full day wrapping the presents. These were then presented as Christmas and Eid gifts at the hotel when the Bishop of Leicester, Rt Revd Timothy Stevens, representing all the faiths went to greet the asylum seekers on Christmas Day.

Multi faith walks in Coventry and Luton

Coventry Inter Faith Group and Coventry Multi-Faith Forum held their annual Peace Walk on 7 October. About 100 people took part and visited the Cathedral, a mosque, a Hindu temple and a gurdwara.

The Luton annual Inter Faith Pilgrimage was held on 28 October. Its aim was to raise awareness of Luton's diversity and to create a space for people to make new connections with people who are of different faiths. Those taking part visited a Sikh gurdwara, a Methodist church and the Central Mosque in Luton.

IARF European Conference

The International Association of Religious Freedom held a European conference "Liberal Religion and IARF at a Crossroads" from 25-29 October at Scharbeutz in Northern Germany. The conference also included a Young Adults Programme. Participants from all over Europe discussed the future of religious freedom in Europe as well as the direction that IARF should take. The conference ended with the European commemoration of the centenary of IARF when 100 candles were lit.

WCRP celebrates 30 years.

The World Conference on Religion and Peace held its European Assembly in Rovereto, Italy from 26 to 29 October. The meeting was hosted by the "Campana dei Caduti" Foundation and Trento Diocese. The Conference, entitled "Turning the Page: Religions in Europe Co-operating for Peace", began with a prayer for peace event at the Campana del Caduti, which is a large "peace bell" made of canon balls found in the area after World War One.

The World Conference on Religion and Peace (UK and Ireland Chapter) celebrated the 30th anniversary of WCRP on 16 November at the London Inter Faith Centre. A short video was shown about the history of WCRP as well as musical performances. The anniversary was also commemorated on 28 November in Kyoto, Japan, where WCRP was originally founded.

Volunteers' Week

The Volunteers' Week initiative began in 1986. The "week" runs from 1-7 June every year. In the UK last year over 17,000 organisations participated. This year, as part of the United Nations International Year of Volunteers 2001, the Week will be have an even bigger profile.

Faith community and inter faith organisations rely upon the work of many volunteers and this is a time to recognise their important contribution.

Volunteers' Week celebrates the contribution volunteers make to the community and provides an opportunity for organisations to recognise, reward and recruit their volunteers. In the UK free certificates are produced, along with a range of other merchandise, such as thank you cards. Activities range from Volunteer Fairs to tea parties to sponsored bike rides to theme nights.

For more information and a free guide to taking part in Volunteers' Week please contact: The National Centre for Volunteering, Regent's Wharf, 8 All Saints Street, London N1 9RL Tel: 020 7520 8932

A seminar on Inter Faith Issues and the RE Curriculum was held by the Inter Faith Network with the National Association of Standing Advisory Councils on Religious Education (NASACRE) on Monday 4 June at the newly opened Southwark Cathedral Conference Centre. Baroness Uddin, who spoke about the importance of educating for mutual respect and tolerance, gave the opening address.

In welcoming participants, Brian Pearce, Director of the Network, distinguished between multi-faith RE, involving the study of individual religious traditions; the thematic treatment of specific topics across traditions, eg the role within them of scripture; and addressing more specifically inter faith issues, including relationships between different faith communities, both historically and in Britain's now more religiously diverse society. Clearly all three of these strands could contribute to the development of mutual understanding.

The 70 participants from across the UK heard from two key speakers; John Keast, Principal Manager for RE, Citizenship and PSHE at the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority; and Lat Blaylock, Executive Officer of the Professional Council for Religious Education.

In his presentation John Keast mentioned the references in the QCA's guidance on RE, published last year, to addressing inter faith issues, the scope for doing so within GCSE Religious Studies syllabuses and the relevance of these issues to the new requirements for Citizenship education. He set out the kind of inter faith issues which might be addressed and said: "Inter faith issues mean learning to respect each other through tolerance, listening and dialogue; realising that there is

Good practice guidance for local authorities

The Local Government Association has embarked on producing a set of good practice guidelines for local authorities. The guidelines will be published in association with the Inter Faith Network; Inner Cities Religious Council (ICRC); and the Active Community Unit of the Home Office. They will review ways in which local authorities can work constructively with local faith communities and local inter faith structures. This project is a follow up to the successful conference on Inter Faith Co-operation, Local Government and the Regions organised jointly by the Network and the ICRC in Birmingham in summer 2000.

The first of three consultation meetings to discuss the draft document was held in Manchester on 13 June. There will be further meetings in Leicester and London. These meetings are being supplemented by the use of email consultation through an initiative of the Community Development Foundation.

no alternative but to build on our commonality and face our differences"... "We need to realise that multi-faith and inter faith does not have to mean the absence of values or be regarded as value neutral or relativist. It is not the negation of the value of belief, identity and culture, the things that make us what we are and give our lives meaning. It is the precondition of being able to value these things together in a plural society and allowing them to flourish for the good of us all. This ideal offers a vision and ambition to strive for in RE."

Lat Blaylock in his presentation explored in more detail how inter faith issues might be tackled in the classroom and offered some specific examples of good practice, also drawing attention to the units on inter faith issues included in the new QCA schemes of work. He pointed out that while agreed RE syllabuses include many good examples of statements of intent to promote tolerance, sensitivity and respect, only a few include provision directly to address questions of the relationship between different faith communities. He stressed the need for research into the effects of RE on relations between communities and an understanding of our plural society and underlined the importance of promoting and encouraging best practice, empowering teachers with ideas, resources and opportunities. He offered some practical suggestions for taking this forward. In closing, he suggested that there is now a need for "a religious education which is bold enough to move on up to explore these big inter faith questions."

Two panels of speakers supplemented these presentations by offering perspectives from different interest groups; faith communities; education authorities; OFSTED and SACREs.

The seminar was generously supported by grants from the Edward Cadbury Charitable Trust and the Shap Working Party on World Religions in Education. A full report of the seminar is being prepared for publication.

The seminar explored in small discussion groups a range of different topics:

Inter faith issues and the curriculum - do SACREs have a special contribution to make?

Inter faith issues with younger pupils

What would does good practice look like at key stages 3 and 4, including GCSE short courses?

Resources for teaching inter faith issues

What is the role of the teacher in teaching inter faith issues?

The Inter Faith Network for the UK

The Inter Faith Network was founded in 1987. It works with its member bodies to promote good relations between the faith communities in the UK, to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make the UK a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions where all can practise their faith with integrity.

The Network:

- Provides information on faith communities and on inter faith affairs
- Advises on multi faith projects and inter faith issues
- Publishes materials to aid work in the religious and inter faith sectors
- Fosters inter faith co-operation on social issues
- Holds regular meetings where social and religious questions of concern to the different faith communities can be examined together
- Links 89 member organisations including: representative bodies from the different faith communities; inter faith organisations; local inter faith groups; educational and academic bodies

NATIONAL UPDATE

Prime Minister endorses review of consultation and representation of faith communities

The Government is to review the arrangements for its consultation of faith communities and for their representation at national events. The Prime Minister, Tony Blair, made the first public announcement of the review in his speech to the Christian Socialist Movement (CSM) conference on 29 March and said that the review has his full backing. The review is in line with a recommendation made by the Millennium "Lambeth Group" at its final meeting last autumn.

The conference saw the launch of the CSM's report Faith in Politics. Rev David Haslam, its Chair, gave a particular welcome to members of other faith communities who had been specifically invited to attend it. The conference was held at the Methodist Central Hall in Westminster and included contributions from Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh speakers. Graham Dale, Director of the CSM, commented that "faith communities are an integral part of our neighbourhoods. They are part of the 24/7 society - present 24 hours a day, 7 days a week - after the social workers and local government officers have gone home - listening to the heartbeat of the community - and after listening acting on their behalf."

One of the keynote addresses came from Indarjit Singh of the Network of Sikh Organisations. He said that "in recent years co-operation between different faith leaders has been truly phenomenal" and praised the work of the Inter Faith Network in encouraging "dialogue that recognises that different religions are not barriers between people, but gateways to a fuller understanding and enrichment of life".

In his address to the conference Tony Blair acknowledged that "our major faith traditions, all of them more historic and deeply rooted than any political party or ideology, play a fundamental role in supporting and propagating values which bind us together as a nation". He then went on to outline how his Government wanted to work with the faith communities for the common good.

The Faith in Politics report is based on a series of interviews with faith community representatives in which they were asked for their views on how far the Government had reflected, or not, their community's principles and priorities in its policies and performance since 1997. Findings included a commitment to the political process as a means to build a good society; that while the Government was willing to talk and work with faith communities this process now had to go deeper; and that poverty, both at home and abroad, and the protection of family life were key concerns to all faith communities. The report is available from CSM, Westminster Central Hall, London, SW1H 9NH, price £5.

Oldham faith communities give united anti-racism message

Disturbances in past weeks in Oldham, Leeds and Bradford have underlined for faith communities there the importance of their efforts to work together in tackling racism and social problems in these areas.

The most serious riots were in Oldham. Over 150 people, including religious leaders, politicians and those involved in race relations work, attended a meeting on 30 May organised by Oldham United Against Racism. Alama Naqshbandi, Rabbi Dr Brian Fox and Rt Revd Michael Lewis, the Anglican Bishop of Middleton, expressed their determination to oppose racism. The Bishop said afterwards "There was solidarity between the religious leaders and politicians of goodwill, though feelings were running strongly. We all tried to speak from the heart".

Tension is still high in the area and concerns have been expressed at the number of votes cast for British National Party candidates who stood in the two Oldham constituencies in the recent General Election.

Reports on religious discrimination

In February the Home Office published the reports of two research projects on religious discrimination in England and Wales. These are: the final report by the University of Derby project team (reported on in the summer 2000 issue of Inter Faith Update); and a report by the Faculty of Public Law at the University of Cambridge. The reports are available at the Home Office web site at: <http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/horspubs1.html>

The interim report by the University of Derby team was based primarily on a literature review and initial consultation with relevant organisations. The final report produced by the project team reports the findings of its research based primarily on interviews and discussions held in Blackburn, Cardiff, Leicester and the London Borough of Newham, together with replies to a postal questionnaire. The fieldwork and questionnaire responses report that Muslim, Hindu and Sikh communities, in particular, are concerned with religious discrimination. This was expressed both in terms of organisational policy or practice and the attitudes and behaviour of individuals. The survey also shows that ignorance and indifference to religion are of widespread concern among all faith groups.

With the adoption of the European Directive on Discrimination in Employment and Occupation at the end of last year, the Government is now required to legislate against religious discrimination in employment by the end of 2003. The Cambridge report offers an examination of the main options available to policy makers and legislators for tackling religious discrimination in employment or more widely.

Following publication of these two reports, the Home Office, at the request of the Network, arranged an initial meeting in March with faith community representatives. Further consultations on the religious discrimination issue are likely to follow soon.

Inter faith organisations meet

A meeting of national inter faith organisations was held in February in London. Representatives of the following organisations met to share information about the work of their organisations: Christians Aware Interfaith Programme; Council of Christians and Jews; Interfaith Foundation; Inter Faith Network for the UK; International Association for Religious Freedom; International Interfaith Centre; London Society of Jews and Christians; Maimonides Foundation; Minorities of Europe; Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum; Three Faiths Forum; United Religions Initiative UK; Westminster Interfaith; World Conference on Religion and Peace; and the World Congress of Faiths.

It was agreed to arrange a further meeting for the organisations to explore the scope for making their work more complementary, avoiding unintentional overlap and exploring possible areas of co-operation.

A meeting of international inter faith organisations was held in Oxford from 18-20 March, hosted by the International Interfaith Centre. It was decided to maintain a continuing informal link between them.

Faith Communities and Community Safety

The National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders (NACRO) is seeking the assistance of faith communities in compiling a briefing on Faith Communities and Community Safety. NACRO is the largest national crime reduction charity in England and Wales, working with ex-offenders, victims and people seeking to reduce and prevent crime. Statutory Crime and Disorder partnerships, which must be set up by local authorities under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, are required to involve faith communities and to address their needs and priorities. Currently, only a few partnerships have developed faith-community led groups, many of these are only consulting with a single faith community. In compiling this initial briefing NACRO aims to provide guidance to these partnerships on how best to work with faith communities. For further information please call: 020 7501 0565.

Spirit of Friendship

The Spirit of Friendship Festival will run from 11 March to 10 August 2002. It is being arranged by the organisers of the 17th Commonwealth Games being held in Manchester from 25 July – 4 August 2002.

The Festival will encompass four key elements:

- Sport - The Games themselves will involve over 5,000 people;
- Education - Each school in the UK will be asked to take part through education packs and activities;
- Culture and the arts - Multi-cultural celebrations will be held throughout the country;
- Community and Jubilee celebrations - The Festival coincides with the Queen's Golden Jubilee.

The festival could be an ideal opportunity for faith community groups and inter faith initiatives to work with other community organisations to organise events or celebrations. The festival organisers can be contacted for more information about how to get involved, by telephone, 0161 240 2165, by email, festival@manchester2002.co.uk or on the web, www.commonwealthgames.com.

Target 2015

The Government's Target 2015 programme, aimed at reducing world poverty, is working with faith community groups to increase awareness and understanding of international development issues. The Department for International Development has so far produced information packs in association with Christian Aid and CAFOD and is in the process of preparing information packs in association with UK Jewish Aid and International Development and with Muslim Aid. Further information is available from DFID, tel: 0845 300 4100.

A new GCSE education pack, Reacting to Poverty, was launched on 23 May by Islamic Relief at the Greycoat Hospital School in London. For more information call: 0870 444 3135 or see the website: www.islamic-relief.com.

Jewish/Muslim football teams play at Arsenal

Highbury football stadium is playing host to a Jewish/Muslim football tournament organised by the Maimonides Foundation. Now in its third year, the project brings together Jewish and Muslim young people. Arsenal coaches will train thirty people so that they in turn can coach up to 150 children, playing together every Sunday in June. The final will be a mixed match at the stadium on 1 July. The children, aged between 9 and 12, are based at a Jewish community centre in Edgware and an Islamic centre in Ilford.

New Archbishop of Westminster greets faith communities

Cardinal Murphy O'Connor, Catholic Archbishop of Westminster, hosted a reception for representatives of the different faith communities on 1 April at Archbishop's House in London. In his address he stated that he wishes, like his predecessors, to give a high priority to inter faith dialogue. He highlighted three areas of common concern for different faiths: the dignity of the human person, the importance of the family and the thirst for spirituality.

Flying into a multi-faith prayer room

Birmingham International Airport is the latest public building to open a dedicated multi-faith prayer room. The room aims to meet the spiritual needs of those who need a place to pray and is open to people of all religions. A light burns permanently in the room and labelled cupboards provide items used in prayer by people of different faiths.

Inter faith profile

Network Executive Committee member Hon Barnabas Leith answers some questions about the Bahá'í community and inter faith relations in the UK.

Q What does your role as Secretary General of the Bahá'í Community UK involve?

The Secretary General is an elected officer of the National Spiritual Assembly, the Bahá'í community's governing council. I work full time in this role and am supported by eight staff in our national office in Rutland Gate. It's a challenging and interesting job. Today, for instance, I've worked on a lease for offices for one of our international Bahá'í agencies; been consulted about the next edition of UK Bahá'í Review; met a visitor from the Bahá'í World Centre in Haifa, Israel; created a list of Bahá'ís who want to be part of a new national network of faith-based regeneration and community development workers; and have dealt with several phone calls, email and staff requests for advice or decisions. And that's just the morning's work!

I have a regular programme throughout the year of meeting and briefing MPs and Lords about the work of the Bahá'í community. There are two issues I generally talk to them about: one is the persecution of the Bahá'ís in various countries, particularly Iran; the other is the work that our newly launched Institute for Social Cohesion is doing. We also have an excellent working relationship with the Foreign Office. The Bahá'í National Assembly meets eleven weekends a year and an important part of my job is to prepare the necessary papers and to write the minutes. As the UK Bahá'í community's principal external representative I also attend events such as the Queen Mother's hundredth birthday service in St Paul's Cathedral.

The Bahá'í Community has just celebrated the opening of the Bahá'í Gardens on Mount Carmel, Haifa, Israel. Can you explain their significance?

Q Bahá'u'lláh, founder of the Bahá'í Faith, visited Mount Carmel a number of times in the latter years of the nineteenth century. He instructed that the remains of his prophetic forerunner, the Báb, who had been martyred in 1850, should be laid to rest in a shrine on the mountain. The golden domed shrine that houses the Báb's remains, a well known feature of Haifa, was completed in the 1950s.

The gardens and terraces, completed with the support of Bahá'í communities all over the world, are like the setting of a diamond, intended to show the jewel that is the shrine to its best effect. On 22 May, more than 3000 members of the Bahá'í faith, representing around 200 countries, joined with approximately 1000 other guests, at the foot of the mountain to witness the opening of the Terraces.

The Bahá'í faith is relatively less well known in the UK. Does this bring particular challenges for adherents?

When I became a Bahá'í in the mid-1960s very few people had heard of our community. The usual response when I said I was a Bahá'í was a blank look. Recognition has improved greatly since then. It's amazing, for example, how many people have visited one or other of our Bahá'í houses of worship, particularly the Lotus Temple in Delhi.

One of the greatest challenges for Bahá'ís has been to persuade people that the Bahá'í faith is a "proper" religion with "proper" religious teachings, practices and requirements for life, such as the recognition that Bahá'ís wish to refrain from work on their holy days. The work of inter faith organizations such as the Inter Faith Network has contributed greatly to a growing recognition that religion plays a central role in the lives of millions.

What do you feel is the contribution that the Bahá'í faith has brought to inter faith dialogue?

A commitment to building inter faith relations and developing dialogue is built into the foundations of our community. This, of course, motivates Bahá'ís all over the world to participate in all kinds of inter faith initiatives.

Q How do you see inter faith initiatives developing in the coming years?

I get quite excited when I think about the possibilities in the UK, which is home to some really solid inter faith work, not least by the Network. There's one development that I think promises a lot for the future, and that is the increasing ability of people representing different faith communities to sit down together, aware of what is shared and what is distinctive about their faiths, and plan social action that is for the good of all. An example is the Multi Faith Joint National Consultation on Hospital Chaplaincies. This kind of joint action for the common good brings the spiritual and moral resources of the faith communities to bear on genuine social needs. As Bahá'ís would say, we can multiply our powers to achieve good things through unity in diversity of action.

Global Ethic Foundation Exhibition

Professor Hans Kung spoke on 17 May at the opening of a new travelling exhibition, World Religions – Universal Peace – Global Ethic hosted by German Ambassador Dr von Ploetz at the German Embassy in London. The exhibition panels and accompanying brochures are based on his writings and highlight, from his perspective, the ethical commandments of Buddhism, Hinduism, Judaism, Christianity, Islam and Chinese religion. The exhibition is sponsored by the Weisfeld Foundation and is available for display in other venues.

Scottish bid for the Parliament of World Religions

After having been inspired by the 1999 Parliament of the World's Religions which took place in South Africa, a small team has formed to establish the Council for the Parliament of the World's Religions Scotland (CPWRS) in order to bid for the 2004 Parliament to be held in Scotland. Several faith community and inter faith organisations have been approached to participate in the setting up of the organisation and in preparing the bid. For more information you can contact Neil Walker by email at njwalk99@hotmail.com.

REGIONAL UPDATE

West Midlands Link Meeting

The West Midlands Regional Link Meeting was hosted by the Wolverhampton Inter-Faith Group at their Inter Faith Centre on 26 April. The following is a summary of the reports presented from the initiatives represented at the Meeting.

Wolverhampton Inter-Faith Group

The Group was recently given a grant from Wolverhampton City Council to refurbish its Inter Faith Centre. The Group is one of the oldest established inter faith groups in the UK. Its current activities include: running the inter faith centre; work with schools and Wolverhampton SACRE; arranging the inter faith component of the annual peace service; and work with public services such as the local NHS Trust and the Police.

The Group has also produced a photographic exhibition and a directory of Wolverhampton's faith communities. They have been asked by Wolverhampton City Council to put together the inter faith component of an exhibition for schools. The Group has also recently put in a bid, which is part of a regeneration budget, to establish an RE resource centre.

The Group is well supported by the local faith communities. On a recent visit to the area Rt Hon Clare Short, the Secretary of State for International Development, visited the Inter Faith Centre and spoke about the important role of faith communities in the local community.

Dudley Council of Faiths

The Council had been an active one in the past but over the last few years the membership has dwindled. However, having been stimulated by the Inter Faith Network / Inner Cities Religious Council conference in Birmingham in June 2000, the current committee plan to re-launch the Group. They are looking to set up a new committee and a seminar for up to 200 people is being planned for the autumn. The Council of Faiths has the use of a resource centre run by the Dudley Racial Equality Council.

Birmingham Council of Faiths

The Council was established in 1974 and now has representatives of nine different faith communities in membership. One of the main achievements of the Council has been the recognition of the different faiths by the local authority. While in the past faith did not have a place in civic occasions, the City Council now actively celebrates festivals of different faiths. The Council hopes to receive some local authority funding in the near future.

The Council's ongoing work includes co-operation with the chaplaincy team at University College Hospital and Birmingham SACRE. The Council assists in arranging school visits to places of worship. Council members have taken part in exchange visits to other European cities such as Graz in Austria (as invited guests of the Council of European Churches) and Brussels to visit the European Commission. The Council has also been host to other groups who are interested in building inter faith initiatives in their countries, recently from Ireland and Denmark.

Catholic Committee on Other Faiths

The Catholic Church is working on an ecumenical basis with other denominations in the West Midlands to build better relations with people of other faiths. Recent activities have included working with the local authority on a civic event which included contributions from different faiths. Chris Hewer, the inter faith adviser to the Anglican Bishop of Aston, has helped to set up a local Christian/Muslim dialogue.

There has been a healthy dialogue between the Catholic group and Sikhs at the Guru Nanak Nishkam Sevak Jatha Gurdwara. A group from the Gurdwara visited Rome last year and were received by the Pope. Links are also developing with other Sikh gurdwaras and also within the Buddhist community.

Birmingham City Council

Deepak Naik explained that he is working on a research project for the City Council looking at ways the local authority can best consult and work with local faith communities. The present research has involved interviewing a wide range of people and organisations, including public services such as the police and local health trusts, to ask in what ways they would like to be able to consult with faith communities.

Hereford

Rev Gerald Restall, the Inter Faith Adviser to the Anglican Bishop of Hereford, presented news from Hereford, a relatively mono-faith area. There is an active branch of the Council for Christians and Jews. He helps to produce a quarterly bulletin on inter faith issues designed for Church of England members. He has been involved with a series of study days entitled Our Neighbours Faith. Although they have not had large attendances, they have been appreciated by those attending them. He runs a lay training course and, after requests for an inter faith module for the course, is currently preparing for this. Recently he has been approached by local police requesting contacts with faith communities in the area.

Sandwell

Rev Jon Gurling of the Sandwell Churches Link project said that the Inter Faith Network/Inner Cities Religious Council conference held in Birmingham in June 2000 was attended by a representative of Sandwell Borough Council, who has since been keen for the local authority to forge links with local faith communities.

Coventry

It was reported that the Phoenix Project, a redevelopment project in Coventry City Centre, was on track. The Coventry Inter Faith Forum is being given space in the development in the City Centre to establish an inter faith resource centre.

West Midlands Churches Forum

Rev Mark Fisher reported on the founding of the Forum, which aims to relate to the newly established West Midlands Regional Development Agency and the Assembly linked to it.

Discussion on regionalisation issues

The Anglican Bishop of Wolverhampton has a seat on the Black Country Consortium (BCC) but makes it clear that he sees himself representing the interests of all faith communities in the area rather than just his own. The BCC is linked to the West Midlands Development Agency, Advantage West Midlands. Currently there is only one reserved place on the West Midlands Regional Assembly for the voluntary sector as a whole. Advantage West Midlands has argued that it is too complex to offer a "faiths" seat, but has now agreed to include one place in an enlarged Chamber next year. The question of how this one seat is to be filled remains. It is hoped that Advantage West Midlands will fund research into the best way for the faiths to be represented. There is likely to be a conference for faith communities next spring with a view to addressing this issue. This seems to be a problematic issue in most of the English regions, partly because of the lack of existing regional faith structures. In many ways the opportunities for faith communities to be involved with Government at national, regional and local level are outstripping their capacity to respond effectively to these.

South East Link Meeting

The South East (North) Regional Link Meeting organised by the Inter Faith Network was held on 15 May at The Friends Meeting House, Bedford. Participants from inter faith initiatives from across the region attended and shared news from their groups and heard reports from groups which could not be represented on this occasion.

Aylesbury

Revd Peter Atkinson sees his work as a Team Missioner as an opportunity for inter faith encounter and has built up a good relationship with the imam of the local mosque, who has visited his church on several occasions. He reported an interesting development in Aylesbury where the Mayor this year is a Muslim and has appointed an imam jointly with the local Anglican rector as Mayor's Chaplains.

Bedford Council of Faiths

The Council holds its meetings in different venues, with the next one being hosted by the local gurdwara. Last autumn a series of six fortnightly meetings was held. Each meeting discussed a specific topic, common to different faiths, such as marriage. It is hoped to repeat this successful series this autumn.

The Council also organises an annual pilgrimage around different places of worship in Bedford. This year the Mayor of Bedford invited the Council to help to organise a multi-faith dimension to the civic service.

Luton Council of Faiths

The Council changed its name from the Luton Inter Faith Forum last July. The Committee, which includes representatives of all the major communities in the area, meets bi-monthly. It has good relations with the local authority and other local service providers. The local authority has now agreed to fund 50% of the staff costs of a part-time Community Faiths Worker for the Council. The Council chose not to ask for more than this proportion of the cost of the post in order to retain its independence, but now faces the task of raising the balance of the funding required for it. They have secretarial support from the Grassroots Centre, which is a Christian based initiative, and is also supported by several places of worship. Meetings of the Council take place in a variety of faith community venues.

The Luton Council of Faiths has been working informally with the University of Luton for some time. This year the inter faith module, that they have jointly developed, will be an official course of study at the University. Each year since 1997 the Council has been working with the Mayor's office on arranging a multi-faith dimension to the annual civic service. The Council sees as one of its roles promoting Luton as a multi-cultural town and this characteristic is often emphasised in the weekly religious programme on the local radio station.

Interfaith Milton Keynes

An inter faith discussion group has been meeting in Milton Keynes for over 20 years, but it has become more active recently. Members of the Group regularly contribute to a column in a local Sunday newspaper. The Group is asked to organise an inter faith dimension to the annual civic service, and has also been invited to organise multi-faith dedications at the opening of a new office building and also a new theatre in Milton Keynes. The Group works with local schools to arrange visits from speakers of different faiths, and was invited by the local authority to help in setting up the local SACRE when Milton Keynes became a unitary authority and assumed responsibility for education.

Reading Inter Faith Group

The Group provides assistance in organising an inter faith dimension to the annual civic service and also arranges occasional lectures. A recent one was given by Peggy Morgan of the Shap Working Party on World Religions in Education.

Watford Inter Faith Group

Last year the Group held a series of three evening events entitled The Beauty of Holiness. Each evening included presentations from three different faith communities. This series is being followed up this summer with the theme being The Music of Holiness. The Group visited a Shavuot service at the Radlett and Bushey Reform Synagogue and would take part in the Westminster Interfaith pilgrimage on 2 June. Future plans of the Group include organising an event during the Week of Prayer for World Peace in October and assisting with a Holocaust Memorial Day event in January 2002.

Wycombe Sharing of Faiths

The group has a mailing list of about 60 people, with a "core" group of about 20 active members. They have a new Muslim member of their committee, who was also standing as a Parliamentary candidate in the General Election, which has led to some interesting discussions. The group has a regular programme of activities. In March a member of the South Buckinghamshire Jewish Group gave a talk about the Jewish tradition of Passover (Pesach). During May members of the group visited the Nipponzai Myohoji Buddhist Community in Milton Keynes and a tea party is planned for July. The group will be holding its annual meeting in September.

Regionalisation Issues

Further discussion touched upon the setting up of a Faiths Forum for the South East, which is holding a meeting in Central London on 12 September. This Forum was launched about two years ago as a means for faith communities to interact with the South East England Development Agency (SEEDA) and Regional Assembly. A representative of the Forum has a seat on the Assembly and meetings of the Forum give faith communities an opportunity to raise concerns and provide feedback into the Assembly. Initially the Forum met as frequently as once every quarter, but the meetings have now become less regular. Participants expressed a concern that there is very little input to the Forum from faith communities other than the Christian Churches. It is hoped that the September meeting will encourage a wider participation in its work.

Regional Round Up

Bath

At the turn of the year, the Mayor of Bath has traditionally called fellow citizens to pray for the city in the New Year. For many years, this Call has been marked by an ecumenical Christian service with a speaker. During late 1997, the Mayor asked for the Call in 1998 to be an inter faith event. Bath Interfaith Group helped to prepare an act of worship, at which Rev Marcus Braybrooke spoke. Her successor felt that this pattern should be repeated and invited Dr Zaki Badawi to speak the following year. The headline in the local evening paper, implying that a Muslim was to lead the Call, produced the largest and most contentious correspondence ever.

Following the controversy of the 1999 event the Call to Prayer in 2000 was Christian in character. However, in 2001, there have been two events: a Christian service held on 3 January; and a Multi-faith event on Sunday 21 January. This event featured a series of readings by representatives of different faith communities and the main address was given by Sir Sigmund Sternberg.

Bradford

An inter-religious day conference, Faith and Community in a Multi-faith Society, was held on 28 April at the Thornbury Centre in Bradford. The conference followed a series of four meetings which had taken place from November 2000 to April 2001 exploring in turn Islam, Sikhism, Hinduism and Christianity. Speakers at the conference included: Rt Revd David Smith, Bishop of Bradford; Ayub Laher, Vice President of the Bradford Council of Mosques and speakers from the Hindu and Sikh communities of Bradford

Eastern England

Suffolk Inter Faith Resource was host to a meeting of faith community organisations in the East of England on 13 June to discuss how they can relate to the East of England Regional Development Agency. It was decided to establish an East of England Faiths Agency, which will have its inaugural meeting later this year.

Gloucestershire

Gloucestershire Inter Faith Action (GIFA) has produced a set of A3 posters designed for use in schools. These were displayed at a SACRE training day organised by Gloucestershire SACRE. Speakers at the event included Bill Gent from Redbridge Local Education Authority and Lat Blaylock of the Professional Council for RE. GIFA followed this up with an open meeting on "RE in Schools" on 24 May.

Westminster Interfaith in Luton and Hertfordshire

Westminster Interfaith held their 16th annual Multi-faith Pilgrimage for Peace on 2 June. This year as the places being visited were further apart, three coaches and a mini-bus were hired to ferry the pilgrims between Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh places of worship in Luton, St Albans, Great Gaddesden, Bushey and Aldenham. About 130 pilgrims took part, with several others joining while the pilgrims passed through their towns.

Manchester

Manchester Interfaith Forum held its first AGM on 10 May. The well attended meeting was followed by a presentation by Craig Russell from the United Religions Initiative.

North Kent

The North Kent Council for Interfaith Relations held a third birthday celebration and their annual meeting on 31 May at the North West Kent College in Gravesend. After a buffet lunch prepared by students of the College, Malcolm Bell, Principal of the College, welcomed guests to the meeting. Rev Malcolm Cooper presented a report on the work of the Council over the last three years. Brian Pearce, Director of the Inter Faith Network, gave his reflections on current inter faith work in the UK and on the role of local initiatives.

This was followed by a discussion in particular about the setting up of Regional Development Assemblies and the role that faith communities can play in this process.

Peterborough

The inaugural meeting of the Peterborough Faiths Forum, sponsored by the Peterborough Inter-Faith Council and arranged by Rev Lesley Mathias, took place on 27 February 2001 at the Central Library in Peterborough. This was attended by representatives of the different faith communities (Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh) and representatives of statutory and voluntary organisations, including the Chief Executive of the City Council. The aim of the Forum is to provide a meeting ground for the local authority, police and social services to engage with faith concerns.

Faiths condemn 11 September terrorist attacks

Diary Dates	11

On 11 September the twin towers of the World Trade Centre in New York collapsed after two hi-jacked commercial aircraft were flown headlong into them. Two further planes were crashed in Washington DC and in Pennsylvania, the first of these hitting the Pentagon. Messages of condolence for the victims, their families and the American people as a whole were sent from around the world.

The UK's faith communities have been united in their condemnation of these terrorist attacks in the USA. On the day after them the Archbishop of Canterbury issued a joint statement with Sheikh Dr Zaki Badawi, Cardinal Cormac Murphy O'Connor, Archbishop of Westminster, and Professor Jonathan Sacks, the Chief Rabbi of the United Hebrew Congregations of the Commonwealth, at Lambeth Palace. The statement said that, "as Christian, Jewish and Muslim religious leaders, we believe that it is vital amid so much anguish and suffering to nourish all that we hold in common and to resist all that would drive us apart". Statements from many other religious leaders and groups followed swiftly.

Political response

Soon after the tragedy, news started to emerge of attacks on and harassment of Muslims and members of other Middle Eastern and Asian communities in this country. In response, the Home Secretary, Rt Hon David Blunkett MP, issued a statement on 12 September in which he said, "It would be wholly wrong if anyone in the UK or elsewhere were to stigmatise the Muslim or any other community of faith in this country."

The Prime Minister stressed in his press statement of 12 September and again in his address to the special meeting of the House of Commons on 14 September, that "It is terrorism that is the enemy and not Islam". At a meeting with senior Muslim leaders on 27 September he said, "Our fight is not with Islam or indeed with the people of Afghanistan. Our fight is with those who planned these terrible atrocities and those who harbour them".

Services of remembrance

A national day of mourning for those who had died in the attacks on 11 September was held on 14 September. Throughout the UK and elsewhere in Europe, people observed a three minute silence at 11.00 am. Leaders of Britain's faith communities were invited to a National Service of Remembrance held at St Paul's Cathedral in London. Similar events took place around the country in places of worship, community centres and town halls, many of which involved people from different faiths. In some places these were the first occasions on which a multi faith event had ever been held.

Backlash

In the days following the events of 11 September over a hundred incidents involving harassment and attacks on individuals and places of worship were reported. These were mainly directed at Muslims and mosques, but there were a number involving Sikhs and a Hindu place of worship was also attacked. Many people in these communities felt more insecure about going about their daily routines and some organisations issued advice on how the risk of attack could be reduced. Muslim women wearing hijab have faced particular problems. In two of the worst of the physical attacks an Afghan taxi driver was left paralysed after being set upon in west London and a Muslim woman in Swindon was attacked with a baseball bat. Mosques in several places including Belfast, Bolton, Edinburgh, South London and Manchester were the target of attacks.

Reports of verbal abuse and offensive phone and email messages were also widespread. However, Muslim organisations reported that they had also received many positive, supportive messages. The Muslim News noted on 25 September that amid the backlash of attacks and verbal abuse, there had been many supportive words and actions, including teachers giving extra support to Muslim children and university staff offering accommodation to Muslim students who felt threatened.

In many parts of the country, new inter faith conversations began overnight as local places of worship moved swiftly to send messages of solidarity to their nearest mosques.

Police forces around the country called meetings for local faith communities to reassure them that those committing offences against them would be dealt with severely. In many places, in particular near mosques, extra police were deployed. By mid October the number of incidents being reported had dropped significantly.

Extension of the law on incitement to cover religious hatred

The Home Secretary announced on 3 October his intention that the law should be extended to cover incitement to religious, as well as racial, hatred. Consideration will also be given to the creation of a new category of “religiously aggravated offences” to complement that of racially aggravated offences already covered by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. Speaking at the Labour Party Conference, he said, “I am ... determined to ensure that religion is not used to divide and fragment communities in this country in this difficult time. That is why I will toughen up our incitement laws to ensure attention-seekers and extremists cannot abuse our rights of free speech to stir up tensions in our cities and towns”. On 15 October Parliament was told that the maximum penalty for both religious and racial incitement offences is to be increased from two to seven years.

Network response

A letter was sent on 18 September to Network member bodies and a range of other organisations about the situation, which asked if there were particular steps they wished the Network to take.

The Executive Committee of the Inter Faith Network met on 1 October. It remembered in silence all those who had died in, or had been bereaved through, the tragic events of 11 September and all those suffering in the aftermath. A press release was issued and also a longer document entitled Reflections on Recent

The Inter Faith Network for the UK

The Inter Faith Network was founded in 1987. It works with its member bodies to promote good relations between the faith communities in the UK, to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make the UK a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions where all can practise their faith with integrity. The Network:

- Provides information on faith communities and on inter faith affairs
- Advises on multi faith projects and inter faith issues
- Publishes materials to aid work in the religious and inter faith sectors
- Fosters inter faith co-operation on social issues
- Holds regular meetings where social and religious questions of concern to the different faith communities can be examined together
- Links 92 member organisations including: representative bodies from the different faith communities; inter faith organisations; local inter faith groups; educational and academic bodies

PRESS RELEASE ON 1 OCTOBER 2001

“At today’s meeting of the Executive Committee of the Inter Faith Network, members of the Baha’i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jain, Jewish, Muslim, Sikh and Zoroastrian faiths remembered in silence all those who had died in, or had been bereaved through, the tragic events of 11 September and all those suffering in the aftermath.

The meeting was chaired by Network Co-Chairs, Rt Revd Tom Butler and Mrs Rosalind Preston, and also attended by the Network’s Vice-Chairs, Dr Manazir Ahsan, Mrs Saraswati Dave, Mr Jehangir Sarosh and Mr Jagjiwan Singh. They said, “In our United Kingdom, a small minority may try to spread disharmony. But an overwhelming majority believe in the common good and the virtues of tolerance, respect and peaceful co-existence. Together, drawing on the strength our individual faiths offer us, and in co-operation with others, we are building our shared future on a firm foundation. Out of tragedy we must find opportunity for new good”.

Some of the comments on recent events have suggested that religion is a cause of them. In the view of the Network’s Committee, we are not dealing in the present context with an inherent conflict between religions. In the last three weeks, however, in this country as well as elsewhere it has been a situation in which, because of ignorance and racist malice, some Muslims, Sikhs and others are being scapegoated because of their religion or their appearance. There have also been attacks on a number of places of worship. We deplore all harassment and attacks and we ask people of every faith and none to reach out the hand of friendship to one another at this time and to consider whether there are ways that they can offer to help make good the damage to the places of worship.

We are heartened by the strong commitment of local faith communities and others across our country to working together to help overcome the problems of their local areas and to stand firm against those who seek to undermine the harmony of our society. Britain is now a multi cultural, multi racial and multi faith society, with many dimensions to its diversity. We can rightly celebrate this as a source of richness which provides us with resources which help us to understand both ourselves and our world and to deal with its problems. The clear commitment, evident again in recent weeks, of the political and religious leaders of this country to endorse the need to respect this diversity, while seeking unity within it, is much to be welcomed.”

National day of prayer

On 2 October the Archbishop of Canterbury and other Church leaders launched an “Invitation to Prayer”. People of all Christian denominations as well as those of other faiths were encouraged to pray for peace, justice and reconciliation between peoples and faiths on Friday 5 October.

Concern over military action

Military action by US armed forces, with UK assistance, began in Afghanistan on 7 October. Faith communities have expressed great concern about the situation there. Although different views have been expressed about the appropriateness of this retaliatory action, there is a general concern about its humanitarian effects.

On 8 October the Prime Minister met leading members of the Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh communities at 10 Downing Street to discuss the events of 11 September and their aftermath. Among the religious leaders at the meeting were the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Liverpool, the Chief Rabbi, the General Secretary of the Muslim Council of Britain (MCB), the President of the National Council of Hindu Temples and the Director of the Network of Sikh Organisations.

Although it had been hoped to hold the meeting earlier, it took place the day after the start of the military action. Several of those present at the meeting expressed anxiety over this development.

A number of religious organisations issued statements and open letters following the start of military action. The MCB expressed 'grave concern' over the military strikes on 7 September and stressed that the humanitarian needs of the people of Afghanistan must be the foremost concern. They also urged "British Muslims to act with utmost patience and not let themselves be provoked". A number of Church leaders of Churches Together in Britain and Ireland (CTBI) wrote to the Prime Minister on 9 October. The letter stressed the need for justice, not revenge, to be at the root of the response and expressed anxiety about the loss of civilian life and the plight of refugees.

There is also a strong awareness among the different communities of the need to deal with the underlying causes of poverty and injustice in which the roots of terrorism can lie.

Inter faith response to the 11 September attacks

The Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum held its regular meeting on 12 September, with Jonathan Gorsky of the Council of Christians and Jews as the invited speaker. The topic of the meeting was changed to respond to the events of the previous day and all present expressed their condemnation of the attacks and their concerns for the future.

The Moderator of the Church in Scotland, Rt Rev James Miller invited representatives of several faith communities to join him on 2 October for the launch in Scotland of the Invitation to Prayer initiative.

The Inter Faith Council for Wales/Cyngor Cyd-Ffydd Cymru in association with the Commission for Racial Equality, Wales/Comisiwn Cydraddoldeb Hiliol, Cymru organised an event at the Temple of Peace in Cardiff on 19 September. The keynote speaker was Lord Dafydd Elis-Thomas, the President of the Inter Faith Council. The meeting was introduced by Dr Mashuq Ally, Chairman of the Council. Representatives of the Baha'i, Christian, Hindu, Jewish and Muslim faiths also contributed to the event.

Welsh First Minister Rhodri Morgan met with faith community representatives on 4 October to address the issue of attacks on Muslim and other communities following the terrorist attacks in the USA. He also announced proposals to set up a forum for contact between the Welsh Assembly and the faith communities of Wales.

The Three Faiths Forum held a special meeting on 24 September in London. Invited guests included senior diplomats from a number of countries as well as representatives from the Board of Deputies of British Jews, Muslim Council of Britain and inter faith organisations. The meeting began with a non-denominational prayer offered by the Archbishop of Thyateira and Great Britain.

Local inter faith responses

Many local inter faith initiatives were taken to respond quickly to the attacks in the USA and were able to bring together people of different faiths to offer prayers for the victims of the attacks and to reflect on the aftermath. The links between communities which have been established over recent years proved to be of great value at this difficult time.

Just a few of the many events are listed below:

- ❑ The Christian and Muslim Co-Chairs of North Kirklees Interfaith Council issued a joint statement on 13 September calling upon "Christians and Muslims, together with people of all faiths and of no faith to stand together as people of peace."
- ❑ Bolton Interfaith Council helped to arrange a memorial service at Bolton Town Hall. Speakers included the Mayor of Bolton, Uttambhai Mistry of the Hindu community and Rt Rev David Gillet, the Anglican Bishop of Bolton. Readings and prayers from the Christian, Hindu and Muslim faiths were said.
- ❑ Members of Loughborough Council of Faiths joined the Mayor and Mayoress of Charnwood and others at an event held at Loughborough Mosque on 18 September.
- ❑ An inter faith service was held at the West London Synagogue on 21 September. The congregation, which included the Lord Mayor of Westminster heard readings from representatives of the Buddhist, Christian, Jewish and Muslim faiths.
- ❑ Cambridge Inter-Faith Group arranged a visit to the evening prayer at Cambridge Mosque on 21 September.
- ❑ Members of Luton Council of Faiths helped to organise an event of remembrance at Luton Town Hall on 23 September.
- ❑ On 30 September members of the Muslim community in Manchester held a fund raising meal in aid of the victims of the US terrorist attacks. Invited guests included local councillors, Christian leaders and representation from the Manchester Interfaith Forum. Earlier in the week a mosque in Manchester had been damaged and there was a significant response of help and solidarity from other faith communities including offers of accommodation if required.

- ❑ The London Civic Forum in association with the Muslim Council of Britain (MCB) organised an event, Standing Together Against Intolerance, at the Westminster Central Hall on 3 October. Speakers included Mahmud Al-Rashid of the MCB; Rt Revd and Rt Hon Richard Chartres, Bishop of London and Atma Singh, the Mayor's Adviser on Asian Affairs. A statement was read by representatives of different faiths who invited others to sign the statement to show their support.
- ❑ In an event organised by East Renfrewshire Council, religious and community leaders from Glasgow's different faith communities planted a tree in memory of those who died in the US terrorist attack
- ❑ Brent Inter Faith held a peace vigil at the London Inter Faith Centre on 6 October. This was followed by visits to local places of worship.
- ❑ Leeds Faith Communities Liaison Panel and Leeds Concord Interfaith Fellowship organised a gathering for peace and justice at Victoria Gardens on 12 October. Leaders of seven faith communities led the prayers and readings.
- ❑ 400 people attended a gathering at Ealing Town Hall, London on 14 October. Father Michael Barnes of Heythrop College and Abdullah Trevathan, Headteacher of the Islamia Primary School in Brent, hosted the event which was also attended by the Mayor of Ealing and local MP's.

NETWORK NEWS

The Network's Annual General Meeting took place on 2 July at Birmingham City Council House. At the meeting the following organisations were accepted into membership of the Network:

Inter Faith Organisations Category:

The Interfaith Foundation

United Religions Initiative (Britain and Ireland)

Local Inter Faith Groups:

South London Inter Faith Group

Watford Inter Faith Association

Election of Officers and Executive Committee members

At the AGM, Dr Manazir Ahsan MBE, of the Muslim community stepped down from the position of Co-Chair, but remains a Vice-Chair of the Network. In his place Rosalind Preston OBE of the Jewish Community was elected to serve as Co-Chair alongside Rt Revd Dr Tom Butler. Three new Vice-Chairs were elected: Saraswati Dave of the Hindu community; Jehangir Sarosh of the Zoroastrian community; and Jagjivan Singh of the Sikh community to take the place of Om Parkash Sharma MBE, Indarjit Singh OBE and Most Ven Dr M Vajiragnana, who all remain as Executive Committee members.

The following were elected to serve on the Executive Committee for the first time:

Ravinder Kaur Nijjar, from the Sikh community in Scotland
 Shaunaka Rishi das, from the Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum
 Imam Dr Abduljalil Sajid of the Brighton and Hove Inter-Faith Contact Group
 Alan Schwartz of the Cardiff Interfaith Association

Bimal Krishna das, Secretary of the National Council of Hindu Temples was subsequently co-opted to fill a vacancy for a Hindu member of the Committee.

Thanks for their services were expressed to the following members who stepped down at the meeting from membership of the Committee: Bhupinder Kaur Bagga; Angela Jagger; Saroj Lal; Jean Potter; and Moulana Shahid Raza.

Four workshop sessions took place on: faith-based social initiatives in the UK; faith-based overseas aid work; the community of living beings: service to animals in the natural world; and serving the community through one's profession.

The final plenary session was chaired by Rosalind Preston. Sarah Lindsell, Director of the Catholic Agency for Social Concerns, spoke about the factors which needed to be taken into account by a faith community organisation in considering whether to seek government funding for its work.

A full record of the meeting is available from the Network Office priced £2.50 plus £1.25 postage and packing.

Faith and service to the community

The 2001 National Meeting of the Inter Faith Network took place on 2 July 2001 at the Birmingham City Council House, following the AGM. Its theme was Faith and Service to the Community. Bishop Tom Butler, Network Co-Chair, introducing the meeting, emphasised the important role of faith communities in service to others and the value of different faiths working co-operatively on projects.

Rosalind Preston, newly elected Network Co-Chair and Chair of Nightingale, a major residential home for members of the Jewish community, and Mental Health Manager for the Harrow and Hillingdon Community Health Trust, spoke from a Jewish perspective about volunteering in this country.

Ravinder Singh, a founder member of the Sikh organisation Khalsa Aid explained how this new organisation was founded and described the international aid work which they have undertaken in places such as Gujarat, Kosovo and Turkey. Priyya Lukka, a Hindu researcher at the Institute for Volunteering, offered insights from her exploration of the links between faith and volunteering.

NATIONAL UPDATE

Initiatives to tackle causes of Summer disturbances

The disturbances in Bradford, Burnley and Oldham this summer have been followed by various attempts to understand the background and the causes of these. On 10 July the Home Secretary, Rt Hon David Blunkett MP, set out details of an inter-departmental Ministerial group, chaired by Rt Hon John Denham MP, the Minister of State for Crime Reduction, Policing and Community Safety, to look at how the risk of future disorder can be minimised. In his statement to the House of Commons he said, "Solutions to the problems manifested in Oldham, Burnley and Bradford have to be found at a local level. But there is still a role for Government to help local communities and pull together information." The Ministerial group will look at what practical help the Government can give to local communities and is encouraging and supporting local councils to look pro-actively at the relationships between various communities in their areas.

The Bradford Race Review, chaired by Lord Ouseley, the former Chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality, was published on 12 July. Although it was commissioned before the disturbances took place, many of its recommendations are very relevant to the issues involved.

In Burnley, links between Christian and Muslim leaders have been strengthened and a joint statement was issued on 25 June by the Anglican Diocese of Burnley and the Lancashire Council of Mosques expressing their concern over the disturbances and their commitment to living and working together for the common good of the whole community. The statement condemned the violence and called upon the people of Lancashire to help build bridges across differences and celebrate the diversity of race and religion. It was signed by Rt Rev John Goddard, Bishop of Burnley and Moulana Ahmed Sidat, Chairman of Lancashire Council of Mosques.

Steps also being taken to establish an inter faith forum in Oldham.

Churches launch discussion on religious discrimination

The launch of a new discussion document Religious Discrimination: a Christian Response took place at Church House, London on 10 September. This follows the Home Office commissioned research project by the University of Derby into religious discrimination and is designed to make Christians aware of the issues surrounding religious discrimination. The event was chaired by Baroness Richardson, the Moderator of the Churches' Commission on Inter Faith Relations. Revd Canon Dr Michael Iprgrave introduced the report and Lord Janner and Lord Dholakia offered their reflections on it.

The document is priced at £5.95 (plus £2 postage and packing) and is available from CTBI Publications tel 020 7898 1300 web: www.chbookshop.co.uk.

Inter faith exhibition in Northern Ireland

The In Good Faith: Religions in Northern Ireland exhibition was launched on 11 October at a special event held in the Throne Room of Hillsborough Castle. The exhibition provides an illustrated account of the many different faiths in Northern Ireland: Baha'i; Buddhist; Chinese; Christian; Hindu; Jewish; Muslim; and Sikh. The exhibition is an initiative of the Northern Ireland Inter-Faith Forum and is supported by Diversity 21 and the BBC and co-funded by an EU Special Support Programme. The exhibition will travel to various locations around Northern Ireland. Further information is available from Jane Campbell at Diversity 21 Tel: 028 9025 8885 or e-mail: diversity21@nics.gov.uk

Faiths forums established in the English regions

The process of establishing regional governmental structures in England with the setting up of Regional Development Agencies and Regional Chambers has encouraged the setting up of new regionally based multi-faith bodies. One such body, the South East Faiths Forum, met on 12 September in Westminster Central Hall in London to discuss issues of common concern to the faith communities in the region. The meeting was chaired by Revd David Grimwood, currently a member of the Regional Assembly as a representative from the faith communities. Similar bodies have also been established in the East of England, the East Midlands and the South West.

Review of coroner services

The Home Office has appointed a group to review coroner services. It includes among its members Mrs Elizabeth Hodder, Equal Opportunities Commissioner, and Mr Iqbal Sacranie, former Secretary General of the Muslim Council of Britain. The Review would be pleased to hear from representative groups of faith communities and of bereaved families. It is considering, among other matters, the most effective arrangements following a death, including proposals for a system of medical examiners and the issue of post mortems. The group hopes to receive comments by the end of 2001. They can be sent to: The Review of Coroner Services, 100 Pall Mall, London SW1Y 5HP.

Conference on the future of multi ethnic Britain

The World Congress of Faiths and the British Chapter of the International Association for Religious Freedom (IARF) and the Leicester Council of Faiths hosted a conference on the Future of Multi-Ethnic Britain. This took its title from a report by a Commission chaired by Lord Bhikhu Parekh and set up by the Runnymede Trust. The conference took place at the University of Leicester from 5-7 August and was attended by eighty delegates from different faiths. Speakers included: Robin Richardson, the editor of the Runnymede Report; Judge Mota Singh;

Inter Faith Issues and the RE Curriculum

The report of the Seminar held on 4 June by the Inter Faith Network in association with the National Association of SACREs will be available from the Network office next month.

Inter faith profile

Mrs Ravinder Kaur Nijjar was elected as an Executive Committee member at the July AGM. She is also a member of the Executive Committee of the Scottish Inter Faith Council.

Q How did you first get involved with inter faith dialogue?

I became involved with the Glasgow Sharing of Faiths group about 6 years ago and met people from different faiths and found that we had common interests that we wanted to share together. I was then encouraged to join other initiatives by Sister Isabel Smyth (another member of the Network's Executive Committee). Now I am on the committees of several organisations including the Scottish Inter Faith Council and the Council for a Parliament of World Religions in Scotland. I was the co-ordinator of the Glasgow Sikh community's celebration of the 300th anniversary of the Khalsa in 1999. In this capacity I felt it important to work with other organisations and faith communities.

As a teacher and a member of the Scottish Joint Committee for Religious and Moral Education you have an interest in Religious Education. In

Q what ways would you like to see RE develop in the future?

I would like to see more time being spent on the teaching of RE, because it is fundamental that children are aware that while the world is made up of different peoples, we all belong to a common humanity. Children should have a basic knowledge of all the major faiths, because education alleviates ignorance and it is ignorance, which leads to wrong attitudes, which in turn leads to hatred.

Schools have a role to play in building self-esteem and confidence in children by looking at the complex cultural, religious and civic identities that children come with. It is vital that they work towards developing the unique identity of each child and that they teach them to be good citizens who know the difference between right and wrong.

I have embarked on a Masters of Education degree programme in Religious Education at the University of Glasgow and hope that I can contribute personally to the development of the teaching of RE.

How do you think awareness of inter faith issues can be raised among local communities?

It is important for each faith community to recognise its role in conveying the basic beliefs of its own faith to its members. All faiths share important values such as peace, tolerance, respect

Q and justice. Working with these values, faith communities should aim to build bridges with the wider community, finding shared ground from which they can work to build a better future. Events such as the 300th Anniversary of the Khalsa gave people a good opportunity to learn about the Sikh faith and culture. Inter faith events such as "Meet your Neighbour", held every year at St Mungo's Museum in Glasgow, help improve inter faith understanding.

How do you see inter faith initiatives developing in the coming years?

At the moment only a relatively small number of people are involved in inter faith dialogue. I would like to see the time when the person in the street is aware of the importance of inter faith issues and is motivated to make contact and work with people of other faiths to build a better society. In the current climate inter faith understanding is of the utmost importance for world peace.

Initiatives such as the "Time for Reflection" in the Scottish Parliament, which has contributions from different faith groups and which I will be leading at the end of October, are very positive and bode well for good inter faith relations in the future.

Education White Paper

On 5 September the Government published the White Paper, Schools: Achieving Success, setting out its proposals for future developments in schools in the light of its consultations on a Green paper issued in February. Its comments on faith-based schools follow closely those in the Green Paper. It says: "We wish to welcome faith schools, with their distinctive ethos and character, into the maintained sector where there is clear local agreement." It goes on to say: "We want faith schools that come into the maintained sector to add to the inclusiveness and diversity of the school system and to be ready to work with non-denominational schools and those of other faiths." The Government is consulting widely and is also inviting responses to the proposals until 7 November 2001. The full text of the White Paper can be accessed at the web site: www.dfes.gov.uk/achievingsuccess

Inter faith encounter in education

The Interfaith Foundation hosted a seminar on 19 September examining the importance of inter faith encounter in education. Participants included HRH Princess Badiya of Jordan, Zaheer Kazmi, Dr Edward Kessler and Jessica de Rothschild.

Religions in the UK directory

The third edition of the Religions in the UK directory has now been published. ## Community forum

As part of the Government's 'National Strategy for Neighbourhood Renewal', the Neighbourhood Renewal Unit (NRU) is looking to recruit twenty individuals to be members of a new 'Community Forum'. Members of the Forum will work with the NRU to: provide a community perspective on Government programmes; generate ideas; and act as ambassadors for neighbourhood renewal. More information and applications forms are available from John Smith, SPA, PO Box 31007, London SW1W 9WX Tel: 020 7235 7676 email: john.smith@SPA-uk.com

Experience Corps

The Experience Corps (EC) is a new Government initiative that has been established with a remit to contribute to the Government's aim of getting more people involved in volunteering activities by 2004. It will be launched later this year and will encourage people aged 50-65 years to get involved in volunteering. It will do this primarily through a marketing campaign and by putting interested individuals in touch with local projects. EC would like to hear from organisations that would like to involve more volunteers in their work. Programmes should demonstrate imagination and innovation and be open to working collaboratively with other organisations. Information packs are available by writing to: Experience Corps, Elizabeth House, York Way, London SE1, or by visiting the web site: www.experiencecorps.co.uk

Visit to Corrymeela in Northern Ireland

During August, twenty four young Christians, Hindus and Muslims from Blackburn with Darwen visited the Corrymeela Community in Northern Ireland. Corrymeela is a Christian community where Catholics and Protestants can reconcile their differences in a peaceful environment. The visit was a good opportunity for the participants to discuss issues related to divided communities in different situations and contexts.

Several discussions were organised with both Catholic and Protestant guest speakers who spoke about growing up in Northern Ireland. One of the speakers, a member of the Hong Kong Chinese community, talked about his experiences, being a Catholic as well as Asian.

The trip was arranged by Blackburn with Darwen Interfaith Council and the Regeneration Department of the local authority. Mrs Madhubala Pandya, the Interfaith Council's Vice-Chair, Rev Dale Barton, Interfaith Council member and Mr Fawad Bhatti, Interfaith Development Officer accompanied the group and helped to organise an evening of prayer from the Christian, Hindu and Muslim faiths. This was shared with other groups at Corrymeela and held in the Community's place of worship the "Croi".

REGIONAL UPDATE

A selection of recent events:

Cardiff Interfaith Association organised two meetings at Cardiff United Synagogue in August and September. "Life is what you make it" was addressed by Jewish and Baha'i speakers, while Christian, Jewish and Sikh speakers addressed the topic, "Children are what you teach them".

Gloucestershire Inter Faith Action helped to organise a cultural fair at Gloucestershire Royal Hospital on 13 July. Staff and patients took part in the event as well as participants from local faith communities.

Hounslow Friends of Faith, a new inter faith initiative, held a walk of peace and friendship on 10 June. Members of different faiths visited places of worship situated in a triangular route round Hounslow. Places visited included the Jamia Mosque and Islamic Centre, Gurdwara Sri Guru Singh Sabha and Holy Trinity Church.

Luton. A new booklet, A Common Thread has been published by the Christian-Muslim Dialogue Forum in Luton. It was launched at an event organised by the Luton Council of Faiths at Luton Town Hall on 5 July. The Forum was set up in 1996 and has met over 15 times during the last three years. Each of the three articles in the booklet are jointly written and examine key concepts such as salvation and mission in the two faiths. To order the booklet contact: Shanthi Hettiarachchi Tel: 01582 416946.

Manchester Interfaith Forum. An event was held on 4 September at the Unitarian Chapel to explore faith issues surrounding asylum and refugees. Tony Lloyd MP, offered a government perspective and speakers from Manchester's faith communities shared their views on the topic.

Norwich Interfaith Link organised an event on 16 August looking at issues relating to refugees and asylum seekers in the area. Alison Howard, Social Responsibility Officer of the Anglican Diocese of Norwich, shared her experiences from the drop-in centre that she runs in Great Yarmouth.

Plymouth Religious and Cultural Centre was officially opened on 20 September. The Centre, which is supported by Plymouth City Council, has the backing of members of Plymouth's faith communities and has emerged from work by the Plymouth Inter Faith Group. The Centre aims to promote a forum for inter faith dialogue and to provide support and resources for the teaching of RE in local schools. The Centre can be contacted by writing to: Plymouth Religious and Cultural Resource Centre, 3a Watts Road, St Judes, Plymouth PL4 8SE.

Totnes Inter Faith Forum. The Forum's first meeting was held on 6 September at the Friends Meeting House, Totnes. Members from different faith communities and those of no formal faith attended and heard Bob Watkins speak about the Baha'i faith.

Faith and Community: A Good Practice Guide for Local Authorities was launched on 4 February at Local Government House in London. This new publication encourages local authorities to take a positive approach in their relationships with faith communities in their area and also to support the development of local inter faith structures.

It is published by the Local Government Association (LGA) in association with the Inter Faith Network, the Inner Cities Religious Council (ICRC) - based in the Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions (DTLR) - and the Active Community Unit of the Home Office.

The Guide promotes examples of good practice. Among those highlighted are the work of the Community Relations Section in Kensington and Chelsea; the South Meadow Lane Community Project run by the Gujarat Hindu Society in Preston; the Churches Link Project in Sandwell; and local inter faith initiatives such as the work of Wolverhampton Inter-Faith Group. It clears up some common misconceptions on the part of both faith groups and local authorities such as confusion over funding eligibility and over planning permission.

Cllr Joe Abrams from the LGA's Equalities Executive said, in launching the Guide, "as leaders in their local areas, councils have a unique role to play in encouraging and facilitating good relationships with and between different faith groups". Sally Keeble MP, Ministerial Chair of the ICRC in the DTLR, said that faith communities need to be able to make the best use of their energies in the wider community, and this is why the guidance issued today by the LGA is important. She read out a message from the Prime Minister (reproduced above).

Prime Minister's reception for faith communities

The Prime Minister hosted a reception for faith community representatives at 10 Downing Street on 17 January. Guests included HRH Prince El Hassan bin Talal of Jordan, the Archbishop of Canterbury and a number of leading members of faith communities from around the UK. In his brief informal address the Prime Minister said that this was the first such inter faith gathering at Number 10. He thanked all those who have been involved over recent years in working towards better inter faith understanding. Also present at the reception were Christian and Muslim scholars who were taking part in an international seminar on Christian/Muslim relations being hosted by the Archbishop of Canterbury at Lambeth Palace from 17 to 18 January.

Message from the Prime Minister for the launch of Faith and Community.

It gives me great pleasure to send a message of support on the launch of Faith and Community. Recent events mean that the guidance is very timely, but it is the outcome of work that has been in progress for several years.

The Inner Cities Religious Council and the Inter Faith Network for the UK explored the role of faith community involvement in public life in publishing The Local Inter Faith Guide and in a national conference. I welcome the Local Government Association's willingness to take this forward in partnership with them and the Active Community Unite at the Home Office.

I am sure that local authorities, other public agencies and faith communities themselves will find this practical guide an invaluable resource. It will help to capture the distinctive contribution that faith communities can make to the drive for better places for everyone in our richly diverse society.

Home Office Minister, Angela Eagle MP said that at the national level the Home Office is undertaking a review to make sure it can develop and maintain good links with faith communities across the country. Indarjit Singh, Director of the Network of Sikh Organisations and member of both the ICRC and the Executive Committee of the Inter Faith Network also welcomed the timely publication of the guide and said that attitudes have certainly moved on since the first time he contacted a local authority with a view to working in partnership, but received a very negative response.

An interview with Cllr Chris Clarke Chair of the Local Government Association's Social Inclusion Executive appears on page 7. The Guide is being sent to each local authority in England and Wales by the LGA and is also available to download from the LGA web site: www.lga.gov.uk

Representatives of faith community member bodies of the Network met on 9 January in London to discuss a range of issues. These included the reports on last summer's disturbances in the north of England, repercussions of the terrorist attacks of 11 September and the subsequent military action in Afghanistan. Concern was also expressed about the tension between India and Pakistan and the effect of this on communities here in the UK. Participants discussed practical steps that their organisations could take to tackle some of the current concerns and ways in which representative faith bodies can contribute to inter faith relations. The meeting concluded with a discussion about the planned Home Office review of the pattern of Government consultation with faith communities and ways in which the faith communities might strengthen consultative relationships between themselves. This meeting was one in a series being held for the different categories of Network member bodies.

Holocaust Memorial Day

The Inter Faith Network for the UK

The Inter Faith Network was founded in 1987. It works with its member bodies to promote good relations between the faith communities in the UK, to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make the UK a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions where all can practise their faith with integrity. The Network:

- Provides information on faith communities and on inter faith affairs
- Advises on multi faith projects and inter faith issues
- Publishes materials to aid work in the religious and inter faith sectors
- Fosters inter faith co-operation on social issues
- Holds regular meetings where social and religious questions of concern to the different faith communities can be examined together
- Links over 90 member organisations including: representative bodies from the different faith communities; inter faith organisations; local inter faith groups; educational and academic bodies

The UK commemoration of Holocaust Memorial Day 2002 took place, in the presence of HRH the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester, at the Bridgewater Hall in Manchester on 27 January, 77 years to the day after the liberation of the Auschwitz concentration camp. It was attended by the Home Secretary, Rt Hon David Blunkett MP, Rt Hon Iain Duncan Smith MP, Rt Hon Charles Kennedy MP, Holocaust survivors (whose testimonies formed part of the programme), and political, religious and community leaders from around the country. Contributions highlighted both the tragedy of the events of the Holocaust and other genocides and also the challenges of prejudice and discrimination in 21st century Britain. The Home Secretary said, "Saying 'it must never happen again' can only be fulfilled if we will it. It means understanding that we share common values, that building a cohesive and civilised society is the business of us all. What we do affects what others do to us, and how others behave remains our business in the twenty-first century." Councillor Imam Rizvi, Lead Member for Race Issues for Manchester City Council, said: "By learning the lessons of the Holocaust we can achieve something positive from the legacy of such terrible suffering and injustice. We have a duty to teach our young people about the events of the Holocaust and their relevance to modern atrocities. Encouraging a culture of tolerance and acceptance of others in our children is the best hope our society has of ensuring a peaceful future."

National events were also held in Wales at Cardiff City Hall; in Scotland at Glasgow's Royal Concert Hall; and in Northern Ireland at the Waterfront Hall in Belfast, where guests included Holocaust survivors from the Republic of Ireland.

Many local multi faith events took place to mark Holocaust Memorial Day around the UK. These included among others: a civic commemoration at Bolton Town Hall; a commemoration at the Princess Theatre in Port Talbot, Wales; and an event organised by Leicester City Council together with Leicester Council of Faiths at the New Walk Museum.

Golden Jubilee

2002 is the Golden Jubilee year of HM The Queen. Many events will be taking place this year to celebrate the role that she has played in the affairs of the United Kingdom and the Commonwealth over the last 50 years and to look forward to the next period of her reign.

June will be the focus of a number of special events to mark the Jubilee. These include concerts at Buckingham Palace; beacon-lighting and fireworks; and a Jubilee Festival in London. The Jubilee Festival along the Mall will reflect the Jubilee themes of celebration, service and community involvement. It will be designed to involve people of all ages and from all walks of life, and will reflect the face of our country and the Commonwealth today. Events planned for succeeding weeks include a multi-faith reception at Buckingham Palace, hosted by The Queen and The Duke of Edinburgh.

Further information, including the outline programme of the Queen's regional visits, can be found on the official website: www.goldenjubilee.gov.uk. A toolkit for planning events for the Golden Jubilee may be downloaded from the site. The Golden Jubilee Office would be pleased to receive information about any events which faith communities and inter faith bodies may be planning to mark the Jubilee. Details should be e-mailed to warwick.hawkins@homeoffice.gsi.gov.uk.

Reports on disturbances

A number of reports have been published examining the reasons behind the disturbances in Bradford, Burnley and Oldham during the summer of 2001 and looking to find ways to improve community cohesion. In these reports the Government has called for a widespread and open debate about identity, shared values and common citizenship.

An Inter-Ministerial Public Order and Community Cohesion (POCC) team, chaired by Home Office Minister John Denham MP, published its report, Building Cohesive Communities, on 11 December. The report's main recommendation is that community cohesion needs to be made a central aim of Government. It says, "We recognise that in many areas affected by disorder or community tensions, there is little interchange between members of different racial, cultural and religious communities and that proactive measures will have to be taken to promote dialogue and understanding. We also take on board the need to generate a widespread and open debate about identity, shared values, and common citizenship as part of the process of building cohesive communities." The report highlights initiatives which have already been implemented, including the allocation of extra money for summer activities for young people.

An extended Bank Holiday weekend from 1 - 4

Also published on 11 December was the report of the independent Community Cohesion Review Team set up by the Home Secretary and chaired by Ted Cante, Associate Director of the Improvement and Development Agency for Local Government. The team was asked to obtain the views of local communities, including young people, local authorities, voluntary and faith organisations and to identify good practice. In order to do this the team visited Bradford, Oldham, Burnley, Leicester, Southall and Birmingham.

The Cante report makes almost seventy recommendations on a wide range of matters under the headings of: Peoples and Values; Political and Community Leadership; Integration and Segregation; Younger People; Education; Community Organisations; Disadvantaged and Disaffected Communities; and the Press and Media. Among the initiatives which could play a role in promoting social cohesion in local communities, the report also mentions "inter faith groups" and the "development of youth inter faith networks".

Both the Denham and Cante reports have a strong focus on the way in which different communities within our society relate to one another, including implicitly, and sometimes, explicitly, relations between different faith groups.

The reports can be downloaded from the Home Office web site: <http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk>

Separate independent reports have also been prepared on the disturbances in Burnley and Oldham. The report on Burnley can be found at www.burnleytaskforce.org.uk or can be ordered by telephoning 01282 425011. The Oldham report can be found at www.oldhamir.org.uk or can be ordered by telephoning 0161 952 4325. This summer the report of a Review Team chaired by Lord Ouseley, former Chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality, on the situation in Bradford was published. This can be found at www.racereview.org.uk or can be ordered from Bradford Vision on 01274 722 675.

Religious Discrimination in Employment

The European Council of Ministers adopted a Directive last October to provide protection against discrimination in employment and occupation on grounds of sexual orientation, religion and belief, disability or age. The UK Government is required to give effect to this in UK law by 2 December 2003 in relation to sexual orientation and religion or belief and by 2

December 2006 in relation to disability and age. Also last year, the European Council of Ministers adopted a Directive which outlaws unfair discrimination in areas such as education and goods and services, as well as employment and training, on grounds of race.

On 13 December the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI), which carries responsibility for the implementation of both of these Directives, published a consultative document entitled Towards Equality and Diversity. The document sets out the Government's broad approach to implementing the Directives.

The Government is proposing that religion or belief should not be defined in the new legislation, but that this should be left to be determined by case law arising from cases brought before Employment Tribunals and the Courts. There are provisions in the Employment Directive which allow "Churches and other religious or belief organisations" to discriminate in their employment practices where there is "a genuine occupational requirement" or where to do so is necessary to enable them to preserve their "ethos". Again, the Government proposes that on all these matters there should be provisions in general terms rather than strict definitions, leaving it to Employment Tribunals and the Courts to judge whether the required circumstances arise in a particular case.

The consultation document says that the Government believes that "in the longer term, there are arguments in favour of a single statutory Commission offering integrated advice, guidance and support on equality matters". Great Britain already has a Commission for Racial Equality, a Disability Rights Commission and an Equal Opportunities Commission, but there is no body charged at present with issues relating to age, religion/belief and sexual orientation.

The text of the full document, along with a questionnaire, can be accessed at the DTI web site: <http://www.dti.gov.uk/er/equality>. Individuals and organisations have until 29 March to offer their comments on the document to the DTI.

Anti-Terrorism, Crime and Security Act

The Anti-Terrorism, Crime and Security Act completed its passage through Parliament on 13 December. It contains provisions to impose heavier penalties for crimes of violence and damage if they are motivated by religious hostility. This is an extension of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 which related to "racially aggravated" offences. The Act also includes provision to allow the police to require the removal of face coverings for identification purposes.

During the Bill's passage there was much debate about a proposal to make it an offence in England and Wales (since Scotland and Northern Ireland legislate separately on these matters) to incite hatred against members of a religious group, defined by reference to religious belief or the lack of it. This provision was dropped by the Government following strong opposition to it in the House of Lords.

Target 2015 – faith and international development

The Department for International Development, in partnership with Muslim and Sikh organisations, recently launched two new booklets aimed at raising awareness in these communities about the Target 2015 campaign to half world poverty by the year 2015. The Rt Hon Clare Short MP, Secretary of State for International Development, joined both launch events which were held at Portcullis House in London. The Sikh community booklet was launched on 10 December in association with the Network of Sikh Organisations and the Muslim publication, launched on 16 January, was a shared initiative between DFID and the Muslim Council of Britain, Islamic Relief and Muslim Aid.

The booklets join those published already in partnership with Christian and Jewish organisations including: Christian Aid, CAFOD and UK Jewish Aid and International Development (J-AID). A further booklet is planned in partnership with Hindu organisations.

Archbishop of Canterbury

The Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr George Carey has announced that he is to retire from office in the autumn. Following the announcement several leaders of different faiths sent messages of good will praising the Archbishop's work in particular in the field of inter faith relations.

In recent weeks the Archbishop has been involved in a number of inter faith initiatives. On 17 and 18 January he hosted an international seminar of Christian and Muslim scholars at Lambeth Palace.

Inter Faith Issues and the RE

Curriculum The report of a seminar held on 4 June by the Inter Faith Network in association with the National Association of SACREs. £5.95 plus £1.25 p&p

HRH Prince El Hassan bin Talal of Jordan and Prime Minister, Tony Blair, along with the Archbishop, addressed the opening session of the seminar, entitled "Building Bridges: Overcoming Obstacles in Christian-Muslim Relations".

On 20 January the Archbishop flew to Alexandria in Egypt where he chaired a gathering of senior Christian, Jewish and Muslim leaders from the Middle East to explore the potential of religious communities in promoting a cessation of violence and the resumption of the Middle East peace process. The conference was co-hosted by the Grand Imam of al-Azhar al-Sharif, Dr Mohamed Sayed Tantawy, the most senior Islamic figure in Egypt. The Grand Imam then visited London to sign, on 30 January at Lambeth Palace, a joint accord to promote dialogue between Christians and Muslims.

Pope John Paul II's inter faith day of prayer

Pope John Paul II invited senior religious leaders from around the world to Assisi to take part in a day of prayer for peace on 24 January. The religious leaders from the UK included Cardinal Cormac Murphy-O'Connor, Rt Rev John Miller, Moderator of the Church of Scotland, Rabbi Alan Plancey, representative of the Chief Rabbi and Bhai Mohinder Singh of the Guru Nanak Nishkam Sevak Jatha.

On the same day events were held around the UK in communion with the gathering in Assisi. Westminster Interfaith arranged a multi faith gathering at Heythrop college in London in communion with the prayer meeting in Assisi. Representatives of the Baha'i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jain, Jewish, Muslim, Sikh and Zoroastrian traditions offered contributions and lit lamps, led by the Rt Rev James O'Brien representing Cardinal Cormac Murphy-O'Connor.

In Glasgow, leaders of Christian Churches made their own pilgrimage for peace visiting the mandir, mosque, synagogue and gurdwara. At each place of worship a candle was presented and the prayer of St Francis of Assisi was recited. Each host community then prayed or recited from their scriptures.

Third edition of Religions in the UK launched

Religions in the UK: Directory 2001-03 was officially launched at an event on the evening of 29

November at the University of Derby. It is published by the Multi Faith Centre at the University of Derby in association with the Inter Faith Network. Professor Jonathan Powers, Chair of the Board of Trustees of the Multi-Faith Centre, introduced the evening and gave some background to the Centre which is being established with the help of funding from the Millennium Commission. Peggy Morgan then gave a lecture on "Challenges Facing Inter Faith Dialogue in the UK".

Places of Worship Grant Scheme

In his 2001 Budget, the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced extra assistance for repairs to listed buildings which are used as places of worship. DCMS has implemented this initiative by the introduction of the Listed Places of Worship Grant Scheme launched on 4 December by the Minister for the Arts, Baroness Blackstone, at Christ Church in Spitalfields, London. It is an interim grant scheme which returns, in grant aid, the difference between 5% and the actual amount spent on VAT on eligible repairs to listed places of worship.

The scheme has been widely welcomed by owners of listed places of worship, as it represents significant additional new funds for these buildings - initial estimates are up to £30 million per year. There is no cap on the scheme; all listed places of worship that meet the criteria, and apply, can receive a grant.

Application forms and further information can be obtained from the website: www.lpwscheme.org.uk; or by calling Tel: 0845 601 5945

Twinning places of worship

The Three Faiths Forum is promoting an initiative to "twin" places of worship. Sir Sigmund Sternberg, co-founder of the Forum said that the scheme would help faith communities "to reach out in a respectful and welcoming way in the hope of creating true dialogue and establishing a real sense of brotherhood". The proposal has also been welcomed by Sheikh Dr Zaki Badawi, Principal of the Muslim College commented that twinning of places of worship "will enhance harmony and peace between different communities." For further information email: sidney@sternberg-foundation.co.uk.

Directory honoured

The Directory project has been awarded the 4th Annual Shap Award by the Shap Working Party on World Religions in Education for a significant contribution to education and the study of religion. The award was presented at a ceremony in Birmingham in December by Libushka Smart in honour of her late husband Professor Ninian Smart who was a founder of the Shap Working Party and for many years, until his death in 2001, its President.

Inter faith profile

Cllr Chris Clarke is a member of Somerset County Council and Chairs the Local Government Association's Social Inclusion Executive. We took the opportunity to ask him a few questions relating to the LGA and the publication of Faith and Community: A Good Practice Guide for Local Authorities.

Q What is the role of the LGA and of the Social Inclusion Executive within this?

The Local Government Association was formed in 1997 because of the need for one strong voice to present the case for local government. As the national voice for local communities the LGA speaks for nearly 500 local authorities in England and Wales representing over 50 million people.

The Social Inclusion Executive's 14 members represent a cross section of types of authority – London borough, district council, county council, metropolitan council and so on – and all four of the main political parties. Our remit is to contribute to the achievement of the Association's overall policy priorities and objectives and to decide on the operational and policy objectives for the social inclusion policy area.

Do you think there has been a shift in attitude towards faith communities by local authorities over the last few years?

Q Yes. A number of developments have helped local authorities to think again about faith communities, such as the increasing onus to find ways of communicating with and consulting all their customers/service users and residents. Many have developed social inclusion strategies too, playing a leading role in joint working with other agencies. Sadly, people from faith communities have all too often been identified as having difficulty in engaging with consultation processes – and yet also to be in particular need of help.

Most recently the Local Government Act 2000 placed a new statutory duty on councils to prepare a community strategy to promote or improve the economic, social and environmental well-being of the area. Many authorities had already started to draw together key stakeholders to develop a vision for the area. An understanding of the needs and aspirations of all the sections and interest groups – and the contribution they can make – is key.

Why are these new guidelines so important?

Some local authorities have a very good relationship with their local faith groups and communities but this is not widely known about. The LGA agreed that others could benefit from advice on various aspects of the relationship, the sensitivities that need to be taken into account and practical steps to be taken.

What role do you think local authorities have in encouraging local inter faith co-operation?

As community leader, charged with preparing a community strategy in consultation with local people and groups, the authority has considerable interest in bringing together all the stakeholders in the area. As well as making this task easier, there will be longer term benefits to the creation of some kind of structure for helping dialogue between faith communities and local government and between the various faiths.

Starting off may not mean a huge financial outlay – a few small informal meetings might help with getting to know relevant people and organisations. On the other hand, in some authorities an officer has been appointed to oversee the relationship with faith communities. Clearly in areas of the greatest diversity this will be very helpful in encouraging the continuation of inter faith co-operation.

What positive outcomes would you like to see coming from the partnership between local authorities and faith communities?

In localities all over the country we would like to see local authorities and faith communities both benefiting from closer engagement. Faith communities can make a considerable contribution by encouraging active citizenship, providing social care and helping social cohesion and this could be enhanced if local authorities were to do more to recognise and support this aspect of their activities. The local authority that has a good relationship with the faith groups and organisations in its area has taken an important step towards fulfilling its role as community leader. Faith and Community will help those yet to start and that will be a really positive outcome.

Yours faithfully

The “Yours Faithfully” training programme devised by the Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum has provided religious diversity training to over 120 organisations since June 2001. The programme was initially funded by the Community Relations Council to develop a course for trainers. Since Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 placed a statutory duty upon all public sector bodies to provide training in religious diversity, demand for the courses has been very high, so Forum members have been providing training courses for a wide range of organisations such as labour relations agencies and the police. Further information from Des McCabe Tel: 028 3025 0399 email: equalitytraining@aol.com.

Towards multi faith RE in Northern Ireland

Members of the Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum met on 18 December with Martin McGuinness the Education Minister of the Northern Ireland Assembly to explore ways in which a more balanced RE curriculum including teaching about minority faiths can be introduced in Northern Ireland. Current legislation looks towards the Christian Churches to maintain the RE Curriculum. It is unlikely to be changed and therefore closer co-operation between the churches and other faiths to provide a multi faith curriculum would appear to be the best way to move towards providing a broader curriculum.

White paper on changes to registration of births, marriages and deaths

The Government has recently published its proposals for changes to the registration of births, marriages and deaths. Its White Paper on this – Civil Registration Vital Change – can be purchased from the Stationery Office or be downloaded from www.official-documents.co.uk (document 5355).

The proposals, which follow a consultative review, include a change from a system based on the authorisation of religious places of worship for the celebration of marriages to a system based on the appointment of celebrants who would be responsible for the solemnisation of either religious or civil marriages.

REGIONAL UPDATES

Regional Roundup

News of a selection of inter faith activities from around the country.

Brighton and Hove Inter Faith Contact Group celebrated the UN Year of Dialogue between Civilisations on 21 October at St John the Baptist Church in Hove. This event was held in partnership with the local branch of the United Nations Association and brought together members of several local faith communities who each contributed a statement of their belief in the importance of dialogue.

Croydon’s Hindu community banded together and donated £501 towards the much-needed restoration of the Croydon Parish Church. A cheque was presented by Nitin Mehta from the Young Indian Vegetarians. He said “Croydon Parish Church is part of our heritage in this town. It is a beautiful church, a place of worship and abode of God.”

Hounslow Friends of Faith, in the London Borough of Hounslow, organised an event at Heston School on 27 October, with representatives from local faith groups including Baha’is, Brahma Kumaris, Buddhists, Christians, Hindus, Jews, Muslims and Sikhs as part of One World Week. The celebration included presentations of dance, singing and music from different groups and concluded with a candle lighting ceremony.

Leeds. Rt Rev John Packer the Anglican Bishop of Ripon and Leeds hosted a dinner on 23 January at which representatives of faith communities in Leeds discussed future co-operation between the communities. The dinner was arranged with the assistance of Leeds Faith Communities Liaison Forum.

Leicester. Canon Andrew Wingate, Director of Training for the Anglican Diocese of Leicester, and Imam Ibrahim Mogra, of the Masjid Umar mosque have been holding regular meetings with both Christians and Muslims for the last 18 months. The events of 11 September have given added impetus to the meetings and a joint collection in places of worship in Leicester raised over £5,000 for Save the Children's work in Afghanistan. During Ramadan about 20 Christians observed a day of fasting and joined Muslim friends at the mosque in the evening to break the fast together. It is planned that Muslims will join the Christians in similarly observing a fast on Ash Wednesday.

Peterborough Inter-Faith Council organised an event on 13 January celebrating recent festivals in the Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh traditions. The event was attended by representatives of all the faiths who each gave a short presentation introducing the festivals.

Richmond Inter-Faith Group, jointly with the Twickenham and Richmond branch of the United Nations Association, organised a celebration of friendship across faiths and cultures on Saturday 3 October 2001 at the Unitarian Church in Richmond. Participants included Buddhists, Baha'is, Brahma Kumaris, Christians, Hindus, Muslims and Sikhs.

South London Inter Faith Group held prayers for world peace at St Matthew's Church in Brixton on 11 November in response to the events of 11 September. Prayers for peace and forgiveness and for all those bereaved were offered by members of different faith communities including the Rt Rev Dr Tom Butler, the Anglican Bishop of Southwark, a Hindu priest and a Muslim Imam.

South West England Link Meeting

A Network link meeting for inter faith initiatives in the South West Region was held on 12 January in Taunton. Each initiative presented a short report on its recent activities:

Bath Inter Faith Group

The Group has a subscribing membership of around 21 members with about 50 people on the overall mailing list. It provides information about other local groups such as those in Bristol and Frome, as well as holding its own meetings almost every month. It helps to arrange an annual multi faith event hosted by the Mayor of Bath. It has also now established a link with the Imam of a local Mosque and hopes to involve more Muslims in its activities. It is planning to hold an event in the Autumn on the theme of "Sacred Space", in association with the United Religions Initiative.

Bristol Inter Faith Group

The Group had an event planned for 11 September which turned into an opportunity for those attending to reflect on the terrible events of that day. The Group's Committee met with Muslim colleagues in the following week and produced an agreed Press Release, responding to the terrorist attacks. There have been no major incidents in Bristol of harassment against minority communities following the 11 September attacks.

Each October the Group assists in arranging the Civic Inter Faith Celebration, hosted by the Mayor. The 2001 celebration was very well attended, perhaps influenced by the events of 11 September. The Group visited the newly refurbished gurdwara and held a social event in December; is planning to mark Holocaust Memorial Day; and will be holding an event around the time of Eid-ul-Adha. Professor Tariq Modood of the University of Bristol will speak in April on "Our Future as a Multi-faith Society". In May, June and July three events will be centred on young people, speaking about their experiences growing up in three faith communities in Bristol. The Group also receives a number of enquiries from local public bodies such as Health Authorities and police.

Exeter Inter Faith Group

The Group originated in the University of Exeter and events are often held there. In December it held a social gathering to celebrate Eid-ul-Fitr, Hanukah and Christmas. For the rest of the academic year the theme of the Group's meetings will be education and inter faith Dialogue and it plans to have speakers from different faiths talking about their perspectives on the topic.

Frome Inter Faith Group

The Group was established about four years ago and has about 20 members made up of Christians (mostly Quakers), Buddhists and Pagans. The Group arranges discussions, events with speakers and visits to places of worship. The Group has few Church or civic connections, but is working on raising its profile.

Plymouth Religious and Cultural Resource Centre

The Plymouth Inter Faith Group was re-established about four years ago. It has good support from two local Bishops and leaders of other faith communities. Financial assistance has been received from Plymouth City Council to establish a resource centre which was officially opened on 20 September 2001. The centre is a charitable trust and is now engaged in seeking long term financial support. A programme of inter faith events is held at the centre and a range of services are provided for schools and other organisations, such as loan of artefacts and a service to arrange faith speakers.

Swindon Inter Faith Group

The Group has been established for about eleven years and meets about four or five times a year. Rather than invited speakers it usually has discussions on particular topics so that all those present can contribute. The Group's secretary is often contacted by local statutory authorities with enquiries about the local faith communities. For example, she has worked with the Chaplain of a new hospital and advised the police about the establishment of a prayer room.

Some members of the Group are on the local SACRE and have been involved in changing the Agreed Syllabus for RE for Swindon. The one in use was originally bought from a neighbouring SACRE in a mainly white area. It was felt to be unsatisfactory in Swindon which is more ethnically mixed.

Following the attacks of 11 September a meeting was held with Dr Iftikar Malik as a speaker which attracted over 150 people. A collection of £375 was made for the Edhi Foundation for work with refugees on the Afghan/Pakistani border. It is hoped to have some more intensive dialogue with local Muslims; the Group secretary has been making enquiries about a suitable format.

Taunton Inter Faith Group

The Group meets monthly. During the year four to five speakers are invited to talk on a selected subject. Other sessions are taken up with general discussion on a chosen topic and relevant quotations from various faiths are sent to members in advance of the meetings. The Group has also assisted in the running of a series of evening classes at the Somerset College of Arts and Technology featuring speakers of different faiths.

Torbay Interfaith Forum

The Forum was re-started about two years ago, having originally been established in the early 1980's. The Forum meets every two months and often focuses on education related issues as three members of the group are on the local SACRE and several RE teachers also regularly attend meetings. A multi faith celebration is planned for 20 January. At this the Act of Commitment which was used at the faith communities Millennium event in the House of Lords in January 2000 will be read by participants.

Totnes Inter Faith Group

This new group, which meets once a month in the Quaker House Totnes, has been active for five months. Twenty one people attended the last meeting from a variety of backgrounds. These included a police officer who said he would encourage members of the police to attend its meetings as this would broaden their understanding of social and religious understanding.

West Somerset Inter Faith Group

The Group is run on an informal basis but has a committee and about 45 members. It often arranges visits to different places of worship. For example, it visited the Sikh gurdwara in Bristol last year and was able later to invite a group from the gurdwara to a social event held at the home of a member of the Group. It is currently planning a visit to the mosque in Exeter. It has initiated a competition for pupils at a local school about "Tolerance and Respect for People of Other Faiths". Children are invited to produce a piece of art or poetry on this theme which will be judged by members of the Group, which will provide cash prizes to the best entries.

Anglican Diocese of Bath and Wells

Rev Kevin Tingay is inter faith adviser in the Anglican Diocese of Bath and Wells. He maintains links with inter faith groups in the area and is Secretary of the South West Council of Faiths. Many local parishes have contacted the Diocese asking about Islam and looking for a speaker who can talk to local people about the faith. He is on a committee which is looking at racial justice issues. The South West region has a proportionately high incidence of racially motivated crime.

The South West region has a significant presence of followers of Pagan traditions and New Age spiritualities. Some have hesitations about dialogue with such groups while others are keen to proceed and the issues involved need careful exploration.

South West Council of Faiths

Revd Heather Pencavel, who is a member of the South West Council of Faiths and the faith communities representative on the South West Regional Assembly, explained the development in England of the Regional Development Agencies (RDA) and Assemblies over the last three years. Members of the RDA's are appointed by central and local Government. The Regional Assemblies, in effect, scrutinize the work of the RDA's. The South West Assembly is made up of 117 people: 81 appointed by the local authorities of the region; and the remainder representatives from Social and Economic Partners, such as employers, trade unions, health authorities and the voluntary sector. There is one seat reserved for the faith communities. In order to nominate a person to the Assembly the faith communities had to establish a regional forum which could put forward a representative.

The South West Council of Faiths was set up to represent the faith communities of the region and to relate to the Regional Assembly, but Revd Pencavel commented that as most faith communities do not have regional structures of their own it is very difficult for the Council to be truly representative of the region's faith communities and it is even more difficult for one person to represent on the Assembly the views of all the faith communities. The Council of Faiths is currently seeking to establish clear channels of communication with people of all faiths in the Region. So far the South West Council of Faiths has been involved with three major regional consultations on sustainable development; regional accountability; and a review of cultural concerns.

On 10 June 80 young people of different faiths from around the UK came together at St James' Palace for a very special event: The Golden Jubilee Young People's Faith Forum. The main theme of the day was "Faith and Service to the Community". The Forum was chaired by James Naughtie of the BBC and Network Co-Chairs Rosalind Preston and Bishop Tom Butler were among the speakers. Participants included 64 lower-sixth formers from schools nominated by LEAs across England, as well as pupils from independent and faith schools and from Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. 16 young people aged between 19 and 24, nominated directly by the faith communities, also played a role in the event, with one of each faith giving a short presentation in the morning on growing up as a young person of faith in 21st century Britain and on how their faith encourages service to the community. Participants also heard from Priya Lukka from the Institute for Volunteering Research, Andy Ball from the De Paul Trust, and Khalid Al-Mulad from Islamic Relief.

The day's topics were explored in more depth by the young people in two syndicate discussions facilitated by a specially picked team of RE teachers led by Lat Blaylock of the Professional Council for Religious Education. At the end of the afternoon The Prince of Wales met each one of the young participants and facilitators all of whom then went on to join 700 people of

Royal reception for faith communities

HM The Queen and The Duke of Edinburgh hosted a reception for representatives of different faiths at Buckingham Palace on 10 June. This was the first time that such a gathering had taken place at the Palace. Around 700 people including members of the Baha'i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jain, Jewish, Muslim, Sikh and Zoroastrian faiths from all parts of the UK were invited to the reception. Among those present were the 80 young people who had taken part in the Golden Jubilee Young People's Faith Forum earlier in the day. Several other members of the Royal Family attended the event, including the Prince of Wales and the Earl and Countess of Wessex, who made their way around the several rooms open to the guests, meeting and talking with many of them.

Leaders of each of the nine faith communities invited to the Palace gathered on the stage of the Ballroom to present a collective message of Loyal Greetings to The Queen. The Archbishop of Canterbury read out the message on their behalf and presented it to The Queen. It is reproduced on page 3.

Message of support to the participants of the Golden Jubilee Young People's Faith Forum from Her Majesty The Queen

Today's Forum brings together eighty young people of faith from across the United Kingdom in this special event to celebrate the Golden Jubilee of my Accession to the Throne.

I am pleased that you are exploring the practical dimensions of faith and service to the community, which is one of the central themes of the Golden Jubilee celebrations. Through this kind of dialogue, respect and understanding between different faiths can continue to grow.

I hope that you will learn much about each other's religious traditions. Your discussions today will signal to others the great importance of co-operation between people of different faiths.

I send my good wishes and encouragement to you all.

different faiths at the special reception at Buckingham Palace, hosted by The Queen and The Duke of Edinburgh.

The event was organised for the Golden Jubilee celebrations by the Golden Jubilee Office on behalf of Buckingham Palace with the assistance of the Inter Faith Network for the UK, and in consultation with Government Departments and the faith communities. On the evening before the Forum the young people had the chance to meet Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, the Rt Hon Tessa Jowell MP, and some of the faith community leaders who had been consulted in planning the event.

In place of Inter Faith Update's usual interview this issue features responses from the 9 young presenters to questions about the future of inter faith relations in the UK (see page 6).

For further information or to order a copy of the report on the day, which will be available in September, contact the Golden Jubilee Office or Harriet Crabtree at the Inter Faith Network.

NETWORK NEWS

National inter faith organisations meeting

A second meeting of representatives of national inter faith organisations in membership of the Network took place on 27 February, the first having been held in February 2001.

Representatives from twelve organisations considered the scope for co-operation between their organisations and strategies for handling overlap in their work and also looked at the relationships between national and local inter faith bodies. Participants also discussed the impact of the events of 11 September and of the summer disturbances in northern towns on inter faith relations in the UK and how their organisations had responded to these. It was agreed that the meeting had been helpful and that a further meeting of the organisations should be held in the autumn.

Faith community representative bodies meeting

A meeting of faith community representative bodies in membership of the Network was held on 29 May at the National Council for Voluntary Organisations. It followed their earlier meeting on 9 January (reported in Inter Faith Update: Issue 18).

The meeting's main focus was on the Government's consultative document Towards Equality and Diversity published last autumn (also reported in Inter Faith Update: Issue 18) set out proposals for implementing the European Directive on discrimination in employment, which covers discrimination on grounds of religion or belief. Cathy Rees of the Department of Trade and Industry gave the meeting an update on the responses received during the consultation period and explained how the Government now planned to proceed.

On 15 May Ms Barbara Roche MP, the Cabinet Office Minister responsible for co-ordinating equalities issues across Government had announced

Message on behalf of the faith communities of the United Kingdom to Her Majesty the Queen on the occasion of her Golden Jubilee

Your Majesty,

On behalf of the faith communities of the United Kingdom gathered here, we present our Loyal Greetings to Your Majesty on the occasion of your Golden Jubilee. We look back with profound appreciation on your fifty years of service to the nation and we look forward to the next period of your reign. We honour your steadfast commitment to your Christian faith and to ensuring that people of all our faiths are valued contributors to life in the United Kingdom and in the Commonwealth.

We pledge in a spirit of friendship and co-operation to pursue increased understanding between our communities. We are united in our desire to work together for the common good in ways which reflect the shared values which we affirmed at the outset of this new Millennium: community; personal integrity; the sense of right and wrong; learning, wisdom and love of truth; care and compassion; justice and peace; respect for one another and for the earth and its creatures.

its intention to examine the feasibility of a single equality body spanning the fields of religion and belief as well as race, gender, disability, sexual orientation and age. The new project will consider relevant policy developments including the creation of interim arrangements to provide advice, guidance and support to individuals, employers and interested organisations on the operation of the new legislative framework as this relates to religion or belief, sexual orientation and age. There are currently no institutional arrangements dealing with these (unlike race and disability). The meeting on 29 May provided an opportunity to discuss this development as well.

Neil Frater of the Home Office added an overview of the position which has been reached on religious discrimination issues more generally, some of them identified in the reports of the recent University of Derby research project. He also spoke about the Home Office's planned review of patterns consultation of faith communities by central Government and their representation at national events which is likely to begin in the near future.

It is planned to hold a further meeting in the autumn of faith community representative bodies to consider the possibility of holding more regular meetings of this kind to provide, in effect, a faith communities consultative forum, in which matters of common concern can be discussed.

Jubilee services and visits

Representatives of different faith communities in the UK attended the national Service of Celebration and Thanksgiving to mark the Queen's Golden Jubilee held at St Paul's Cathedral on 4 June. They joined over 2,000 other invited guests in the Cathedral. Representatives of different faith communities were also invited as special guests to church services attended by HM The Queen in Northern Ireland on 14 May, in Scotland on 23 May and in Wales on 11 June. Similar services of thanksgiving were held across the UK during the Jubilee weekend and the days following.

The Queen visited a Hindu mandir in the UK for the first time on 6 June, when she visited the Murugan Mandir in north London. The continuing Golden Jubilee regional tours will also include the first visits by The Queen to a mosque and a gurdwara in the UK. She will visit the Scunthorpe Islamic Centre and Mosque on 31 July and the Guru Nanak Gurdwara in Leicester on 1 August. She will also visit the Manchester Jewish Museum on 24 July.

The Earl and Countess of Wessex attended a service at the St John's Wood Synagogue in London on 9 June and will attend a Zoroastrian thanksgiving service in North London on 26 June and visit the Jain Temple in Leicester on 3 September. The Princess Royal will visit the London Buddhist Vihara on 10 July and The Duke of York is to attend a Baha'i reception in Central London on 11 July.

A press release from Buckingham Palace said "the purpose of the visits is to indicate respect for the diversity of faiths, to support inter-faith dialogue and to show that non-Christian, as well as Christian, communities are central to contemporary Britain".

Queen launches Golden Jubilee Award

HM The Queen launched The Queen's Golden Jubilee Award for voluntary service by groups in the community on 30 April. The award will recognise achievements by groups of people who volunteer their time to enhance and improve the quality of life for others in the community. Nomination forms are available by contacting 0845 000 2002 or by email: gaward@homeoffice.gsi.gov.uk. Closing date for nominations for 2002 is 30 September.

The Prince of Wales launches Respect initiative

The Prince of Wales joined leaders from the UK's major faith communities on 29 April in Birmingham to unveil a two-year initiative called "Respect". This joint initiative of the Prince's Trust and Timebank aims to encourage young people of different faiths to do voluntary work for another faith community, thus helping to build understanding and tolerance between communities. The idea was originally floated as a fitting way to commemorate the start of the new Millennium, however the project has now come to fruition, being taken forward by these two organisations. Respect intends to work with faith groups, youth groups, schools and sports clubs throughout the UK and will target schools and sports bodies, encouraging them to support Respect. It will promote the idea of giving time and will provide ideas and information on ways of doing this in local communities. The initiative forms a part of the Golden Jubilee celebrations.

To find out more or to volunteer your time or suggest a project that volunteers could do together contact "Respect" at Timebank on Telephone: 0845 601 4008 or visit the web site: www.timebank.org.uk/respect.

Incitement to religious hatred and the blasphemy laws

A House of Lords Select Committee on Religious Offences has been appointed to consider and report on the law relating to religious offences. It will look at whether existing religious offences (notably blasphemy) should be amended or abolished and whether a new offence of incitement to religious hatred should be created. The Select Committee was set up following the introduction, in January, of a Bill into the House of Lords by Lord Avebury to make it an offence in England and Wales to incite hatred against members of a religious group. These provisions in the Bill (which will not now be taken further formally in the present session of Parliament) were along the lines of those dropped by the Government from the Anti-Terrorism, Crime and Security Bill because of opposition in the House of Lords when that Bill was before Parliament last autumn.

The Select Committee will consider evidence over the next few weeks, and produce a report for the next Parliamentary Session. The Committee will be prepared to consider written evidence which reaches it before the end of July. Further information is available on the House of Lords web site: <http://www.publications.parliament.uk/pa/ld/ldselinf.htm>. Enquiries can also be addressed to the Committee Clerk, Ian Mackley (Tel: 020 7219 5208 or email reloff@parliament.uk).

Ministers meet faith community representatives about India/Pakistan tension

The Home Secretary, Rt Hon David Blunkett MP met with representatives of the Hindu, Muslim and Sikh communities on 29 May to discuss the effect on community relations in the UK of the current tension between India and Pakistan. The following day the Foreign Secretary, Rt Hon Jack Straw MP, called representatives and Parliamentarians from the three communities to brief them following his visit to India and Pakistan. He said after the meeting that he was: "heartened by their [the faith communities] support for the international effort to try to avert conflict between India and Pakistan, and by their determination to ensure that if conflict does start it is not allowed to spread to the communities in the UK".

Birmingham: A More Inclusive City

On 23 May Regeneration Minister, Ms Sally Keeble MP, launched A More Inclusive City: Birmingham and its Faith Communities, a report which calls for a new community forum for Birmingham, providing people of all faiths in Birmingham with a platform to make their views heard by local agencies and the City Council. Speaking at the launch, held at the Guru Nanak Nishkam Sevak Jatha Gurdwara in Birmingham, Ms Keeble said: "Birmingham's faith communities have helped create community cohesion. This report shows how a Faith Forum can take this important work forward". Birmingham City Council's Cllr Muhammad Afzal, said that religion occupied a very important place in the lives of many communities and a faith forum would help forge links between the Council and the faith communities. A range of other speakers, including Brian Pearce of the Inter Faith Network, also spoke at the launch, welcoming the findings of the report.

Faith in Scouting

The Scout Association has launched details of its new programme and has identified "Faith and Belief" as one of six key areas of a young person's development. The Association, which currently has over 400,000 young people in membership has written to faith communities requesting their help in promoting scouting among their communities.

Queen's birthday honours for inter faith activists

The Queen's birthday honours list was announced on 15 June and included an OBE for The Most Reverend Oluwole Abiola for services to Inter-Faith Relations and an MBE for Resham Singh Sandhu, Chairman of Leicester Council of Faiths, for services to Community Life. Father Abiola served as a member of the Executive Committee of the Inter Faith Network from its inception until 2000.

Unity in Diversity

A group of young people from Glasgow's different faith communities is helping to update the Glasgow Open Museum's Unity in Diversity exhibition. Unity in Diversity is one of many exhibitions that are available from the museum for display in various community venues in Glasgow. It is a collection of artefacts and pictures providing information about the different faith communities in Glasgow. New exhibits, including a web site based project supporting the exhibition, are being added with the support of the Scottish Inter Faith Council. During their research the young people have been visiting one another's places of worship and also learning about web design. The exhibition will be re-launched later this year.

Diamond School Award

The Council of Christians and Jews Diamond School Award was launched as part of the CCJ's 60th anniversary celebrations. The award, which is open to all secondary schools, aims to encourage schools to promote understanding and positive interaction between different communities. Schools will be invited to prepare a 'poster' (A2 size) displaying the work of the school in promoting good relations between different groups within their community. The finalists will be invited to a presentation at Lambeth Palace. Contact Jane Clements at the CCJ Tel: 020 7820 0090 or email: jane@ccj.org.uk for more information and application forms.

Inter Faith Profile: The future of inter faith dialogue

The Golden Jubilee Young People's Faith Forum held at St James's Palace on 10 June (see page 1) included presentations by nine of the older participants on their experiences as young people of faith growing up in the UK. After the Forum we took the opportunity to ask each of the presenters about their hopes for the future of inter faith understanding in the UK and if their perception of inter faith dialogue had changed after attending the Forum. Excerpts from their responses follow:

Ruth Cohen, Jewish participant from London

"I think that there is room for dialogue between particular faiths, for example Jews and Muslims, in order to increase understanding about the current situation in the Middle East. There is also a lot of scope for more people to realise how much those with a faith background have in common, for example their common values and goals for society. I would like to see inter faith understanding reaching more young people through the school system, so that inaccurate stereotypes can be broken down and respect built up, leading to a more tolerant and peaceful society.

I had never really been involved in inter-faith dialogue before attending the Forum. I did learn a lot about other faiths and have been inspired to find out more."

Viren Mehta, Jain participant from Manchester

"My hopes for the future are for a peaceful society that is proud of its faith diversity and able to use this diversity to strengthen the community rather than divide it. The realisation of these hopes depends on ensuring that there is good quality teaching of religious education in the UK.

The inter faith forum has given me a fascinating and thoroughly rewarding insight into how young people of all the major UK faiths feel about issues that affect 21st century Britain. It has also taught me that open and frank discussion of faith issues can be achieved without descent into argument and dispute. Different faiths have a lot to learn from each other."

Dr Munveen Kaur Dhariwal, Sikh participant from Leicester

"I think inter faith understanding is crucial to the successful continued development of the UK into a multi faith, multi cultural country. My hopes are that we, in the UK, can reach a stage whereby we all realise and accept that people of all different faiths exist, but are not inferior or superior, simply different. I hope we can teach each other, and learn to respect the fact that there are others who may follow a different religion or hold different beliefs. I hope it will be possible to come to a point where each person is able happily to follow their faith in the way they choose, without it being an issue. I think the key words for the future are tolerance, acceptance and respect.

The Forum has made me realise that there are people who assign significant importance to inter faith development. It is easy to believe that people are beginning to let go of their faiths in order to integrate into UK society, but the Forum was a fantastic reminder of who we are, what we stand for and what we want for our country. My perception of inter faith dialogue has been drastically altered into a very positive one. It is important to communicate, and I think we all did so with energy and dedication."

Mohammed Naveed, Muslim participant from Halifax

"I hope that there will be more opportunities for dialogue, especially at the local level. Maybe schools and places of worship could host such events. It is important for young children to make contact with people of other faiths and where there are "mono-faith" schools, they should be encouraged to arrange exchange days with more mixed schools.

The Forum was a good opportunity to meet people of different faiths, especially faiths that I'd only read about. It was interesting to listen to people of other faiths expressing their views and to deal with their perception of your faith. I realised that although people of faith have many things in common, this does not undermine or dilute each person's commitment to their particular faith. You can be different, but still be genuine and show real understanding and respect for others."

Danielle Pee, Baha'i participant from Bristol

"My hope for the future is that all people gain a greater awareness as only through education can our ignorance and prejudice be cured.

As a Baha'i I have always been aware of inter faith dialogue, since we are encouraged to consort with people of all religions in fellowship and friendliness, being present at the inter faith forum translated that intellectual knowledge into something more real and spiritual."

Views of participants of the Young People's Faith Forum

Gaurav Prinja, Hindu participant from Cambridge

"I hope that all the faiths can co-exist and get along the way we participants did over the two days. With all of us being of different faiths I was concerned that there was the potential for unpleasantness. However, my mind was quickly put to rest. I was very pleased with the way that despite the difference in our spiritual beliefs, the strength of the commonly held humanitarian aspects of all of our faiths was more than enough for us all to be friends and work together. I only hope that it is people with a tolerant outlook who are able to flourish and influence the thoughts of the coming generations, rather than those who seek to create divisions between people in the name of religion.

I am definitely much more optimistic about inter faith relations, and I can only hope that more events like the forum take place and that the kind of people willing to come to them with an open mind and a desire to co-operate will grow in number."

Farmeen Sorab, Zoroastrian participant from London

"I hope that inter faith knowledge and understanding will increase significantly in the years to come. With high profile events such as the one which took place at St James's Palace, this will definitely be achieved. I hope that through word of mouth and the media inter faith work is promoted, which will in turn lead to better understanding and tolerance of different faiths.

I feel that the forum provided a great opportunity to discuss delicate matters in a very easy, open and friendly way. I feel that by discussing these issues people have been educated on issues which they knew little about (although may have thought they did). This breaks down prejudice and ignorance.

I did feel that inter faith dialogue would prove to be difficult, but this forum proved that this was most definitely not the case."

Manil Subesinghe, Buddhist participant from London

"I feel the future holds much promise. The ease with which we all seemed to get on was encouraging to say the least. We had all shared similar experiences so far throughout our young lives. With all that we share in common and the mutual respect we have for each other's religious backgrounds, I hope we can build on this unique occasion and continue to move forward in building solid inter faith relationships.

The Forum has shown me that there is enthusiasm for more inter faith dialogue. People are willing to hear each other out and take in what others have to say."

Meryl Walters, Christian participant from Aberystwyth, Wales

"I would hope that different faith communities will continue to communicate, listen and share views, with the aim of trying to understand one another better. However, differences between every faith community clearly do exist, and as a Christian I'd consider it very important that the distinctiveness of Christianity should not be eroded in any inter-faith dialogue.

Attending the forum helped me to see that as a Christian, I am in a much better place to respond to people of other religions once I have listened to them and sought to understand what they believe and why."

REGIONAL UPDATES

Bedford Council of Faiths annual inter faith pilgrimage took place on 8 April, visiting a Roman Catholic church, mosque and a gurdwara. The walk brought together a number of people from different faiths in Bedford. At each place of worship there were prayers and readings from different faiths.

Cardiff Interfaith Association held a meeting on 21 May featuring speakers from the Baha'i, Hindu and Jewish faiths who addressed the topic, "Is peace a requirement for the advancement of mankind?". Following the three presentations there was open discussion. The meeting, which took place at the United Reformed Church in Cardiff, was one in a series of meetings being organised by the Interfaith Association.

East of England Faiths Agency, which has recently been established to link faith community and inter faith organisations in the East of England Region, held a meeting at Bhaktivedanta Manor in Hertfordshire on 14 May. Following the meeting a tour of the Centre at the Manor took place and members of the Agency attended the arti ceremony followed by a shared tea provided by the community there.

Leeds. The multi-faith partnership, Faiths Together in Leeds 11, has been awarded £292,000 from the Community Fund. This is in addition to over £700,000 of funding received from the Single Regeneration Budget. The award is to help fund the Parents' Resource Centre in Beeston, a part of Leeds that has been identified as a regeneration area. The project is a unique partnership between local Christian and Muslim organisations and will involve the transformation of a parish hall into a community facility which will provide support to parents and a range activities for all members of the local community.

Sheffield Interfaith in association with the International Association for Religious Freedom (British Chapter) hosted a conference entitled "Multi-Faith Future..." at the Sikh Gurdwara in Sheffield on 2 February. Ishtiaq Ahmed, of the Bradford Council of Mosques spoke about "Lessons from Bradford" and other speakers included PC Tim Walls and Sgt Mohammed Rauf of the Black Police Association. A second conference on the issue of faith based schools was held on 12 March at Sheffield Hallam University. Speakers included Marylin Mason, Education Officer of the British Humanist Association and Cath Platt, Secretary of Sheffield Interfaith and Headteacher of a Jewish supplementary school.

South London Inter Faith Group organised a tour of Brixton Prison on 14 May, visiting two wings and meeting with prisoners. The Chaplain General of the Prison Service, Revd William Noblett spoke about the development of multi faith chaplaincy in the prison service. The groups also heard from Christian, Hindu, Muslim, Buddhist and Jewish prison chaplains and also from the prisoners themselves.

Westminster Interfaith held their seventeenth annual multi-faith pilgrimage for peace on 8 June. Participants gathered at three different starting points; at Finsbury Park to visit the Sukhavati Amida Buddhist House; at Holloway Road to visit the North London Buddhist Centre; and at Turnham Green to visit the London Buddhist Vihara in Chiswick. All the "pilgrims" then travelled to Wesley's Chapel in East London and walked through Brick Lane to visit St Anne's RC Church, where lunch was served in the hall. Next stop was the East London Mosque followed by a visit to St Dunstan and All Saints C of E Church. The final leg took the "pilgrims" to the Gurdwara Sikh Sangat in Bow.

London Link Meeting

The Inter Faith Network London Link Meeting was held on 5 March at the National Institute of Social Work. A selection of news given by participants representing inter faith initiatives in Greater London follows. Full meeting notes can be obtained from the Network office.

Brent Inter Faith

Two members were invited to the civic service hosted by the Mayor of Brent last autumn. A Peace Vigil was held in October as a response to 11 September, which was followed by the annual pilgrimage of faith. The Local Strategic Partnership (LSP), being set up by Brent Council is seeking the views of local faith communities.

Croydon

Some useful links with Croydon Council have been made and it is hoped that Croydon Inter Faith Group can be revived. The South London Inter Faith Group's annual pilgrimage will be held in Croydon this summer.

East London

There is no formal inter faith group in the inner East London area, but often temporary alliances are forged for specific tasks. The Canary Wharf Multi Faith Prayer Room is a good example of co-operation between the Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh communities, in conjunction with the business community.

Hampstead Interfaith Group

The Group is an informal one, which is run from the home of the convenor. Meetings are held eight times a year with an average attendance of 20 people per meeting. The October meeting, when the topic of discussion was links between Islam, Christianity and Judaism from a Muslim point of view, attracted about 40 people.

Harrow Inter Faith Council

The Council links both organisational and individual members. It arranges two major events each year: a meeting with the Mayor of Harrow and an annual lecture for Harrow SACRE. The local MP expressed an interest in the work of the Council and last year invited members of it to a meeting at the House of Commons. They held an exhibition in 2000 and are now working on producing a web site based on this. They also try to support other local groups, such as the Kenton Inter Faith Group.

Hounslow

A new inter faith initiative has been established in Hounslow, the Hounslow Friends in Faith.

Kingsbury

Following the terrorist attacks of 11 September the Christian Borough Deans issued a statement in conjunction with local Muslim leaders which was picked up by the local press and in October a Christian/Muslim dialogue meeting was held at the London Inter Faith Centre. A working party has been set up and has worked with Brent SACRE on producing materials for use in schools. The Christian/Muslim group hopes to link neighbouring churches with mosques so that it is easier for local people of the two faiths to meet one another.

Lambeth Multi-Faith Action Group

The Group developed following an Inner Cities Religious Council conference held in South East London in October 1993. Meetings are held every six to eight weeks and two major events are held each year. It is hoped to arrange a meeting in the next few months with Lambeth Council and the faith communities in the Borough.

North London

A Christian/Muslim dialogue group in Finsbury Park has been meeting for about 12 years, and has facilitated contact with the Muslim community at the Finsbury Park Mosque, a focus of controversy recently.

Redbridge Council of Faiths

The Council was established in 1976 and links people of 11 different faiths in the area. A number of members of the Group are also on the local SACRE. The Group arranges visits to different places of worship. Last summer they held a successful pilgrimage which visited a church, gurdwara, mosque and temple. After 11 September members of the Group and members of Newham Association of Faiths met at a local mosque and joined in a celebration of Eid.

South London Inter Faith Group

The Group has been established for almost 25 years and has about 200 members on its mailing list, although attendance at meetings averages 30 to 40. The Group publishes a newsletter and aims to have members of the major faith communities in South London represented on their committee.

Westminster Interfaith

Westminster Interfaith has recently moved its offices to Kensington. Since 11 September, there has been a marked increase in subscriptions to their newsletter. They held an inter faith day of prayer on 24 January, the same day as the gathering of religious leaders convened by the Pope in Assisi, Italy. They were planning an event for April demonstrating how different faiths use music, poetry and dance in prayer. The organisation is probably best known for its annual Pilgrimage for Peace (see page 8).

London Civic Forum

The Forum was launched in September 2000 to work alongside the Mayor and Greater London Assembly. It links different sectors and communities, including faith communities. Currently there are about 900 member organisations, 170 of which are faith groups. Forum membership is split into five electoral colleges one of which is for faith communities. The faith community college collates the views of London's faith communities and feeds them into the GLA and other public bodies. The Forum is also encouraging local authorities to work with faith groups and hopes that many of London's local authorities will make a pledge to follow through on the Faith and Community guidelines published in February by the Local Government Association.

Representatives of two London local authorities also attended the link meeting:

Mr Andy Thomas, Faith and Social Action Officer at Lewisham Council, said that his role is to engage with the community aspects of faith groups rather than with their religious practice. The Council has felt it important to develop links and partnerships with local faith communities. Over the last two and a half years there has been a high level of interest from faith groups. Consultation meetings held by the Council are now open to faith groups where they have contributed on topics such as: teenage pregnancy, youth, education and race equality. The Council has also established a "Faith in Lewisham Fund" totalling £50,000 per year, which offers grant funding to local faith community projects.

Mr Harmander Singh, a Corporate Strategy Officer for the London Borough of Tower Hamlets, commented on the growing realisation of the contribution which faith groups make to society. Voluntary organisations, many of which are faith based are working in areas where other initiatives have failed to make a difference. He welcomed the LGA guidelines on Faith and Community and said that the Faith Practitioners Regeneration Network, of which he is a member, intends to take forward the guidelines and examine how local authorities across the country take up this guidance.

Yorkshire and the Humber regional link meeting

The Network's Yorkshire and the Humber regional link meeting took place on 17 April at the Friends' Meeting House in Leeds. A selection of news given by participants representing inter faith initiatives in the region follows. Full meeting notes can be obtained from the Network office.

Bradford

Bradford Concord Interfaith Association arranges monthly meetings and an annual Walk for Friendship. This year the walk took place on Saturday 15 June, starting at the Interfaith Education Centre. They will also be holding a Queen's Jubilee celebration evening hosted by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress at Bradford City Hall. The Anglican Bishop of Bradford has meetings every six weeks or so with other faith leaders and this has been very important in developing and maintaining relations between them.

A Bradford participant noted the need to address the root causes of the problems which gave rise to last summer's disturbances, including problems of economic deprivation as a result of the collapse of traditional industries and the dropping out of young people of different communities from the educational system.

The local SACRE is very active and has a very good locally agreed syllabus, which has been widely copied by other educational authorities. Bradford Council have produced, in consultation with faith groups, a guide to diversity in Bradford. There have been various suburban initiatives in Bradford, such as one in Thornbury where there has been a programme of visits where people of different faiths visit each other's places of worship and learn about each other.

Doncaster Inter Faith Network

The Doncaster Inter Faith Network was established on 25 February after an open meeting of faith community organisations which was organised by Doncaster Racial Equality Council and the Ethnic Minority Regeneration Partnership. The group has met twice since then and is currently planning an event to mark the anniversary of the 11 September terrorist attacks in the US.

Kingston Upon Hull Inter Faith Forum

The Forum has four meetings a year. Traditionally these have been very academic, but they are discussing how this may be changed. The local authority has regular meetings for faith and cultural groups which is chaired by one of its officers. The Forum is hoping to work closely with the Council and possibly apply to it for funding.

Kirklees, Calderdale and Wakefield

Post 11 September there has been a reawakening in the Huddersfield area of the realisation of the need for an inter faith group. The Sikh mayor arranged a special inter faith celebration as part of his year, attended by 400 people. It is hoped that a new Huddersfield inter faith group may emerge.

North Kirklees Inter Faith Council has established a small planning group and holds a number of meetings. They have a meeting coming up with Ann Taylor, MP for Dewsbury, and other speakers and a meeting on health issues is planned for September. The hospital in Dewsbury has a multi-faith chaplaincy. In Halifax there is a council led initiative where they have tried to expand the local Churches' group to have an inter faith dimension.

In Wakefield, following meetings with the local council and the Wakefield Mosques' Committee, the Wakefield Christian-Muslim group will be re-launched in a few weeks' time.

Leeds

Membership of the Leeds Concord Inter Faith Association is primarily on a fellowship basis and complements the work of the Leeds Faith Communities Liaison Forum which has more of a public representative role. Concord now has a website. They continue to organise an annual inter faith peace service. The strength of Concord is the personal relationships between the people of different faiths.

The Council of the Leeds Faith Communities Liaison Forum was launched in March 2001. It comprises representatives of the Baha'i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh faiths. Leeds City Council is represented by a Councillor. The Forum is concerned with dialogue as it relates to public issues. It has a strong commitment to regeneration and faith based social action. In October a vigil was held in the wake of the events of 11 September. The Forum has a seat on the Leeds Initiative, Neighbourhoods and Community Strategy Group (the LSP). A social dinner and three training conferences have been held. John Battle MP has been very supportive of the Forum.

Rotherham.

In the autumn of last year Rotherham Parish Church hosted an exhibition of Islamic Art, which was planned prior to the terrorist attacks of 11 September. In the week following 11 September an inter faith gathering was held at the church to remember those who lost their lives in these. Last November at a meeting of the Anglican Diocesan Synod the impact of the terrorist attacks was discussed and a local imam, Imam Mohammed Ishmail, was invited to address the meeting. Following a visit made by the Anglican Bishop of Sheffield last year to the Atfulina Islamic School in Gaza the Diocese has been raising money for the school and several local Muslims have also joined this fundraising effort.

Sheffield Interfaith

Sheffield Interfaith was founded in 1993. It has 91 members, but the Group is concerned at the under-representation of Muslims among the membership and building bridges with Muslims is seen as a priority. SI holds 6 meetings a year, including visits to places of worship. Recently they held a meeting on the topic of faith schools. SI gets a lot of enquiries, many of which they are now able to direct to their website which has a number of useful links. They have assisted BBC Sheffield in finding minority faith representatives to help monitor the religious content of their programmes.

York Inter Faith Group

The Group has been going for a number of years but has little contact with faith groups other than Christian and Baha'i. The current year's programme lists 15 meetings. Around 20 to 30 people come to each meeting but half of these are different every time depending on who the speaker is. They are presently looking at ways to try and get people from different faiths to speak about the inter faith experience from their own religious perspective.

The Inter Faith Network for the UK

The Inter Faith Network was founded in 1987. It works with its member bodies to promote good relations between the faith communities in the UK, to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make the UK a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions where all can practise their faith with integrity. The Network:

- Provides information on faith communities and on inter faith affairs
- Advises on multi faith projects and inter faith issues
- Publishes materials to aid work in the religious and inter faith sectors
- Fosters inter faith co-operation on social issues
- Holds regular meetings where social and religious questions of concern to the different faith communities can be examined together
- Links over 90 member organisations including: representative bodies from the different faith communities; inter faith organisations; local inter faith groups; educational and academic bodies

Community cohesion: a new agenda for inter faith relations?

Inside this issue

Network News	2	Last summer's disturbances in some of northern England's towns and cities have underlined the importance of work to increase connections between communities, including the different faiths. This is a key part of what has come to be known as the "community cohesion" agenda. The Network's 2002 National Meeting which took place on 15 July in London focused on community cohesion and discussed whether this concept suggested a new agenda for inter faith relations. The meeting provided a valuable opportunity to explore the contribution which faith communities and inter faith organisations at a national and local level can make to the community cohesion agenda, as well as to explore some of the pitfalls to be avoided.

Alan Smith, Team Leader at the Community Cohesion Unit of the Home Office set out the Government's current agenda on community cohesion, which he stressed was a developing policy area. He said that community cohesion is about understanding and responding to the requirements of community and that the Government has made the community cohesion agenda a high priority.

Turning to what faith communities can do to contribute to this agenda he said that there are now many opportunities

Around the country, events and services were held to remember the nearly 3,000 people who died one year ago, on 11 September, in the attacks on the Twin Towers of the World Trade Centre in New York and other sites in the USA.

Across the UK a minute's silence was held at 1.46 (the time that American Airlines Flight 111 crashed into the North Tower).

A memorial service was held at St Paul's in the presence of HRH The Prince of Wales, who was accompanied by Prince Harry. The Prime Minister and other senior members of the Government and faith leaders were also present together with the US Ambassador William S Farish.

The service was led by Canon Stephen

Oliver and the address was given by Rt Revd Richard Chartres, Bishop of London.

Scottish faith leaders gathered on 12 September at Scottish Churches House in Dunblane to commit themselves to work together, in prayer and common action, for peace. They also committed themselves to continuing to meet to explore ways of building increased trust between the faith communities of Scotland as a contribution to global society which reflected the values inscribed on the Mace of the Scottish Parliament: wisdom, justice, compassion and integrity.

Just a few of the other commemorative events held around the UK were:

for faith communities to get involved especially at the local level through Local Strategic Partnerships.

Councillor Laura Willoughby of the Equalities Executive of the Local Government Association offered an overview of the LGA's work, and that of local authorities, in taking forward the approach set out in Faith and Community and described the aims and content of the LGA's guidance on community cohesion, of which a consultative draft was published in May.

In response Indarjit Singh, of the Network of Sikh Organisations and the Inner Cities Religious Council, stressed that the Government, local government and bodies like the Commission for Racial Equality, should be wary of over ambitious, all encompassing schemes and that he hoped they would increase their support for the many, often grass-roots, faith-based and other initiatives with a proven record in combating prejudice and working for greater communal harmony.

Charu Ainscough, of the Gujarat Hindu Centre, Preston and Equal Opportunities Officer (Race) at Lancashire County Council examined the impact of the community cohesion agenda on faith communities and the response that needs to be made at a local level. She gave examples of grass roots projects which offered differing strategies to contribute to community cohesion, including the developing role of women.

Rev Philip Sumner, Chair, Oldham Inter Faith Forum and Basit Shah, Vice-Chair Oldham Inter Faith Forum discussed the new Forum that has been set up in the wake of the disturbances in Oldham last summer.

Alan Schwartz, Inter Faith Council for Wales/ Cyngor Cyd-Ffydd Cymru talked about the Council which has come into being following an initiative by the First Minister of the Welsh National Assembly in the aftermath of the events of 11 September last year.

In the final session Rev Baroness Kathleen Richardson of Calow, Moderator of the Churches' Commission on Inter Faith Relations, offered her closing reflections on the day's discussions.

Delegates also took part in one of four workshops with the following themes:

- Government and faith communities - partners working towards greater community cohesion
- Local inter faith councils and groups and community cohesion

- Inter faith education and community cohesion
- Young people and the inter faith dimension of community cohesion

A full report of the meeting is available from the Network office priced £3.00 plus p&p.

NETWORK NEWS

New member bodies

The Network AGM for 2002 was held on 15 July following the National Meeting. At the meeting the newly formed Inter Faith Council for Wales was accepted into membership of the Network, together with six local inter faith initiatives: Blackburn with Darwen Inter Faith Council; Leeds Faith Community Liaison Forum; Manchester Inter Faith Forum; Merseyside Council of Faiths; Interfaith MK (Milton Keynes) and Southampton Council of Faiths. The transfer of Network membership from the University of Derby's Religious Resource and Research Centre to the University's Multi Faith Centre (which has taken over responsibility for the publication of Religions in the UK) was also agreed. The Network now has 97 member bodies.

Executive Committee changes

At the 2002 AGM Hon Barnabas Leith of the Baha'i community was elected to serve as a Vice-Chair, in succession to Mr Jehangir Sarosh, who remains a member of the Committee. The following were elected to serve as new members of the Committee for 2002-03: Dr Elizabeth Harris; Mr Ramesh Kallidai; Mr Shabbir Lakha; Mr Abdur Rauf Mustafai; and Ms Priti Shah. Bimal Krishna das (co-opted to the Committee in September 2001) and Mr Bipin Mehta (elected in June 1998) were warmly thanked for their service to the Committee as they stood down from membership of the Committee.

participants discussed international issues in the wake of 11 September 2001 during an evening discussion, "Shalom/Inshallah", organised by Rev Ken Newell at the Fitzroy Presbyterian Church.

Bolton. A service was held in Victoria Square in the town centre, conducted by the Anglican Bishop of Bolton, Rt Rev David Gillett, and the Chair of the Bolton and Rochdale Methodist Circuit, Rev Keith Garner, with contributions from the Hindu and Muslim communities.

Cardiff. The City and County Councils held a memorial service on 11 September at the Church in Wales Parish Church at Cardiff, St John.

Chelmsford. An Act of Remembrance and Vigil for Peace took place in the town centre on 11 September. The Mayor and other civic officers were joined by leaders from seven faith communities.

Dudley. A multi faith act of remembrance took place at the Merry Hill Shopping Centre.

Edinburgh. On 15 September Edinburgh Inter-Faith Association held a conference, "Re-envisioning interfaith post 11 September 2001".

Ipswich. In Ipswich, on 11 September, an evening of personal reflection with readings, music and dance with contributions from people of all ages and many faiths, "On the Wings of Peace", took place at the Corn Exchange. It was organised by Suffolk Inter-Faith Resource.

Leeds. The Faith Communities Liaison Forum worked with Radio Leeds on an hour-long special programme, broadcast on 8 September, with reflections on how the events of 11 September and subsequent months had affected their lives. There were contributions from children, men and women from six faith communities, including scholars and leaders. The edited programme went out to an audience across West Yorkshire

Liverpool. A commemorative event, organised by the City of Liverpool and Habitat for Humanity, took place at Pier Head on 11 September. It was attended by the Lord Mayor, representatives of the emergency services and young people from all the faiths in Liverpool.

London

An inter faith meeting took place at St Andrew's Church in Streatham on 11 September. Christian, Jewish and Muslims representatives worked together to give a message of peace and co-operation between all communities.

At London Central Mosque on 11 September, the Islamic Society of Britain and Young Muslims UK hosted a commemoration event to remember those who had died in the USA on 11 September and others who have died since.

Members of the Muslim Police Association and the Jewish Police Association along with Sikh, Christian, Greek and Black Police Associations, laid a wreath with word "Peace" on it outside the US Embassy in London to remember the victims of the World Trade Centre Attacks.

On 11 September, an all day memorial vigil took place at the London Inter Faith Centre. There were brief readings from different traditions and scriptures and a lighted candle shone to the memory of those who had lost their lives. Silent thought and prayer were offered for a better world, and for all those whose decisions and actions may help that world to come.

A multi faith peace service took place at West London Synagogue on 11 September.

On 9,10 and 11 September at the Royal Opera House, with an evening of live music and poetry, the Oxford Research Group, launched "Peace Direct" to explore how people are transforming terror into hope and power.

Brent Inter Faith organised a multi faith workshop on Religion and Intolerance at the London Inter Faith Centre on 13 October. People of all religious traditions and none were invited to examine the roots of religious violence and to suggest possible inter faith solutions to the problems of religious intolerance and violence.

Nottingham. Special prayers for peace were said at "A Gathering of People of Faith Uniting in Peace and Reconciliation" at St Barnabas' Catholic Cathedral in Nottingham on 11 September.

Sheffield. An ecumenical service took place at Sheffield Cathedral followed by an inter faith civic "time of remembrance" at the Peace Gardens.

NATIONAL UPDATE

Anxiety over Iraq

Concern over the possibility of military action against Iraq has led some faith community organisations to urge caution on the Government. On 10 October the Church of England House of Bishops said that conclusive evidence was lacking to justify military action at that time and that force must only be considered as a last resort and with the UN's endorsement.

The Muslim Council of Britain issued a press release on 15 October recording its opposition to war against Iraq while noting that the aggressive regime of Saddam Hussain is a tragedy for the Iraqi people.

At a local level, faith leaders in Leicester issued a statement following a meeting held at the invitation of Rt Rev Tim Stevens, Anglican Bishop of Leicester, expressing concern about possible military action against Iraq and in particular the possible participation of British forces in this.

Golden Jubilee Young People's Faith Forum

Following the Golden Jubilee Young People's Faith Forum on 10 June (covered in Inter Faith Update 19), discussions are in progress between the Golden Jubilee Office, Department for Education and Skills, Qualifications and Curriculum Authority, Home Office, Inter Faith Network, National Association of SACRE's and respect to discuss ways of building on this event such as encouraging the holding of other youth forums around the UK.

The full and summary reports on the Youth Forum will be available next month. For further information or to order a copy of the report contact Warwick Hawkins on Tel 020 7 020 7411 5581 or email: Warwick.Hawkins@homeoffice.gsi.gov.uk

Royal visits to faith communities

The following Royal visits have taken place as part of the Golden Jubilee celebrations: The Queen and The Duke of Edinburgh visited the Manchester Jewish Museum on 24 July; and the Scunthorpe Islamic Centre and Mosque on 31 July. The Queen visited the Guru Nanak Gurdwara in Leicester on 1 August. Other members of the Royal family also visited places of worship of the Baha'i, Buddhist, Jain and Zoroastrian faiths on behalf of The Queen. The Princess Royal visited the London Buddhist Vihara on 10 July; the Duke of York attended a Baha'i reception in Central London on 11 July; the Earl and Countess of Wessex attended a Zoroastrian thanksgiving service in North London on 26 June and visited the Jain Temple in Leicester on 3 September.

Religious discrimination and a single equality body

Towards Equality and Diversity, published last autumn by the Government, set out proposals for implementing the European Directive on discrimination in employment, including discrimination on grounds of religion or belief. The Government has been considering the responses which it has received to this document and it is expected that before the end of the year it will be publishing draft regulations to give effect to the Directive in UK legislation and proposals on the provision of guidance to those who will be affected by it.

As reported in Inter Faith Update 19, Barbara Roche MP, the Minister responsible for co-ordinating equalities issues across Government, announced in May the Government's intention to examine the feasibility of a single equality body which would span the new fields of religion or belief, sexual orientation and age as well as race, gender and disability. A number of consultations, meetings and seminars have been held to discuss this idea and the Government is expected to bring forward its conclusions on this by the turn of the year.

Whatever view the Government reaches, it will be important for there to be adequate arrangements in place, if necessary on an interim basis pending the creation of a single equality body, to provide advice, guidance and support to individuals, employers and interested organisations on the operation of the new legislative framework as this relates to religion or belief, sexual orientation and in due course age, since there are currently no institutional arrangements dealing with these, unlike race and disability. Legislation to give effect to the Directives's provisions on religion and belief and sexual orientation has to be in place before the end of 2003 and for age before the end of 2004.

LGA guidance on community cohesion

Work has been in progress on revising the draft guidance on community cohesion being prepared by the Local Government Association (see lead report on Network's National Meeting) in the light of the comments received by it on the draft made available in May and further conversations with interested organisations. The final revised guidance is due to be launched on 11 December.

The blasphemy laws and incitement to religious hatred

Inter Faith Update 19 reported on the setting up of a House of Lords Select Committee to consider and report on the law relating to religious offences. The Select Committee will look at whether existing religious offences (notably blasphemy) should be amended or abolished and whether a new offence of incitement to religious hatred should be created.

The Committee has received a good deal of written evidence and is now hearing oral evidence from a number of organisations and individuals. Hearings are likely to continue up until the end of the this year with a report being published in the early months of next year.

2001 Census results

The Registrar General for England and Wales announced on 30 September the first set of results from the 2001 Census which show that the population of the United Kingdom on 29 April 2001 was 58,789,194. A breakdown of the population in each local authority is also available on the Census web site at: www.statistics.gov.uk/census.

The next set of Census results is scheduled for release on 13 February 2003. This is due to include more detailed statistics, including by religion, both overall and by local authority area.

Government initiatives to help the voluntary and community sector

A pilot web site has been launched giving information about grants for voluntary and community sector organisations available from various Government Departments including the Home Office, Department for Education and Skills, and the Department of Health. The site is the first stage of a larger project to develop an online source of information relating to grants that are available from Government to the Sector. The web site can be accessed at: www.volcomgrants.gov.uk

The Treasury published on 10 September a report on the cross cutting review of the role of the voluntary and community sector in service delivery. Described as a blueprint to transform the way Government and the voluntary and community sectors work together, it is backed by £93 million of Government funding. This funding is in addition to the £125 million Futurebuilders Investment Fund which has been set up to help the sector in its public service work. The report can be accessed on the internet at: www.hm-treasury.gov.uk/mediastore/otherfiles/cross\_cut\_vol02.pdf or be obtained by calling the Public Inquiry Unit at the Treasury Tel: 020 7270 4558.

Review of charity law

Wide ranging changes in the law and regulation of charities have been proposed in a consultation document published by the Government towards the end of September and available at www.strategy.gov.uk/2002/charity/report/index.htm. The proposals will be of interest to faith community and inter faith organisations. The deadline for responses to the consultation is 31 December and these need to be sent to the Strategy Unit, Home Office (Charities Project), Admiralty Arch, The Mall, London SW1A 2WH or emailed to piuvolsect@cabinet-office.x.gsi.gov.uk

The document proposes that in the future there should be a clearer focus on charities as providing a public benefit. Under its proposals, a charity would be redefined as an organisation which has one or more of the following ten purposes: the prevention and relief of poverty; social and community advancement; the advancement of education, religion, health, amateur sport, or environmental protection and improvement; the promotion of human rights, conflict resolution and reconciliation; and “other purposes beneficial to the community”. The review proposes that for the purposes of defining “religion” the current interpretation should be widened to cover not only “monotheistic faiths like Christianity and Islam” (which case law has tended to interpret “religion” to mean) but also what the review describes as “faiths that are multi-deity (such as Hinduism) or non-deity (such as some types of Buddhism)”.

The review argues that charities should have greater freedom to trade without having to establish separate trading subsidiaries and also that they should have greater freedom to campaign for social change. It wants to see charities providing the public with better information about their work and also developing a self regulatory initiative to promote good practice in fundraising.

The document proposes a number of changes to give charities greater flexibility, together with the introduction of new forms of incorporation which are more suited to charities. The consultation document also proposes changes in registration requirements, removing the exemption which many Christian bodies at present have from needing to register as charities (so called “exempt charities” which receive all the benefits of charitable status) and moving to a situation where the Charity Commission undertakes ongoing checks to ensure that charities are operating to the public benefit. While it is proposed to remove the automatic presumption that religious organisations provide a public benefit, the document says that it is not the aim to force religious organisations “to undertake community activities such as social services for older people or the sick, although many of course already do.” It recognises that “religious practice tends generally to contribute to the social and moral welfare of adherents”, and it is not proposed to change the principle that “celebration of a religious rite which is open to the public should be regarded as providing public benefit”.

Coroners and death certification

There are two public enquiries running concurrently which could have a bearing on the arrangements for the certification of deaths and for post-mortems.

The Review of Coroner Services was set up in the summer of 2001 to review and report on the death certification and investigation processes in England, Wales and Northern Ireland. It is expected to report in March 2003 and released a consultation document in August on which it has invited views by 22 November. The enquiry is proposing changes to the coroners service. It recognises the concerns of particular faith communities over the treatment of bodies and the time scale for burial or cremation. The consultation document can be found at the Review’s website www.coronersreview.org.uk or a copy can be obtained from its office (Tel: 020 7664 8895).

The inquiry set up to review issues arising from the case of Dr Harold Shipman, convicted of murdering a number of his patients, is due to publish in late October its discussion paper on an alternative system of death certification with requests for comment by 25 November. It will be available on its website www.theshipmaninquiry.org.uk or a copy can be obtained from the inquiry’s office (Tel: 0161 237 2435/6).

Launch of the Faith-Based Regeneration Network

The Faith-Based Regeneration Network was launched at the Faith in Regeneration conference which took place at the Muslim Cultural Heritage Centre in North Kensington, London on 30 September. The conference began with readings from eight different faith traditions followed by a keynote address by David Rayner, Secretary of the Inner Cities Religious Council and Head of the Community Participation Branch in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. Participants attended workshop sessions during the day dealing with topics such as Building Cohesive Communities and Capacity Building. The FBRN is run by a steering group made up of a number of professionals from different faith communities who are actively involved with regeneration projects around the country.

Directory of faiths in Camden

Camden Council in London, one of the 19 local authorities which have appointed an officer with special responsibility for faith issues, has published Neighbours: A Directory of Faith Communities in Camden. It lists all the places of worship and faith

Inter faith profile

Dr Natubhai Shah of the Jain Community has been a Network Executive Committee member since the Network was set up in 1987. He has also written several books about Jainism and is actively involved with a variety of inter faith initiatives.

How did you first get involved with inter faith dialogue?

In about 1978, while I was the Founder President of Jain Samaj Europe in Leicester, I was asked to deliver a lecture about Jainism to a World Congress of Faiths event, after which I became involved with a number of inter faith organisations. When Leicester Council of Faiths was established in 1982 I was a founder member. A few years later I met Brian Pearce who discussed with me the idea of setting up what became the Inter Faith Network for the UK which was then being planned. When it was established in 1987 Jain Samaj Europe was one of its first member bodies and I became an Executive Committee member, a position I have held since then. During 1999-2000 I also served as a Vice-Chair of the Network.

The Jain faith is relatively less well known in the UK than those with larger communities. Does this bring particular challenges for adherents?

Although Jains have a distinctive philosophy, way of life, rituals and festivals, we have had a problem of identity. In the past, when Jainism was less well known, to avoid complications the majority of Jains often used to refer to their faith as Hindu (Jain), particularly in health, education and other institutional situations. So there has been a need to educate our own community to state their faith as Jain and at the same time to emphasise that we believe in non-violence and reverence for all life. As time has passed, and especially after the establishment of the Jain Centre and Temple in Leicester, more people have become aware of Jainism. However, Jains still do face challenges in obtaining suitable foods to meet their particular dietary requirements and many also face challenges in observing the sacred days when they may be required to fast.

Is there a “Jain perspective” on relations between different faiths?

The Jain belief in anekantavada or relative pluralism has made us tolerant towards other faiths and our belief in non-violence, forgiveness and other ethical values have won respect from others. Our motto “live and help to live” has been very helpful in building good relations between people of other faiths. Jains respect the faiths of others and believe in equality of all souls and equal opportunities for all to practice their own faith.

What do you think have been the most important developments in inter faith relations over the last two decades?

The inter faith movement has helped to increase awareness and knowledge about the different faiths and also to increase understanding between them. The joint approach by different faiths to government and other institutions has helped to put faiths on the map and all have benefited. In Leicester, because of inter faith co-operation, the Jain community has been able to develop extremely good relations with Leicester City Council, Leicestershire County Council and with the local media.

What are your hopes for inter faith relations in the UK in the coming years?

I would like to see all faiths have adequate places of worship. It may be that faith communities which have larger premises could share their use with other faith communities.

I hope that we can continue to work together effectively to promote the common themes of the different faiths such as non-violence, forgiveness, pluralism, compassion and highlight them to the media, government and also to the general public, thus raising the profile of faith communities in the public eye.

community centres in the borough and includes information about the communities in Camden. The aim of the Directory is to help to build bridges between the Council and the faith communities in the area. It was launched at an inter faith event hosted by the Leader of Camden Council at Camden Town Hall on 10 October. Producing such a directory or carrying out a "mapping" exercise is one of the recommendations of the Faith and Community guidelines published by the Local Government Association earlier this year in association with the Network. Further information can be obtained from Nina Rahel at nina.rahel@camden.gov.uk.

Building on Faith

The Church Urban Fund launched a new publication, Building on Faith, at a conference in London on 25 September. The morning session of the conference was chaired by Hon Barnabas Leith of the Baha'i community. Participants heard from John Battle, MP for Leeds West and Doreen Finneron, co-editor of Building on Faith. The publication examines the role that faith community buildings can play in helping to build a sense of community regeneration. The report and accompanying video are available from the Church Urban Fund, 1 Millbank, London SW1P 3JZ Tel: 020 7898-1647.

The West and Islam in the media

The Muslim Council of Britain hosted a symposium on 20 June at the Islamic Cultural Centre in London on "The West and Islam in the Media" aimed at furthering cultural ties between Britain and the Islamic World. Speakers included Mr Mike O'Brien MP, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State, Dr Khalid Al-Ankary, Minister of Higher Education, Saudi Arabia and Dr Ahmed Al-Dubayan, Director General of the Islamic Cultural Centre.

Religious perspectives on organ donation

A national project, based in Bradford and funded by UK Transplant, has been set up to produce educational material about organ donation and the perspectives on this of the UK's major religions. The aim is to educate health care professionals and the general public about religious opinions on this important issue. For more information contact Rachel Howitt on tel: 01274 365952 or email: rachel.howitt@bradfordhospitals.nhs.uk

Faiths for peace

A multi faith reception hosted by the Muslim Council of Britain was held at the Commonwealth Institute in London on 25 June to urge peace in the Indian subcontinent. Lord Filkin, Minister at the Home Office, attended the event alongside leading figures from the Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Muslim and Sikh communities. Speakers at the event included Iqbal Sacranie, Om Parkash Sharma and Indarjit Singh.

Friends in Faith

The Oxford Diocesan Committee for Inter Faith Concerns has published a resource book, Friends in Faith, featuring examples of inter faith good practice in the Thames Valley. Edited by Hugh Boulter of the Reading Inter Faith group, it contains articles written by people of different faiths, many of whom are actively involved with local inter faith groups in the South East. It is available priced £5.00 from: The Board of Social Responsibility, Diocesan Church House, North Hinksey, Oxford OX2 0NB.

Local Roundup

Bradford Concord Interfaith Society held their annual multi faith Walk for Friendship on 15 June. It started from the Bradford Interfaith Education Centre where the Group were sent off by the Lord Mayor of Bradford. They visited the Ahl-e-Hadith Mosque, the Columba Community House (where there were also presentations about the Baha'i and Sikh faiths), the Sai Baba Centre and ended at the New Testament Church of God.

The Glasgow Forum of Faiths was launched at Glasgow City Chambers on 23 September. Representatives from the faith communities of Glasgow signed a declaration promising to work together for justice and mutual understanding. The Forum is supported by Glasgow City Council which has also pledged to fund inter faith initiatives among the faith communities. The Forum will meet once or twice a year with City Councillors to discuss issues of common concern.

Interfaith MK (Milton Keynes) organised an event at the Milton Keynes Quaker Centre on 15 October entitled Faiths Unite for Peace 2002. It was held during the Week of Prayer for World Peace and participants joined together to read a prayer for peace. Representatives of different faith communities then made short presentations from their faith traditions.

Luton. On 9 June Dr Mohammed Elsmary, President of the Canadian Islamic Congress spoke about spirituality from an Islamic perspective at an event held at Luton Town Hall. On 3 July Professor P D Premasini, Head of the Department of Buddhist Studies at the University of Perademiya, Sri Lanka addressed the topic “Buddhism and Violence – Training Emotions” at the Friends House, Luton. Luton Council of Faiths helped to arrange these two events.

The Richmond Interfaith Group in association with Hounslow Friends of Faith organised an event on 25 July exploring beliefs about evil and forgiveness at the Richmond and Putney Unitarian Church. Members of both groups heard from Moulana Shahid Raza of the Muslim College, Rabbi David Rose of the Richmond Synagogue and Dr Elizabeth Harris, the Secretary for Inter Faith of the Methodist Church.

Wales. The Afon Taf High School in Merthyr Tydfil, Wales has established a “House of Religions”, a multi-sensory centre for learning about aspects of six major world religions. It consists of a Buddhist garden and Jewish kitchen and representations of a Christian church; Muslim mosque; Hindu mandir; and Sikh gurdwara. The project has been supported by a number of local businesses and organisations and faith communities were consulted on the design of the centre. The Welsh Secondary School Association has recognised the educational value of the House by presenting the Religious Studies Department with a special award.

South East Regional Link Meeting

The South East Regional Link Meeting was held on Wednesday 19 June 2002 in London. After a brief update on the work of the Network representatives of each initiative present described the recent work of their groups:

North Kent Council for Interfaith Relations

The initiative grew out of an Inner Cities Religious Council (ICRC) conference which took place in the area some years ago. The members have taken an activist position within the wider community, particularly relating to the decision making processes involved in the redevelopment of North Kent. They recently met with the concept architect working on the plan to build 30,000 homes in Kent Thameside and felt that it was very positive that developers were beginning to seek an inter faith perspective on their work. One of their major achievements recently is their “Working Party on Health” which developed a set of guidelines on spiritual care in hospitals. They also have a very active Women’s Multi Faith Forum.

Medway Inter Faith Action

The group is involved along with the local Ethnic Forum and Racial Equality Council in providing input to the authorities working on regeneration strategies that are aiming to rebuild local industry and develop the Medway towns. Recently Meridian Television published the “Cultural Diversity Guide” which is a valuable resource to raise inter faith awareness.

Oxford Round Table of Religions

The group is re-forming after having been largely inactive for a number of years. It now consists of 15 -20 people who meet in order to build good relations and trust. Members are keen to receive guidance/ideas from other local inter faith groups. The Round Table hopes to get a grant from Oxford Council and to take on a more active role in the community in 2003. It held a joint meeting with the International Interfaith Centre last year.

International Interfaith Centre (IIC), Oxford

On a local level, the Centre recently responded to tension between Jewish and Muslim communities in Oxford by organising an event at which an Orthodox Jew and a Palestinian Muslim from the Middle East spoke. The IIC organise regular conferences and seminars and also produce their own newsletter. Ongoing IIC projects include: the implementation of an “e-learning” course about inter faith issues (in association with the International Association for Religious Freedom); the launch of the Oxford Centre for Inter Faith Studies in Jan/Feb 2003; a “youth conflict transformation programme” with the Corrymeela community in Northern Ireland; a conference on religion, community and conflict; and an inter faith video series.

Brighton and Hove Inter Faith Contact Group

The Group has meetings four times a year and it also organises two fixed public meetings along a theme (such as United Nation Sunday which attracts between 150 to 300 people). It organises visits to places of worship; publishes internal and public directories (with the public directory available on their website); publishes a newsletter three times a year; and has produced a “Many Faiths, One People” statement signed by representatives of different faith communities in the area.

Surrey Inter Faith Friendship Group

This is largely an informal group, which organises events with a keynote speaker, such as on United Nations day or during One World Week, to which local dignitaries are invited.

Inter Faith MK (Milton Keynes)

The Group was founded in 1996 and currently has around 80 members and friends. Most faith groups are represented. They have monthly meetings and have an active role in civic ceremonies, and also work with the local authority. Other activities include: work on the local radio programme "Faith in Milton Keynes"; contributing to a book entitled "The Development of Ecumenism in Milton Keynes"; the annual inter faith service in the local Quaker Centre; a monthly newsletter; a website (www.mkweb.co.uk/ religion); and have a monthly column in a local newspaper along the lines of Thought for the Day on Radio 4. As a new city, Milton Keynes offers many opportunities for faith communities to get involved in its development. For example, planners are looking to develop the city centre to provide facilities for the not for profit sector and the idea of an inter faith centre has been proposed by members of the Group.

News from groups unable to send a representative

Wycombe Sharing of Faiths reported that since the events of 11 September there had been increased interest in inter faith activities and members have had various opportunities to involve themselves in local projects. The group held an evening of prayer and has been involved with the organising of an evening with the Mayor to remember victims of violence. Members of Sharing of Faiths have also been attending the District Council's Community Relations Forum.

IARF World Congress

The 31st World Congress of the International Association for Religious Freedom took place in Budapest from 28 July to 2 August. Its theme was "Religious Freedom: Europe's Story for Today's World". There were lectures on teaching tolerance, on a voluntary code of conduct for faith traditions which IARF is debating, using information technology for religious freedom, inter faith encounter and designing programmes that work. Each had associated workshops designed to encourage practical programmes in local communities. The inter faith lecture was given by Dr Harriet Crabtree of the Inter Faith Network and the inter faith section of the conference was organised for IARF by Sandy and Jael Bharat of the International Interfaith Centre in Oxford. For further information see <http://www.iarf-religiousfreedom.net/congress.html>.

Religion counts

Census results relating to religious identity in the UK were released on 13 February.

The 2001 Census included a question on religion which was answered by over 92% of people. In the UK as a whole, more than 76% of people recorded a religious affiliation; 23% in total recorded "none" or declined to answer the question.

There are separate figures for Buddhists, Christians, Hindus, Jews, Muslims and Sikhs. In Northern Ireland and Scotland (but not in England and Wales) there are separate figures for different Christian denominations. No separate "boxes" were included in the Census form for a number of other religious groups, including Baha'is, Jains and Zoroastrians. However, there was an opportunity for people to write in their religious identity if it was not listed on the form. In processing the Census data, these and other groups have been given codes within the "other" category so that figures can be produced for them separately. However, these figures will not become available until the summer.

The Office for National Statistics is planning to produce, later this year, a report on religion which will draw on the Census data, as well as material from

Faith responses to the situation over Iraq

Faith communities in the UK have responded with concern over the prospect of military action in Iraq. Several faith communities have expressed their views in written statements and members of different faith communities took part in the demonstrations in London and Glasgow on 15 February against possible war.

The Muslim Council of Britain wrote to the Prime Minister on 13 January urging him to find a way to avert a war. The Church of England's House of Bishops issued a second statement on 14 January urging the Government to work within the framework of the United Nations and not to take military action before the UN weapons inspectors complete their work.

Religious leaders in Scotland issued a joint statement at their meeting on 16

January (see page 4) and on 20 February the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Rowan Williams, and the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Westminster, Cardinal Cormac Murphy O'Connor issued a joint statement. This said that "it is vital that all sides in this crisis engage through the United Nations fully and urgently in a process, including continued weapons inspections, that could and should render the trauma and tragedy of war unnecessary".

A number of local inter faith organisations have also issued statements. The Executive of the Birmingham Council of Faiths wrote to the Prime Minister on 2 February voicing their concern over the threatened war with Iraq and the

Faith Communities Consultative Forum established

Faith community representative bodies in membership of the Network met on 12 December for their third meeting in 2002. They recommended that a Faith Communities Consultative Forum should now be formally established. At its meeting on 17 February the Network's Executive Committee agreed this step and terms of reference for the new Forum. The Forum will provide an opportunity for member faith communities collectively to discuss together issues of common concern.

The meeting on 12 December also heard from Ms Cathy Rees of the Department of Trade and Industry on the latest stages in the Government's consultation on the implementation on the European Directive on discrimination in the employment which includes discrimination on the grounds of religion and belief and future institutional arrangements in the equality field.

New part time staff

Ms Gaylina Nguyen and Ms Carol Reid, students at the University of Westminster and University College, London respectively, started work in the autumn at the Network office as part-time clerical assistants working one day and half a day respectively.

NATIONAL UPDATE

following day a meeting of Birmingham's faith leaders was held at Birmingham Peace Gardens where a declaration was signed urging that the Government should allow the work of the UN weapons inspectors to run its course.

The North Kirklees Inter-Faith Council issued a seven point declaration. Co-Chair of the Council, Kaushar Tai, said that it showed that people are absolutely committed to remaining united within the local community, no matter what happens on the world stage. Religious leaders in Newcastle issued a joint statement on 5 February saying that they "are determined to maintain the excellent inter-faith relations that this city is known for and wish the UK Government to know this will be more difficult if agreed international procedures are not followed in initiating any attack."

Faith leaders to welcome new Archbishop of Canterbury

Most Rev Dr Rowan Williams was confirmed in his appointment as Archbishop of Canterbury on 2 December at St Paul's Cathedral. He will be formally enthroned in Canterbury Cathedral on 27 February in a ceremony at which other faith communities will be officially represented.

Holocaust Memorial Day

On 27 January "Children and the Holocaust", the third national Holocaust Memorial Day event, took place at the Usher Hall in Edinburgh. Speakers included the Home Secretary, Rt Hon David Blunkett MP and Dr Jonathan Sacks, Chief other sources, in order to provide an authoritative and comprehensive statistical overview of religious identity in this country.

It was back in the mid 1990's that the Inter Faith Network and the Inner Cities Religious Council facilitated conversations between what is now the Office for National Statistics and faith community organisations about the case for a Census question on religious identity. In Scotland the issue was one for the Scottish Parliament.

At times it seemed that the question's inclusion would not be accepted for England and Wales, particularly when it became apparent that new Westminster legislation was required to authorise it there.

However, a strong co-operative effort across the different faith communities was eventually successful, even if the final question was not framed precisely as faith communities had hoped. Nonetheless, the data which is now available across the UK will be of great importance in helping authorities responsible, at a national and local level, for the delivery of public services to make sure that the needs of different faith communities are more adequately met. The full results not only at national level but also by local authority area can be viewed or downloaded from the internet at www.statistics.gov.uk or can be purchased from the Stationary Office at £75 Telephone: 0870 600 5522 to order a copy.

Rabbi of the United Hebrew Congregations of the Commonwealth, as well as young people from Edinburgh who had recently visited Auschwitz-Birkenau.

The core of the evening's programme was the testament of children and young people, telling of their witness to Nazi occupation, of the persecution, the ghettos, the cattle trucks and the Nazi death camps. The many groups who suffered Nazi persecution were remembered: Jews, Jehovah's Witnesses, Gypsies, Poles, Slavs, disabled people, homosexuals, political opponents and others. Events in other countries such as the former Yugoslavia, Armenia and Rwanda were also reflected in the programme.

More than 200 HMD events took place around Britain. For example in Wales, a memorial event was held on 28 January at the Temple of Peace in Port Talbot where as part of the service children from each of seven different faith communities each lit a candle on a giant menorah. The event was attended by First Minister Rt Hon Rhodri Morgan AM, who gave the closing speech.

"Holocaust Memorial Day is a very important day for the whole nation. It enables us both as individuals and as a society to reflect on the Holocaust and its contemporary relevance for us. With its theme of "children", tonight's event reminds us of our responsibility to educate particularly our young people about the Holocaust and other more recent atrocities that remind us of what can happen if we do not continue to be vigilant in preventing the spread of racism and intolerance."

Rt Hon David Blunkett MP

Community Cohesion Guidance launched

The Home Office Minister with responsibility for community cohesion, Beverley Hughes MP, launched Guidance on Community Cohesion at a conference at Local Government House on 11 December.

The guidance, which has been jointly published by the Local Government Association, the Home Office, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, the Commission for Racial Equality and the Inter Faith Network, provides advice on ways local authorities and other local agencies can review their existing policies and practices to contribute to more cohesive communities. It includes specific reference to recognising faith communities in public life at the local level and suggests local authorities explore the potential of forming a forum of faiths and supporting the public celebration of religious festivals.

Other speakers at the launch included Cllr Laura Willoughby, Chair of the LGA Equalities Executive, Beverley Bernard, Acting Chair of the Commission for Racial Equality, Ted Cantle, Chair of the Government appointed Community Cohesion Panel and Brian Pearce, Director of the Inter Faith Network.

The Guidance document can be downloaded from www.communitycohesion.gov.uk and a limited number of copies are available from the Network Office.

Scotland's religious leaders

meet

Religious leaders of different faiths in Scotland met at Glasgow's Central Mosque on 16 January. They reflected together on the place of prayer in their lives and also expressed concern over the impending threat of war in Iraq. Faith community representatives associated themselves with a statement which was sent to the Prime Minister urging the Westminster Government to work for a peaceful solution to the situation in Iraq and the Middle East. A further meeting of the religious leaders is planned for August in the new inter faith centre at the Samye Ling Tibetan Buddhist Monastery on Holy Island off the coast of Arran.

Young person's advisory forum meets in Stormont

The Children and Young Person's Advisory Forum has been created by the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister of Northern Ireland. Its role will be to inform the Assembly on the development of policies that have a particular impact on children. The sixty members of the Forum met for the first time in the Senate Chamber at Stormont on 16 November, a few days after the suspension of the Northern Ireland Assembly. The day long meeting heard from young people and was facilitated by youth workers who ensured that there were opportunities for lively activities as well as serious discussion. In addition to young Christians from both Catholic and Protestant communities, Forum members include young Baha'is, Hindus and Muslims. Since November there have been two further Forum meetings and some members of the Forum have been chosen to sit on a selection panel that will appoint the new Children's Commissioner in Northern Ireland.

respect launched in Northern Ireland and Scotland

The respect campaign had its launches in Scotland and Northern Ireland on 29 October and 11 December respectively. respect is a TimeBank initiative with the Prince's Trust to encourage young people to volunteer for each other's communities. The Scottish launch took place in Edinburgh and was attended by Professor Jonathan Sacks, Chief Rabbi of the United Hebrew Congregations of the Commonwealth. The launch event in Northern Ireland was held in association with the Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum. Nina Wadia of the comedy programme Goodness Gracious Me spoke at the event about respect, saying that respect is like clothing: nobody actually notices until you are not wearing any! She also spoke briefly about her own faith, being a member of one of the smaller minority faiths, Zoroastrianism.

Jewish employment handbooks launched

Barbara Roche MP, Deputy Minister for Women and Minister for Social Exclusion spoke at the launch of two new employment handbooks published by the Board of Deputies of British Jews on 11 December. The handbooks, one a guide for employers, Employing Jews, and the other a guide for Jewish employees, explain the nature of Jewish requirements such as Shabbat, Jewish festivals, clothing and food. Representatives of other faiths attended the launch along with leading members of the Board of Deputies. Copies can be obtained from the Board of Deputies of British Jews Tel: 020 7543 5400.

United Religions meeting

The United Religions Initiative UK held its second annual residential meeting at Luther King House in Manchester between 30 October and 1 November. The meeting included discussion of URI's work, highlighting plans for a possible peace centre and for a photographic exhibition about "the mix of spiritual experience, mainstream faiths, and indigenous religious traditions that serve this nation" (called "Spirit of the Nation") and youth work; sacred readings; and presentations, including one from Harriet Crabtree, Deputy Director of the Network on inter faith activity in the UK. For further information about "Spirit of the Nation" or about other aspects of URI's work, contact: info@uri.org.uk.

Jewish-Muslim Lecture Series

The Maimonides Foundation, in association with Leo Baeck College and the School of African and Oriental Studies (SOAS) held their annual Jewish-Muslim Lecture Series last autumn, "Perceiving the Other: Myths and Realities: an exploration of how Jews and Muslims perceive each other in the UK". The series which ran on Wednesdays in November and December at the Brunei Gallery at SOAS in London explored topics including the media; religious leadership; the legal system and the judiciary; and academia. Each week one Jewish and one Muslim speaker addressed the audience. Speakers included: Jonathan Freedland of the Guardian, Roger Hardy of the BBC, Fuad Nahdi of Q News, Shaheed Fatima, Jonathan Arkush, Khawor Qureshi, Dr Gregg Stern and Sayyed Nadeem Kazmi of the Al-Khoei Foundation.

Week of Prayer for World Peace

The annual gathering held by the national committee of the Week of Prayer for World Peace was held on 20 October at the Shree Swaminarayan Mandir in Neasden, London. Attendees were welcomed by the spiritual leader of the Temple, Atmaswarup Swami and also addressed by Om Parkash Sharma, Chair of the Week of Prayer for World Peace. The event focussed around five affirmations from the faith communities: respect for the Earth; human worth; justice, peace and reconciliation; love; and the human family. Representatives of faith communities carried lights in procession and each read a passage from their scriptures on the theme of peace. Also, the Gordon Wilson Peace Award was presented by Mrs Jean Wilson to the charity, Medical Aid for Iraqi Children. It was accepted by the Chair of the Charity, Mrs Mazin Al-Daftari.

RESOURCES

Alma Royalton-Kisch Trust

The Alma Royalton-Kisch Trust is the only UK charitable trust dedicated solely to supporting inter faith educational work with young people and children. The Trust was originally established in 1994 as the ARK Trust and worked primarily with London Youth Matters. However in 2001 it was set up as an independent charity. It is a small trust, with most of its grants being for between £500 and £1,000. However, it has helped a number of projects, with a preference for projects which involve young people up to the age of 25 in planning, running and evaluating a project. Further information and grant application forms are available from Gillian Reed, Hon Secretary, Kisch Trust, 98C Northchurch Road, London N1 3NY or email: gillian@islington2k.freereserve.co.uk

Interreligious Insight launched

A new inter faith journal, Interreligious Insight, was launched at St Martin in the Fields in London on 8 January. It is published by the World Congress of Faiths, Common Ground and the Interreligious Engagement Project, Chicago, USA. The journal will be published four times a year and is the successor to World Faiths Encounter, which has been published by the World Congress of Faiths for many years. It features articles, comment and reviews of interest to those interested in dialogue and engagement at all levels. The launch was attended by a number of representatives of different faiths and was addressed by members of the WCF's Executive Committee: Rev Alan Race (the new journal's editor), Rabbi Jackie Tabick; Prof Gwen Griffith- Dickson, Mr Jay Lakhani and Imam Dr Abduljalil Sajid. For further information see the web site: www.interreligiousinsight.org. To subscribe send a cheque payable to: "Interreligious Insight" to Interreligious Insight, c/o World Congress of Faiths, 2 Market Street, Oxford, OX1 3EF. Subscriptions are £24 for individuals and £40 for institutions.

New resources launched in Northern Ireland

The Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum launched two new booklets, A Handbook of Faiths and Check-Up, and an inter faith calendar on 11 December. The Handbook of Faiths is a guide to the different religions in Northern Ireland, while Check-Up is a guide about different faiths relevant for health professionals. The 2003 multi faith calendar features the dates of festivals and holy days of different faiths. All three publications have been supported by the Community Relations Council and the EU Programme for Peace and Reconciliation.

The Handbook of Faiths and Check-Up are priced at £3 each and are available from Des McCabe, 37 Church Street, Warendale Co Down BT34 3HN, email: equalitytraining@aol.com. To order the multi faith calendar contact Norman Richardson, email: n.richardson@stran.ac.uk.

Inter faith profile

Dr Elizabeth Harris is the Secretary for Inter Faith Relations for the Methodist Church in Britain, one of the Free Christian Churches in membership of Churches Together in Britain and Ireland. She is also an honorary lecturer at the University of Birmingham and was elected as a member of the Executive Committee of the Inter Faith Network in July 2002.

Q What is your role as the Secretary for Inter Faith Relations for the Methodist Church and how does this fit in with ecumenical work with other Christian denominations?

Anything concerning relations with other faiths comes to my desk. This can include questions on inter faith marriages, government policy on religion, the use of church premises by people of other faiths, or tensions between faiths in other parts of the world. I see the job as having an internal and an external face. The internal face involves educating Methodists about other faiths, helping them to build friendships with people of other faiths, also helping them to think through the theological issues connected with inter faith relations. The external face of the job involves keeping in touch with inter faith bodies and other faith communities, and building relationships with them.

In all this, ecumenical working among Christians is absolutely essential. We should not do separately, what we can do together. Therefore, I am involved with a number of bodies, for example the Churches' Commission for Inter Faith Relations, the United Reformed Church Inter Faith Relations Committee and Westminster Interfaith, a Roman Catholic organisation.

Q How did you first get involved with inter faith dialogue?

In the 1970s while I was a young teacher in Jamaica I came across the Rastafarians and this was my first real encounter with people of another 'faith'. I was fascinated and learnt as much as I could about their tradition.

More generally, it was my interest in inter-cultural understanding that led me to inter faith relations. I went to Jamaica because I was interested in other cultures. Then on returning to Britain I eventually started working for an ecumenical Christian organization, Christians Abroad. My job there was to help people understand what entering another culture means or involves. While I was in this job I became involved in the new Harrow Inter Faith Group. By that time, the challenge of crossing faith barriers had become as, if not more, important than crossing cultural barriers.

Q You have a particular interest in Christian-Buddhist relations. What do you feel is the importance of this particular dialogue?

My interest in Buddhism began in 1984 when I went on a short visit to Sri Lanka. I then went again specifically to study Buddhism and stayed 7 ½ years! Buddhist-Christian dialogue excites and challenges me. There are so many differences between the two religions but also so many touching points. I believe differences can be creative. Christians, and indeed people from other religions too, can learn a lot from Buddhism and hopefully the process can be two-way.

Q Is there a particular contribution of women to inter faith dialogue?

There is as much variety in the women involved in inter faith dialogue as there is amongst the men! I wouldn't like to make a watertight distinction between women and men in inter faith dialogue but I would like to see a change in the processes of representation. So often at inter faith meetings women are far out numbered by men.

Everything that can be done should be done to create a better gender balance at the different levels at which inter faith dialogue and encounter takes place.

Q What are your hopes for inter faith relations in the UK in the coming years?

One hope I have for the Christian Church is that it will realise that it cannot theologise without taking into account the insights of other faiths. At a practical level I hope there will be much more friendship across faiths in future and that this friendship will help to reduce tensions in our society. We must also learn to stand together to oppose violence and anything that dehumanises. I believe we are entering a critical period in our national and global histories when people who can build bridges of understanding between faiths are increasingly important.

Aberdeen

The Aberdeen Inter Faith Group held a workshop in the autumn in association with the Scottish Inter Faith Council to discuss the debate on the reform of education which is a current concern of the Scottish Parliament. A summary of the opinions expressed was submitted to the Parliamentary Committee on Education Reform which is due to report on its findings shortly.

Brighton

Ms Barbara Roche MP, Minister of State for Social Exclusion visited the Brighton and Hove Inter-Faith Contact Group on 15 January. The visit took place at the Unitarian Church in Brighton. The Minister discussed the Government's consultation document on implementing the European Directive on discrimination in employment, including discrimination on the grounds of religion and belief with members of the Group.

Brixton, London

On Remembrance Sunday on 10 November about 60 members and guests of the South London Inter Faith Group gathered at St Matthew's Church in Brixton for a Time of Reflection and Prayers for World Peace. Members of six different religions took part in the event. As the event was held during Ramadan some of the participants joined with Muslim colleagues in breaking their fast.

Cardiff

Over 100 members from nine faith communities came together in County Hall in Cardiff Bay at a reception hosted by the Lord Mayor of Cardiff, Cllr Russell Goodway, on 3 December. The meeting was called for the formal signature of a common statement, "Many Faiths, One People", pledging the commitment of the faith communities to live in together in peace and goodwill. The event was organised with the assistance of the Cardiff Interfaith Association. Speaking at the event, Dr Hoshi Kalami, a member of the Association's Executive Committee, said that he believed that the promulgation of an agreed document was a signal that beliefs were not essentially the cause of conflict and that understanding could bring about peaceful coexistence. The Lord Mayor spoke of the pivotal role of religion in Cardiff. The statement was signed by representatives of all the faiths present.

Huddersfield

The Interfaith Council for Huddersfield was launched on 4 February at the Methodist Mission, Huddersfield, by representatives from the Baha'i, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh faiths. The Mayor of Kirklees, Cllr Margaret Bates, attended the launch and joined in a plea for community harmony and understanding. The Council plans to hold monthly meetings at each faith's place of worship and is keen to emphasise the role of education in creating harmony. It will be arranging speakers from different faiths for local schools.

Leeds

The Leeds Faith Community Liaison Forum and the Leeds Black and Ethnic Minority Strategy Group co-hosted the launch of the Community Cohesion plan for Leeds on 28 November at the Playhouse in Leeds. Speakers included Ted Cantle, Home Office Adviser on Community Cohesion, Shahid Malik, Regeneration Consultant, and Cllr Keith Wakefield, Deputy Leader of Leeds City Council.

A report on Religious Literacy, produced by the Regional Assembly and the Churches Regional Commission and written by Dr Kim Knott of the University of Leeds and Rev David Randolph-Horn was distributed at the event. This is a guide aimed at officials wishing to understand and work with faith communities and will be of interest to all those involved in inter faith work. It is available from Mary White at the Churches Regional Commission for Yorkshire and the Humber Tel: 0113 244 3413.

The draft Community Cohesion Action plan was presented by the Leeds Initiative, the Local Strategic Partnership. As the meeting was held during Ramadan, participants then went to the Grand Mosque to join in the breaking of the fast.

London Interfaith Centre

London Interfaith Centre hosted an event, Peace Impossible? Israel/Palestine Today in association with the World Conference on Religion and Peace (UK) and the West London Three Faiths Forum on 14 October. The event focussed on the potential contributions of the Christian, Jewish and Muslim communities to resolving the problems of the Middle East. It was addressed by Sidney Shipton, Rev Marcus Braybrooke and Sheik Dr Zaki Badawi. On the previous day, 13 October, the Centre was host to an event organised by Brent Interfaith, Religion and Intolerance. Participants discussed the meaning of terms that are often used in the media such as 'extremist', 'fundamentalist' and 'fanatic'. Representatives of the Baha'i, Brahma Kumaris, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh faiths spoke about these concepts from their faith perspectives.

Luton

The Luton Council of Faiths held their 6th annual Interfaith Pilgrimage on 2 November. About 100 people from different faiths took part in the walk which visited the Holy Ghost Catholic Church, the Central Mosque, Medina Masjid and the Guru Nanak Gurdwara. Participants were joined by the Mayor of Luton, the two local MP's and local councillors. On 30 January the Council of Faiths held a farewell event for Shanthi Hettiarachchi who is leaving Luton after 6 years of working on inter faith relations. He has been a key figure in the development of the Luton Council of Faiths.

Peterborough

Peterborough Cathedral was the venue for a United Nations day commemoration entitled, Building Peace in Our World. This took place on 16 October and was organised by the Peterborough Inter Faith Council. Children from the Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh faiths were the main participants.

Richmond

The Richmond Inter Faith Group and the Twickenham and Richmond branch of the United Nations Association held a celebration of peace across faiths and cultures on 3 November at Richmond and Putney Unitarian Church. Cllr Douglas Orchard, Mayor of Richmond, and Dr Jenny Tonge, MP for Richmond Park, joined people from several different faiths at the event.

Suffolk

Suffolk Inter Faith Resource (SIFRE) moved premises on 6 January. The new SIFRE Centre, located within the grounds of Suffolk College, has a dedicated library with SIFRE's 2,500 books. The Centre also has a reception area, office and a classroom. The Centre is open on week days from 9am-4.30pm and will be officially opened on 17 March.

Three Counties Interfaith Network

A network of inter faith initiatives in Bedfordshire, Buckinghamshire and Hertfordshire was established on 19 December. The new "sub-regional" structure links the following local interfaith initiatives: Bedford Council of Faiths; Hitchin Sikh-Christian Dialogue Forum; Interfaith MK (Milton Keynes); Luton Council of Faiths; Watford Association of Faiths; Wycombe Sharing of Faiths; and also three new initiatives being developed in Aylesbury, Stevenage and St Albans and Harpenden.

Network North East Regional "Link" Meeting

The North East Regional "Link" Meeting was held on 28 October at the Newcastle Civic Centre. The meeting was arranged and hosted for the Inter Faith Network by the Tyne and Wear

Racial Equality Council Inter Faith Panel.

The following reports were presented on recent local inter faith activity in the region:

Tyne and Wear Racial Equality Council Inter Faith Panel

The Inter Faith Panel was set up in 1974 and is chaired by the Anglican Bishop of Newcastle. It meets regularly to discuss issues that affect the local area. The Panel is able to meet at short notice in times of crisis, for example following the terrorist attacks in the USA on 11 September 2001, after which the Panel helped to organise a meeting at Newcastle Mosque where leaders of different faiths came together. In October The Journal, a Tyneside local paper, published a 16 page supplement entitled 'Living Together'. The Panel hopes that such a supplement can be published quarterly, highlighting the good work being undertaken to build good relations between communities in the area. The Panel has a good relationship with Newcastle University and regularly organises events marking festivals of different faiths there. The Panel also has a good relationship with Newcastle City Council and often meets with Councillors to discuss issues of common concern, including regeneration issues.

Gateshead Interfaith Forum

A group of people from different faiths in Gateshead originally came together in the early 1980's, but the Gateshead Interfaith Forum was not formally set up until the early 1990's. One of its most successful projects has been to produce a video for schools in association with the Ethnic Minority Forum, about the lives of people of different faiths and communities in Gateshead. The Forum helped to organise a number of events such as a "Service of Solidarity" following 11 September 2001 and a Christmas/Eid event for children. Recently the Forum was asked to assist in organising an inter faith event to mark the opening of the new Gateshead Millennium Bridge. The Forum also took part in meetings with Northern Arts on the bid for Newcastle Gateshead to be chosen as the European Capital of Culture 2008. The Forum is also working with the Positive Images project which is a three year project with funding from the Home Office Connecting Communities initiative which aims to celebrate diversity in the city by producing an audio CD and video for free distribution primarily to schools. The CD and video are in the final stages of production and feature the stories of people from several communities including refugee and faith communities in the North East. It is hoped that these will help to breakdown stereotypes.

Cleveland Interfaith Group

The Group has about 50 members, including Baha'is, Christians, Hindus and Muslims. In general the membership is in the over 55 age bracket, with some interest from the under 25's. The Group holds monthly meetings with attendance of up to 25 at each meeting. Last year they held two larger meetings, one following September 11, and another looking at the issue of asylum seekers and refugees. A pilgrimage visiting different places of worship was held around the time of the Queen's Golden Jubilee. Many of their events attract people from neighbouring towns and cities so the Group usually consults with other organisations before setting dates for events. In general, race relations in the Middlesborough area are good. The Annual Mela, which attracts in the region of 60,000 people, is a good example of how different communities in the area can work together. However, tension has been raised in recent months with increased activity by far right organisations.

Inter Faith Activity at the North East Regional level

There is one place for faith communities on the Regional Assembly. This is currently shared between Rev Nicholas Coulton (an Anglican) and Hari Shukla (a Hindu).

Newcastle/Gateshead Bid for European Capital of Culture 2008

Newcastle and Gatehead was one of six shortlisted bids to become the European Capital of Culture 2008 (for which Liverpool has now been selected). The bid, co-ordinated by Northern Arts was discussed with a wide variety of organisations including faith groups. The process highlighted the value of cultural activities and new avenues of funding for cultural activities are being opened up as a result.

WCRP European Council of Religious Leaders inaugurated

Senior religious leaders from across Europe came together in November to establish the World Conference on Religion and Peace (WCRP) European Council of Religious Leaders (ECRL), which is the first multi-religious structure of senior religious leaders in Europe. The inaugural meeting was held in Oslo, Norway on 11 and 12 November. The Co-Moderators of the ECRL are: Cardinal Danneels, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Mechelen-Brussels; Bishop Gunnar Stålsett, the Bishop of Oslo, Church of Norway; Grand Rabbi René Sirat, the Vice-President of the Conference of European Rabbis; Metropolitan Kirill of the Russian Orthodox Church; Dr. Mustafa Ceric, the Grand Mufti of Bosnia Herzegovina; and Mr Jehangir Sarosh, of the UK Zoroastrian community and Moderator of WCRP Europe. Other founding members of the Council include: Metropolitan Ambrosios, Greek Orthodox Church; Metropolitan Daniel, Romanian Orthodox Church; Professor Jonathan Sacks, Chief Rabbi of the United Hebrew Congregations of the Commonwealth; and Bhai Sahib Bhai Mohinder Singh of the Guru Nanak Nishkam Sevak Jatha UK.

The 30 member Council committed itself to working to end conflicts, to reaffirming the religious rejection of terror and to promoting justice and peaceful coexistence among the diversity of peoples, religions and traditions in Europe. The Council agreed a statement, Standing Together for Peace which can be found at the WCRP web site: www.wcrp.org (click on worldwide affiliates).

Time to Talk: the Network National Meeting

The Inter Faith Network's National Meeting and AGM was held at the Techno Centre, University of Coventry on 3 July. Its theme was Time To Talk: Faiths At The Table Of Dialogue In Today's UK.

Across the last fifteen years there has been steady progress towards greater cooperation between different faiths on the "public life" agenda in the UK. It is now the norm, rather than the exception, for representatives of different faiths to sit around the consultation table offering their advice or support on issues such as community cohesion, neighbourhood renewal or health policies. This joint involvement in public life and social issues is one of the vital dimensions of creating good inter faith relations.

Alongside this however, there remains the crucial – and ever more significant – task of enabling the members of our respective faith communities to address centuries old histories of misunderstanding, misrepresentation and prejudice. Social cooperation alone does not overcome inherited myths and prejudices about other faiths or untangle

The Network has moved!

As many readers will have learned already, the Inter Faith Network has moved its office. We were very sorry to have to leave 5-7 Tavistock Place where it had been based since early 1989, but the new owner's plans for the building meant we had to go.

When it seemed possible that we would need to move urgently a year ago, we contacted, among others, the Grosvenor Estate, as we understood that they sometimes have offices available to charities, but none were vacant. Two days after we received the formal notice this March to leave Tavistock Place we received a telephone call from them out of the blue asking if the Network was still searching for new premises!

We shall be receiving grants from the Westminster Foundation, the charitable arm of the Grosvenor Estate, during the period of our lease, to offset the level of the commercial rent so that the net cost is not much more than we would have had to pay for less central and smaller premises elsewhere. We have much more space now than we had at Tavistock Place, including a meeting room, so while our new offices (which are five minutes walk from Victoria station) require some refurbishment they offer a welcome potential for further development of the Network's activities.

The search for new premises has been a time consuming and anxious one and we are glad that this, and the move itself, are now over. We are sorry for the resulting delay in the production of this issue of Inter Faith Update.

NETWORK NEWS

skeins of suspicion and fear. At a time when developments abroad have contributed to growing levels of antagonism and in some cases have led to attacks on places of worship and individuals, and at a time when extreme right wing organisations are exploiting potent and unpleasant images of particular religions to sow hatred and distrust, it was timely to focus on this theme at the 2003 National Meeting.

The first speaker was the Network's Deputy Director, Dr Harriet Crabtree, who offered a preliminary report on its local inter faith "mapping" project (see page 4). This report was followed by presentations on bi-lateral initiatives, which bring together people of two specific faiths to discuss in depth issues common to the communities, by Revd Jonathan Gorsky of the Council of Christians and Jews and Kuldip Singh and Revd Pamela Wise, Co-Chairs of the Hitchin Sikh-Christian Forum. Dr Ataullah Siddiqui, Head of the Inter Faith Unit of the Islamic Foundation, then reflected on the various dialogues in which members of the UK's Muslim community are now involved and students from the Blue Coat School in Coventry spoke about their experience of inter faith encounter and the importance for them of faiths coming to understand each other better.

The afternoon session heard from Bimal Krishna das, Secretary to the National Council of Hindu Temples and Revd Canon Dr Michael Iprgrave, Secretary to the Churches' Commission on Inter Faith Relations who spoke about their faiths' attitude to and involvement in inter faith dialogue. Following five workshop sessions, delegates reconvened to hear from panel members Jehangir Sarosh, Moderator of World Conference on Religion and Peace (Europe) and member of the Zoroastrian community; Maureen Sier, member of the Baha'i community and Development Officer of the Scottish Inter Faith Council; Paul Seto, Director of the Buddhist Society and Inter Faith

"The key word in dialogue is not talking, but listening."

Revd Jonathan Gorsky of the Council of Christians and Jews

"Dialogue is not simply about talking with members of other faiths, but also having a firm conviction that our spiritual values have something to offer to the whole of society, not just to ourselves. We enter into dialogue, taking our spiritual values with us, so that we can together contribute to the benefit of the whole community."

Dr Ataullah Siddiqui, Head of the Inter Faith Unit of the Islamic Foundation

Co-ordinator for the Network of Buddhist Organisations; and Rt Revd Charles Henderson, formerly Chair of the Committee for Other Faiths of the Roman Catholic Church in England and Wales.

A presentation was made to Bishop Charles to mark his significant contribution to the work of the Network from its initial formation and to wish him well in his retirement.

Closing reflections were offered by John Battle MP, the Prime Minister's adviser on inter faith issues.

A full report of the day will be available from the Network Office in due course.

Local inter faith mapping project

The Network is currently undertaking a project

The Inter Faith Network for the UK

The Inter Faith Network was founded in 1987. It works with its member bodies to promote good relations between the faith communities in the UK, to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make the UK a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions where all can practise their faith with integrity. The Network:

- Provides information on faith communities and on inter faith affairs
- Advises on multi faith projects and inter faith issues
- Publishes materials to aid work in the religious and inter faith sectors
- Fosters inter faith co-operation on social issues
- Holds regular meetings where social and religious questions of concern to the different faith communities can be examined together
- Links 97 member organisations including: representative bodies from the different faith communities; inter faith organisations; local inter faith groups; educational and academic bodies

funded by the Home Office Community Cohesion Unit to map local inter faith activity across the UK and to identify examples of good practice. The project has involved the sending of large numbers of questionnaires to local inter faith initiatives, local authorities, SACREs, CVSs and RECs and to individuals in faith communities deeply involved in inter faith work. Early findings from this research project have found a significant increase in local inter faith activity over the last few years. Materials from this major project will be published in the coming months.

First meeting of the Faith Communities Consultative Forum

The first meeting of the newly established Faith Communities Consultative Forum was held at the Senate House, University of London on 3 April. The Forum has been established within the framework of the Network and has evolved from meetings of faith community representative bodies in Network membership.

The Forum heard a report on the first meeting of the Working Group of the Home Office review on arrangements for consultation by central Government of faith communities and their representation at national events. It also discussed recent developments in the handling of the current “equality and diversity” agenda. Presentations were made to it by Mr Derek Taylor-Thompson of the Churches Main Committee and Ms Rachel Lampard of the Churches RADAR Group on the work of these two Church bodies and the possibilities of developing ways of sharing their work with other faith communities.

Other Network meetings

A meeting of representatives of national inter faith organisations in membership of the Network was held at in London on 25 February. The meeting heard about plans for the then impending Home Office review on arrangements for consultation by central Government of faith communities and also about the local inter faith mapping project on which the Network was about to begin work. The afternoon session focussed on inter faith work with young people.

A meeting of representatives of educational and academic bodies in membership of the Network was held in London on 8 April. This was the first time that a separate meeting had been held for representatives of this category of Network member body. In addition to an exchange of news, there was a review of the work which the Network could usefully undertake in relation to educational and academic issues and of possible additions to Network membership in this category.

Inter faith guide for young people

The Network is undertaking a project in association with respect (an initiative of TimeBank with the Prince’s Trust), to publish a guide on inter faith activity for young people. The Network Office is seeking ideas and case studies that could be featured in the guide. If you would like to suggest any projects that you know about or suggest any ideas for inter faith work involving young people then please contact: Bhupinder Singh at the Network office on 020 7931 7766 or email: ifnet@interfaith.org.uk

NATIONAL UPDATE

Select Committee on Religious Offences in England and Wales

When the Anti-Terrorism Bill was being debated in Parliament in the autumn of 2001, the Government included in it provisions to create a new offence of incitement to religious hatred. However, these provisions were defeated in the House of Lords and were dropped by the Government in order to secure passage of that legislation.

Subsequently, Lord Avebury introduced a Religious Offences Bill in the House of Lords which included provisions to abolish the offence of blasphemy as well as introducing a new offence of incitement to religious hatred. The Bill was given a Second Reading on 30 January 2002 and was then referred to an ad hoc Select Committee of the House of Lords to consider in greater depth the issues raised by it.

The Committee received a considerable amount of both oral and written evidence. Its report, published on 10 June, contains a detailed analysis of the law relating to religious offences. It examines old common law offences, including blasphemy and considers whether there is a case for repealing them, leaving them unchanged, or modernising them.

The Committee recognises that creating an offence of incitement to religious hatred, analogous to the existing offence of incitement to racial hatred, would remedy the anomaly that some religions receive protection under race relations legislation while others do not, and would discourage extremists from using the pretext of religion to pursue a racist agenda. But the Committee expresses concern about both the potential threat to freedom of expression and the risk that the standards of proof would need to be so demanding under the proposed legislation as to make it a difficult offence to prosecute.

Viscount Colville of Culross who chaired the inquiry, said, "After extensive public consultation we have analysed the merits of all the options, but feel it is up to Parliament as a whole to decide how it wants to proceed. Religions play a vital role in our society and there should be a degree of protection equally available to all faiths, but there is no consensus among us on the precise form that that protection might take."

The Report of the Committee is published in Volume I (HL paper 95-I); the oral evidence in Volume II (HL paper 95- II); and the written evidence in Volume III (HL paper 95- III). The material can also be found on the House of Lords website www.parliament.uk.

Policy on Racist and Religious Crime

The Crown Prosecution Service (CPS) published its Policy on Racist and Religious Crime on 14 July. The policy was formulated after consultation with groups including those representing minority ethnic and faith communities. In its statement the CPS gives a commitment to prosecute racist and religious crime fairly, firmly and robustly.

The policy addresses the issue of accepting pleas and makes it clear that the CPS will not reduce the seriousness of an offence by accepting a guilty plea to an offence which is not racially or religiously aggravated when there is evidence available to prove either a racist or religious motive, or that the offence was accompanied by a demonstration of hostility on racial or religious grounds.

Attorney General, Lord Goldsmith QC, speaking at the launch of the policy said "A racially or religiously motivated attack is an attack on the whole community. This policy sends a clear message to perpetrators that they will not get away with threatening, violent or abusive behaviour".

The CPS would welcome comments on its statement, which can be found at the web site: <http://www.cps.gov.uk/Home/CPSPublications/Scheme/racerel.htm> or call the CPS on 020 7796 8000 for more information.

Representatives from community and faith groups have contributed to a training course for prosecutors and caseworkers to help improve their knowledge and understanding of racist and religious crime. Since the law against religiously aggravated offences came into force the CPS has received 40 such cases from the Police. Many of these are still going through the courts and so far there have been 11 convictions.

New Faith Communities Unit at the Home Office

A new Faith Communities Unit has been set up at the Home Office. It takes over work on faith community issues previously undertaken by staff of the Race Equality Unit (REU) and will be located within a new Directorate alongside the REU and the ## Community Cohesion Unit.

The first major project of the Unit is to take forward the Government's review of the patterns of representation and consultation with the faith communities. The first meeting of the Steering Group for the review took place on 30 June and was chaired by Fiona Mactaggart MP, newly appointed Home Office Minister for Race Equality, Community Policy and Civic Renewal. The Steering Group includes representatives of a number of Government Departments and faith communities. The Group has been set up to oversee the Working Group for the project, which has already been carrying out preliminary work, and to consider the most effective means of achieving greater involvement of the faith communities in policy-making and delivery across Whitehall. The Group is due to agree a report and recommendations by the end of December 2003.

As a result of the Ministerial re-shuffle in June, Lord Filkin, the Home Office Minister previously responsible for faith community issues has moved to the new Department of Constitutional Affairs and the Inner Cities Religious Council has a new Chair, Yvette Cooper MP, Parliamentary Under Secretary in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister in place of Tony McNulty MP who has moved to the Department of Transport.

Inter faith honours

A number of people involved with inter faith work around the country received honours in the Queen's Birthday Honours list. Maqsood Ahmed, Muslim Adviser to the Home Office, was awarded an OBE; Sehdev Bismal, Chair of Wolverhampton Inter-Faith Group an MBE for services to community relations; Nemu Chandaria an OBE for services to the Jain Community; Venerable Ajahn Khema Dhammo an OBE for services to prison chaplaincy; the Venerable Galayaye Piyadassi an MBE for services to community relations in North London; Mohammed Rissaluddin of the Calamus Foundation an MBE for services to inter faith relations; and Alan Schwartz, a Network Executive Committee member and member of the Inter Faith Council for Wales was awarded an MBE for services to inter faith relations and to the Jewish community in South Wales.

Multi-Faith Group for Healthcare Chaplaincy

The Multi-Faith Group for Healthcare Chaplaincy (MFGHC) was launched on 25 June at Portcullis House in London. Speaking at the launch were Rev Edward Lewis, Chief Officer of the MFGHC, Sarah Mullally, the Chief Nursing Officer at the Department of Health (DoH) and Hon Barnabas Leith, the Chairman of the Group. The launch was also attended by representatives of different faith communities.

The Group seeks to build on the work of the Multi-Faith Joint National Working Party which issued its draft guidance, "NHS Chaplaincy: Meeting the Religious and Spiritual needs of Patients and Staff" on the same day. The draft guidance is available at the website: www.doh.gov.uk/chaplain or can be obtained by contacting the DoH on Tel: 0113 254 6106. Comments on the draft guidance are requested by 26 August.

The object of the MFGHC is the advancement of multi-faith healthcare chaplaincy in England and Wales. It seeks to further this object by facilitating a common understanding and support for healthcare chaplaincy amongst faith groups, chaplaincy bodies and users. The Group also seeks to advise the DoH on chaplaincy issues. Further information about the Group is available on its web site: www.mfghc.com.

Archbishop's inter faith lecture

On 11 June, at the University of Birmingham, Dr Rowan Williams gave his first lecture on inter faith relations since becoming Archbishop of Canterbury. In his address, "Christian Theology and Other Faiths", Dr Williams called for a clearer appreciation and understanding of "the very significant disagreements about the kind of universe we inhabit". He said "Once we are clearer about the nature and scope of religious disagreement, we are actually more, rather than less, likely to develop a respectful and collaborative practice in inter-faith relations."

The text of the lecture is available at the Archbishop's web site: www.archbishopofcanterbury.org.

On 24 March the new Archbishop held an evening reception at Lambeth Palace for faith community representatives, at which he said that he hoped to carry forward the good work of his predecessor, Dr George Carey, in building good relations between different faith communities.

Equality and Diversity issues

As reported in earlier issues of Inter Faith Update, in December 2000 a European Directive was adopted relating to discrimination on a variety of grounds (including religion or belief) in the field of employment and training. Following a major consultation exercise by the Department of Trade and Industry, including the publication of two consultative documents, regulations to implement the Directive in relation to race, religion or belief and sexual orientation were approved by both Houses of Parliament in June and will take effect at the end of this year.

The Government made changes to the earlier drafts of the regulations in response to representations which it received about the way in which the legislation relating to religion or belief one the one hand and sexual orientation on the other could interact in their impact on faith community organisations. The text of the regulations can be found on the website: www.dti.gov.uk/er/equality/eeregs.htm

The Government is still considering its next steps following consultation on Equality and Diversity: Making it happen, published in October last year which set out options for a new “single equality body” covering all six strands of discrimination dealt with by the European Directive (age, disability, gender, race, religion and belief and sexual orientation). It appears that most responses to the document expressed support in principle for the proposal to set up a single equality body but there were a substantial number of reservations about it and a wide range of issues remain to be resolved. At one stage it had been thought that the Government would be publishing its further proposals this summer but it will not now do so before the autumn. Ms Jacqui Smith is the new Minister responsible for work on this issue, having taken it over from Ms Barbara Roche when she left Ministerial office.

The Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service (ACAS) has been preparing draft guidance for employers and others on the operation of the new regulations. The current draft of this, including material on the needs of employees of different faiths, is currently on the ACAS website, www.acas.gov.uk. ACAS will be glad to receive by 22 September any comments or suggestions on this draft material. Further information is also available by contacting ACAS on tel: 020 7210 3670.

The Department of Trade and Industry (DTI) is also inviting bids to support capacity building in organisations which play a role in meeting the demand from employees/individuals for information advice and guidance. Funding is currently available for activity up to and including 31 March 2004 and the DTI is inviting organisations to submit proposals by 22 August by email to debra.humphries@dti.gsi.gov.uk. A total of £625,000 is available in the current financial year. Full details of this grant programme can be found on the DTI website: www.dti.gov.uk/er/equality.

Faith Communities Toolkit launched

A Jobcentre Plus Faith Communities Toolkit for the East of England, London and South East Regions was launched in London on 5 June following successful pilots in Tower Hamlets and Luton. The toolkit has been developed through consultation with faith communities and Jobcentre Plus staff and is part of work to develop partnerships with a wide range of organisations and groups that represent Jobcentre Plus customers and delivery partners.

The toolkit highlights how Jobcentre Plus districts and faith communities can benefit from forming partnerships and also includes background information on religions and beliefs plus ideas for closer working with faith communities. Introduction of the toolkit will involve awareness training and visits to faith communities for Jobcentre Plus staff.

Faith communities in any of these three Regions who want to discuss closer working with Jobcentre Plus should contact the Business Development Manager in their Jobcentre Plus District. Details of Jobcentre Plus offices can be found at: www.jobcentrepplus.gov.uk.

Further consultation on marriage ceremonies

The General Register Office published a consultation document Civil Registration: Delivering Vital Change on 10 July seeking views on the proposals for changes to the legislation relating to the Civil Registration Service in England and Wales. Of particular interest are the proposed changes to the way marriages are registered. The previous consultation Civil Registration: Vital Change published in January 2002 outlined a celebrant system of marriage under which local authorities would appoint civil celebrants and religious celebrants would be appointed by the religious body or denomination to which they belonged, rather than requiring places of marriage to be registered.

The current proposals aim to “level the field” in terms of marriages ceremonies. Currently the Church of England, the Church in Wales, the Jewish community and the Religious Society of Friends are exempt from including prescribed words of declaration and contract in their marriage ceremonies. The proposal is to remove the requirement for the bride and groom to say prescribed words of declaration and contract. Instead all marriage ceremonies, regardless of the rites and ceremonies used, will need to include a declaration by the couple that they accept each other as husband and wife and a declaration by the celebrant that the couple are now husband and wife.

The consultation document is available on the internet free of charge at: www.statistics.gov.uk/registration or for £10.00 from the Office for National Statistics, Tel: 0151 471 4514. The closing date for responses to the consultation is 24 October.

Guidelines for advertisers

The Committee of Advertising Practice (CAP) issued a new Help Note for advertisers in April on “Religious Offence”, warning them to be careful about offending religious sensitivities. The note was issued in response to research carried out during 2002 by the Advertising Standards Authority (ASA) on what constitutes serious offence in non-broadcast advertising. The ASA administers the CAP Code to ensure that advertisements are legal, decent, honest and truthful.

The Help Note warns advertisers against linking religion to sex or nudity and using religion to advertise inappropriate products and makes a distinction between light-hearted depictions of religion and disrespectful ones. The guidance also reminds marketers to take into account whether or not advertisements are likely to appear close to places of worship. Those that make religious references or show nudity are more likely to cause offence on posters at sensitive locations.

Promotion of religious harmony now charitable

Following lengthy exchanges on an application for charitable status from the Three Faiths Forum, the Charity Commission has accepted the promotion of religious harmony for the benefit of the public as a charitable purpose. The new category joins existing categories such as the promotion of racial harmony. It is hoped that this change will make it easier for inter faith organisations to register as charities.

The Commissioners said that the promotion of religious harmony and tolerance could result in tangible benefits of reduction in conflict and crime and that understanding the religious beliefs of others leads to more appropriate provision of services both in the public and the private sphere. The new purpose is not restricted to promoting harmony between religions that are recognised by charity law, but also embraces “beliefs” as defined in human rights case law. It also includes the promotion of harmony between believers and non-believers.

All charities must be able to demonstrate benefit to the public resulting from their purposes and activities. Organisations promoting religious harmony are charitable not because they are promoting individual religious belief or advancing education in those beliefs, but because they are actively promoting harmony and the lessening of conflict between people from differing religions or belief systems. The Charity Commission will accordingly consider applications from organisations established for such purposes for registration as a charity.

Positive Contacts between British Muslims and Jews

An interim report of a research project by Alif-Aleph UK, a group of British Muslims and British Jews, was launched at the Moses Room, House of Lords on 2 July. The report entitled, 'Positive Contact between British Muslims and British Jews: A Model of Good Practice for all British Communities', was the culmination of research conducted over several months by two recent post-graduates, Mohammed Nisar and Fiona Hurst, and supervised by Dr Keith Kahn-Harris, an independent research consultant. The launch was hosted by Lord Ahmed and Lord Haskel - a Muslim and a Jewish peer - and was chaired by Dr Richard Stone and Sayyed Nadeem Kazmi who originally conceived the project. The report aimed to reveal the extent to which Muslims and Jews across the UK were overcoming the political divisions caused by the Israel/Palestine conflict.

Football tournament for young Jews and Muslims

The Maimonides Foundation, a joint Jewish-Muslim organisation, recently held its third annual Inter Faith Football Programme at Arsenal Football Club in London, with over 150 Jewish and Muslim children aged 9-12 taking part. This culminated in a finale on Sunday 13 July with Arsenal's Egyptian-born goal-keeper, Rami Shaaban, handing out certificates to all the participants. Shaaban said "As a Muslim, I love the idea that kids of different religions are being encouraged to share and play together."

During March the Foundation also organised an exchange programme for fifth and sixth formers from the Brondesbury College for Boys and the Immanuel College for Boys, Muslim and Jewish schools respectively. The exchange formed part of the Foundation's educational programme to foster cordial relations between the Jewish and Muslim communities.

Experience Corps launches Seva booklets

The Experience Corps is an organisation set up to encourage those aged over 50 years of age to volunteer to help their communities. It launched, at the House of Commons on 5 March, two booklets entitled "Seva", which means "selfless service". The two booklets aimed at the Hindu and Sikh communities respectively have been translated into several Indian languages and are being distributed through mandirs, gurdwaras and community centres around the country. For more information contact the Experience Corps on Tel: 020 7981 2500.

Making Dialogue Make a Difference

The Further Dialogue Working Group of the Council for Christians and Jews (CCJ) held a day seminar on 23 June on Making Dialogue Make a Difference: How and Why? The day was chaired by Revd Canon Dr Michael Igrave, who also chairs the working group. Speakers included Revd Jonathan Gorsky, Rabbi Rachel Montagu and Abigail Wood of the CCJ, Sheikh Ibrahim Mogra of the Muslim Council of Britain and Bhupinder Singh of the Inter Faith Network who all spoke about different aspects of dialogue. The main afternoon presentation was made by Fr Michael Barnes SJ.

Having Faith in the Commonwealth

The Royal Commonwealth Society held a Young People's Faith Forum on 11 March, the day following the annual Commonwealth Day observance which took place at Westminster Abbey in the presence of HM The Queen. The Forum was a follow up to the successful Golden Jubilee Young People's Faith Forum which took place last year at St James's Palace. Young people from around the UK and some from Commonwealth countries gathered at the Royal Commonwealth Society in London for the morning session where they heard about recent events celebrating faith in the UK and about examples of faiths working together. The afternoon session took place in Westminster Abbey where the group heard from HE the Rt Hon Don McKinnon, Secretary-General of the Commonwealth, who spoke about making the Commonwealth work for its people.

Throughout the day separate workshop sessions were held so that the participants could discuss what it means to be a young person of faith growing up in the Commonwealth. For the final session participants were joined by a number of faith community representatives and also had the opportunity to meet Lord Filkin, the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Race Equality and Community Policy in the Home Office.

A report of the day is available by sending a large stamped self-addressed envelope to: Margaret Onokpasah, Royal Commonwealth Society, 18 Northumberland Ave, London WC2N 5BJ Tel: 020 7930 6733 email: margaret.onokpasah@rcsint.org.

Further Census data released

The Office for National Statistics, the General Register Office for Scotland and the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency have released further data relating to religion and belief from the 2001 Census. Various data sets cross-referencing the results of different Census questions have been made available on their respective web sites (see below) including age/religious identity and ethnicity/religious identity.

Key statistics for local authorities have also been released which break the census data down to individual ward level. So a very detailed "map" of

INTER FAITH PROFILE

Dr Fatma Amer works for the London Central Mosque and the Islamic Cultural Centre and is a member of the Network's Executive Committee.

Q How did you first get involved with inter faith dialogue?

I cannot really pinpoint a specific time or event. "Interfaith dialogue" is a concept that has always been a part of my life. I grew up in Alexandria in Egypt. It is one of Egypt's most cosmopolitan cities, encompassing a huge spectrum of different races and faiths. All of life's events were shared: routine and special; mundane and extraordinary. From school to home, weddings and other events were all attended by everyone, regardless of their faith or ethnic background. Places of worship were open to all. I still have vivid memories of the many happy occasions I attended in the Cathedral there.

After arriving in Britain, I became more involved in my children's wider lives – school, neighbours, friends and so on. There was a natural continuation which led in turn to other activities such as involvement in local and national interfaith activities. Now, in my capacity in charge of Inter Faith Relations at the London Central Mosque and the Islamic Cultural Centre, I feel privileged to be able to serve on a variety of bodies and organisations which promote good inter faith relations in our society here.

What does your role at the Islamic Cultural Centre involve?

Q The London Central Mosque and Islamic Cultural Centre is one of the largest established Islamic institutions in the UK. It is, therefore, a main point of reference for enquiries and research regarding various aspects of Islam. Issues related either to education or interfaith issues feature prominently on the list of activities here. I have responsibilities for activities within the Muslim community such as adult education, children's activities, cultural initiatives, certificated courses, supplementary education and liaison with other Islamic centres and also activities involving wider society, including being a point of reference and consultancy for educational bodies, government departments and co-operation with inter faith bodies.

What do you think is the importance of dialogue between young people of different faiths?

I sincerely believe that dialogue is one of the most crucial foundations of society, in terms of respecting, understanding and truly empathising with others, thus providing the basis of good citizenship. It also highlights the danger and undesirability of viewing opinions which differ from yours as "the other", undermining the underlying humanity and brotherhood of man. But dialogue is also about the critical importance of maintaining and preserving one's own integrity of identity. Furthermore, inter faith dialogue reinstates the importance of the element of "faith" as being indispensable to both individual and community life – combating the increase in secularization, commercialization and relativism as well as the marginalisation of spirituality.

What role should faith communities play in the teaching of religious education in schools?

Ensuring individuals are nurtured in their own faith is primarily the responsibility of their own community. When reflecting on the role of religious education in schools, I find it imperative to highlight the important

Q role of the SACREs. These are pioneering examples of how professionals and faith communities may work together positively and proactively for the common good. Schools should also avail themselves of the remarkable wealth of experience, resources and diversity available within each faith community, for example through visits, dialogue with professionals and other resources. A dynamic sense of "belonging" through increased involvement and participation may be created in this manner, empowering and engaging all faith communities.

What do you feel are the main challenges for inter faith relations in the UK? And how do you think they can be overcome?

I feel that it is appropriate to mention that although there are many challenges, it is hopefully possible to overcome these with patience, continued application and the introduction of laws that ensure the implementation of social justice. I believe that the media should shoulder much of the responsibility in this matter, as what it portrays naturally becomes part and parcel of society's perceptions.

Q One often comes across the careless attitude of those who have no confidence at all in the purpose of dialogue. Education is a crucial element. Unease will always remain until due recognition is given to the fact that no man is an island; and that the entire globe has shrunk to an extent that what happens locally anywhere has an immediate impact on the international scene. Thus, it is essential to inculcate respect, dignity and an attitude of reciprocal empathy in the future citizens of the world in order that they may truly shoulder this great responsibility; and not to swell the ranks of those who merely pay lip service to noble inter faith ideals without implementing them.

the religious landscape of the UK is now available.

The published data offer a variety of interesting facts about the make up of the faith communities in the UK. For example, while the population as a whole has a slightly higher proportion of women than men, the Hindu and Muslim communities and those of no religion show a higher proportion of men. The detailed age profiles of different faith communities show that there is a higher proportion of young people among Muslims and Sikhs, while Buddhists and Christians have a higher proportion of older people.

Data is also available on the country of birth of adherents of different faiths in England and Wales. The proportion of people born in the UK are: Buddhist 46.05%; Christian 93.77%; Hindu 37.49%; Jewish 83.21%; Muslim 46.44%; and Sikh 56.05%.

The “ethnicity and religion” tables provide detailed information about the ethnic make up of the faith communities. The figures for England and Wales show that 36 million people, nearly 70% of the population, described themselves as White Christian. Among other faiths the largest groups were Pakistani Muslims (658,000) and Indian Hindus (467,000) followed by Indian Sikhs (301,000), Bangladeshi Muslims (260,000) and White Jews (252,000). The Indian group was religiously diverse. 45% of Indians were Hindu, 29% Sikh and a further 13% Muslim. By contrast, the Pakistani and Bangladeshi groups were more homogeneous with Muslims accounting for 92% of each of them. Some faith communities were concentrated in particular ethnic groups. For example, 91% of Sikhs were of Indian ethnic origin and 97% of Jews described their ethnicity as White. Other faiths showed more variation, for example, significant proportions of Buddhists were found in White, Chinese, Other Asian and Other Ethnic groups.

Data in relation to religions which were not listed in the Census question on religion (including Baha’is, Jains and Zoroastrians) is not yet available for England and Wales and Scotland. However, it is expected that from the autumn it will be possible to request commissioned tables from the Office of National Statistics (ONS). The ONS will also publish a brief summary of the findings of the data in relation to religion in a Focus on Religion report to be published this autumn. This will be followed next year by a more detailed report. It has not yet been decided whether these reports will pull together data from all four nations making up the UK or only relate to England and Wales.

The Census data for England and Wales is available on the Office for National Statistics web site: www.statistics.gov.uk; for Scotland at the General Register Office for Scotland web site: www.scrol.gov.uk; and for Northern Ireland at the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency web site: www.nisra.gov.uk.

Guidance for publishers of educational resources

The Religious Education Council issued a leaflet in May providing guidance to publishers of religious educational resources. The guidance has been issued in order to assist in the provision of good quality Religious Education; to facilitate the accurate presentation of beliefs and practices in textbooks and other resources; and to foster better understanding of religious beliefs and practices. Copies of the guidance can be obtained by sending an email request to: woodg@methodhistchurch.org.uk or from the web site: www.religiouseducationcouncil.org.

Week of Prayer for World Peace

The Week of Prayer for World Peace runs this year from 12 to 19 October. An inter faith gathering for prayer will be held at the Hounslow mosque on 19 October.

The Week was originally inaugurated on 19 October 1974 in Westminster Abbey at a service at which the sermon was preached by the then Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Michael Ramsey. Under the leadership of Dr. Edward Carpenter, the observance became an inter-faith project. He strongly believed that “prayer for world peace has to be offered by the world’s faiths”.

Each year, the WPWP committee produces a leaflet of prayers for peace drawn from the major religious traditions of the world. At the present time, the committee and the sponsoring body include adherents of the Baha’i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jain, Jewish, Muslim, Sikh and Zoroastrian religions, and prayers and readings from all these faiths are included in the current prayer leaflet. A leaflet for use in schools is produced as well. At the annual inter-faith gathering, members of all the faiths are invited to take part and contribute from their own faith resources.

Participation in the work of the Week of Prayer for World Peace is invited from peace groups and faith communities, by providing material for the prayer

Stanley Hope

We have learned with sadness of the death in March of Stanley Hope. He was one of the early pioneers of inter faith work and helped found Rochdale Inter Faith Action. He was also actively involved with Rochdale Racial Equality Council and the Star Youth Club and worked on inter faith activities with the Iona Community.

At his funeral Razzak Ahmed, who had worked closely with him for over 30 years, said that Stanley had a deep understanding of the issues affecting ordinary members of the Asian community and how immigration and nationality laws were affecting them. He was a people's person, always out and about meeting people.

New Centre for Dialogue and Encounter

The new home for the Centre for Dialogue and Encounter run by the Sisters of Sion provides a setting for the study of faiths, especially the Christian and Jewish traditions and relationship, and a venue for growth in mutual understanding between people of all faiths and cultures. The facilities include a Conference Area accommodating up to 100, available on a daily basis for interfaith meetings, conferences, seminars, courses and quiet days. Contact: Sr Tessa Hughes Tel: 020 7313 8286.

The Christian-Jewish Library and Resources area is available by appointment, for students, teachers and others who wish to consult their specialist collection of books and archives. Contact: Sr Clare Jardine or Sr Mary Kelly, Tel: 020 7727 3597.

Scottish 'Link' Meeting

Over forty participants from four of the local inter faith groups of Scotland gathered in Dundee on 27 April. The meeting was organised by the Scottish Inter Faith Council and was co-hosted by Dundee Inter Faith Association.

The meeting commenced with a welcome from Rosemary Eddy on behalf of Dundee Inter Faith Association who was followed by Ravinder Kaur Nijjar, Convener of the Scottish Inter Faith Council conveying the greetings of the Council to those present.

Sister Isabel Smyth, General Secretary of the Scottish Inter Faith Council gave a brief historical overview of the Scottish Inter Faith Council and its work and Brian Pearce, Director of the Inter Faith Network, spoke about current patterns of local inter faith activity across the UK and the project to "map" this that the Network is undertaking with funding from the Home Office.

Each of the local inter faith groups then provided a brief round up on their recent and future work. Edinburgh Inter Faith Association reported on its annual inter faith pilgrimage and the many conferences and dialogue meetings it had hosted over the years. Aberdeen Inter Faith Group shared examples of meetings they had hosted such as their 'celebration of faiths' meeting held in 2002. They will be celebrating their 10th Anniversary to be held in collaboration with the City Council in October. The Glasgow Sharing of Faiths Group used a computer presentation which included natural images overlain with quotes from participants at their regular meetings. Dundee Inter Faith Association reported on their highly successful 'shared meal' and spoke of the current programme of meetings which focus on the 'spiritual journeys' of members of different 'faith communities' in Dundee. Although Shetland Inter Faith Group could not be present they sent a report on their regular prayer, meditation and reflection meetings, where prayers and readings from the world's religions and faith traditions are shared, complemented with pieces of reflective music.

Multi faith pilgrimages

A number of multi faith pilgrimages have taken place over the last few months. The 18th annual Westminster Interfaith Walk for Peace took place on 7 June in Southall and Hounslow in west London. Bradford Concord Interfaith Society held their 10th Annual Walk for Friendship on 14 June. Redbridge Council of Faiths organised a pilgrimage on 6 July and the South London Inter Faith Group in association with the Wimbledon Inter Faith Group held a pilgrimage in Wimbledon on 19 July.

Report highlights work of faith communities in East of England

A six month research project carried out for the East of England Faiths Leadership Conference has found that faith communities carry out social work worth millions of pounds. The Faith in Action report was launched by John Battle MP at the Hindu temple and community centre in Luton on 15 May. The report focuses on the activities of faith communities in Luton and Peterborough and profiles a number of places of worship, showing the extent of the contribution of these to their local community. The report is available to download from the internet at www.eeflc.org.uk or contact: EEFLC, Unit 37, St John's Innovation Centre, Cowley Road, Cambridge, CB4 0WS Tel: 01223 421606.

West Midlands Regional Faiths Forum launched

The West Midlands Regional Faith Forum was launched on 17 June in Birmingham. The Forum is an independent body aiming to provide a "meeting place" for the voices of the diversity of faith groups in the Region. The Forum has received funding from the West Midlands Regional Strategic Empowerment Fund, Advantage West Midlands and the West Midlands Regional Assembly.

It has been endorsed by leading figures from different faith communities and aims to:

- Explore issues around faith and regeneration
- Celebrate approaches within faith communities who promote social cohesion
- Promote the participation of faith communities in the life of the region

Speaking at the launch event, Dagmar Waller, Policy Officer for the West Midlands Regional Assembly said: "Faith has a unique offering to make in that it brings a spiritual, moral and ethical dimension to the table - taking a holistic approach to tackling the problems of today's society."

For further information about the work of the Forum contact Dagmar Waller, email: d.waller@wmra.gov.uk or Tel: 0121 678 1054

Local Roundup

Accrington

Blackburn with Darwen Interfaith Council arranged a series of talks called "Learning about the faiths next door" throughout May at St John's with St Augustine's School in Accrington. Each Wednesday evening from 7-28 May a different speaker from the Muslim, Hindu, Sikh and Jewish faiths introduced their religion. The series of talks were designed to combat myths and stereotypes being spread by far-right activists in the area.

Beaminster

The Beaminster One World Fellowship organised a talk and discussion on Asylum Seekers – a Challenge to our Humanity on 24 April. Cilla Lynch, a social worker gave the main presentation in which she highlighted that asylum seekers are keen to make a positive contribution to the multi-ethnic culture of the UK.

Bradford

Bradford Concord Interfaith Society and Leeds Faith Communities Liaison Forum hosted an event on 10 April at the Bradford Interfaith Education Centre to strengthen links between the two initiatives. Rev David Randolph-Horn spoke about the work of the Leeds Forum, in particular with its local authority and other public bodies.

Bristol

Bristol Inter Faith Group hosted an event at the Unitarian Meeting House on 28 April to discuss Dr Jonathan Sacks's book on "The Dignity of Difference". The book was introduced by Michael Romain of the Bristol and West Progressive Synagogue as a Jewish contribution to current inter faith dialogue. Jutta Mueller-Schnurr (German Lutheran Pastor) and Suaad Walker of the Muslim Cultural Society also offered their perspectives on it.

Croydon

The South London Inter Faith Group arranged a visit to the Nanak Sikh Community Centre and Gurdwara in Croydon on 10 May. About 30 members of the group attended, including Christians and Muslims of whom many had not previously been to a gurdwara.

Derby

Researchers at the University of Derby are undertaking a project examining religious group participation, inter faith infrastructure and capacity-building in Derby. The project aims to identify the most appropriate way for religious groups to be represented on the Derby City Partnership (LSP) and to explore the potential for religious group participation in developments such as the Cultural City and City of Learning initiatives. Members of faith communities and the wider public are invited to contribute to the project by submitting their views. Contact: Religious Group Participation Project, School of Education, Human Sciences and Law, University of Derby, Kedleston Road, Derby DE22 1GB.

Glasgow

The Edinburgh International Centre for World Spiritualities held a conference on Sikh spirituality on 24 May at the Central Gurdwara Singh Sabha in Glasgow. About 200 delegates attended from all over Scotland and from other parts of the UK. The conference was part of a series on the world's spiritual traditions. Previous conferences in the series have included a conference on Baha'i spirituality and on Hindu spirituality held in 2002. The next conference is planned for March 2004 and will focus on Middle Eastern Spirituality and Peace. Further conferences in the series will look at Islamic, Jewish and Christian spiritualities.

London

Brent Inter Faith hosted an inter faith evening music at the London Inter Faith Centre on 17 June. Musicians of eight different faiths made short presentations of devotional and classical music from their traditions.

Manchester

Manchester Interfaith Forum hosted, on 2 July, an event called "The Ambivalence of the Sacred: What Role for Religions in Peacemaking". A talk was given by Dr Philip Lewis of the University of Bradford followed by workshop sessions.

Suffolk

Suffolk Inter Faith Resource held a conference in association with Suffolk County Council, Suffolk Learning and Skills Council and Suffolk Constabulary on "Questions of Identity, Faith and Culture" on 2 April at the Ipswich School. The day was designed to enable people working in public services to meet representatives of faith communities in Suffolk. About 150 people attended of whom half were representing different faith communities and half came from a range of services, including social services; police; judiciary; and health services.

Watford

Watford Inter-Faith Association hosted a lecture by Eddy Canfor-Dumas on "The War Habit and How to Break it" following their AGM on 6 February at the Multi-racial Community Centre in Watford.

Wolverhampton

Wolverhampton Inter Faith group in association with the Satsang Association (UK) organised a day conference on 26 April at Colton Hills School. The main speaker was Sister Ishpriya, from India who spoke about the Hindu Scripture, the Isa Upanishad. Participants from different faiths then discussed the Scripture from their faith perspectives.

Global Inter Faith Survey

The International Interfaith Centre is undertaking a global research project to identify faith and interfaith issues around the world and to help organisations address relevant concerns. Copies of the survey form may be requested from: IIC, 2 Market Street, Oxford OX1 3ET or it can be completed online at: www.interfaith-center.org/rccresearch.htm.

Inter faith gathering at European Capital of Culture

A Europe-wide inter faith gathering took place from 5-9 July in Graz, Austria, the European Capital of Culture for 2003. Several UK inter faith initiatives were represented at the conference, including the Inner Cities Religious Council (ICRC), the Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum and the Leicester Council of Faiths. The Secretary of the ICRC, David Rayner made a presentation at the opening plenary session and ran workshops on inter faith forums. The general impression of the delegates from the UK was that inter faith work here is in advance of other European countries.

The conference, which was held in conjunction with the European Conference of the World Conference on Religion and Peace was the culmination of Project Interfaith Europe. This was initiated at a preliminary conference which took place in Graz in 2001. The Project was the first undertaking of its kind to invite urban politicians and representatives of different religions from all over Europe. The project's goals are:

- to examine the day-to-day lives of members of different religious communities, especially minority groups, in European cities;
- to develop guidelines and suggestions, including models of good practice, based on experience with interreligious dialogue
- to publish them on the Internet in the form of a continuously expandable manual of interreligious cooperation.

New report shows rapid rise in local inter faith activity

The Inter Faith Network for the UK has published a major new report: Local Inter Faith Activity in the UK: A Survey. The report contains the findings of a six month project recently carried out by the Network with support from a grant by the Community Cohesion Unit of the Home Office. Partners in the project were the Home Office, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Local Government Association.

Rt Revd Tom Butler, Bishop of Southwark and Network Co-Chair said, "This report makes a major contribution to deepening inter faith understanding and cooperation in Britain. It highlights a wealth of positive inter faith initiatives which are contributing to community cohesion and helping ensure that faith unites and does not divide."

These publications drew on information received for the local inter faith mapping project. The project received a wealth of information from those working with commitment and dedication in various sectors to increase inter faith understanding: local inter faith bodies; faith communities; local authorities; CVSs; RECs SACRES; One World Groups and others.

In the 2001 Census over 76.8% of people in the UK identified themselves

Further 2001 Census results

Census data from those respondents who wrote in a religious affiliation after marking the "other" box on the Census form are now available from the Office for National Statistics (ONS) for England and Wales and the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA). The figures for Scotland are not yet separately available. Figures for the number of adherents in England, Wales and Northern Ireland of other member faiths which are linked by the Inter Faith Network are: Baha'is, 4,890; Jains, 15132; Zoroastrians, 3,751.

The figures for these smaller religious groupings may be affected by the fact that 19,431 people ticked the "other" box, but did not "write in" any particular religious affiliation.

Tables showing the complete listing of responses are available from ONS Customer Services on Tel: 01329 813800 and for Northern Ireland from the NISRA web site: www.nisra.gov.uk.

Figures for the number of Buddhists, Christians, Hindus, Jews, Muslims and Sikhs were released earlier, see Inter Faith Update issue 21.

with a specific religion. The majority of people in Britain are Christian but there are also over 1.5 million Muslims, half a million Hindus and sizeable communities of Sikhs, Jews and Buddhists as well as of smaller faiths such as the Baha'is, Jains and Zoroastrians.

The fact that so many people of different faiths live in today's UK means that inter faith dialogue is of increasing importance. The report looks at how Christians, Muslims, Hindus, Sikhs, Jews, Buddhists, Jains, Zoroastrians, Baha'is and others are working together to increase inter faith understanding in Britain. It covers the spectrum of local inter faith activity in the UK but has a special focus on local inter faith groups and councils and on how local authorities are working in partnership with these to improve community cohesion.

Local inter faith groups and councils of faiths are important forums for leaders and members of different religions to come together to discuss issues of common concern, to learn more about one another's faith and to co-operate in giving advice on religious issues to local public service providers. They also ensure that key members of the different faiths in a locality meet regularly for routine matters or special functions. These personal links are crucial to ensure rapid and effective response if problems occur such as attacks on places of worship or tension between different communities.

In recent times, local inter faith bodies have had a particularly important role to play in responding to tensions in multi faith towns and cities arising from the impact of overseas events on communities in the UK – notably the impact of the terrorist attacks in the USA of 11 September 2001, military action in Afghanistan, war in Iraq, as well as events more generally in India, in the Middle East, and elsewhere.

The project found that there are now nearly 140 inter faith and multi faith local bodies in the UK. 43% of these have come into existence since the start of 2000. Despite the importance of inter faith work, the study found that it is significantly under-funded. 82% of local inter faith bodies have no paid staff and most bodies have very small budgets for their important activities.

The report also looks at how local authorities are working to ensure that faith communities can give input to strategic initiatives. It found that 44% of authorities in England and Wales now have an officer responsible for liaison with faith groups and/or for faith issues. Local authorities are also increasingly recognising the contribution that inter faith bodies can make to community cohesion and 13% of local authorities indicate current support of a local inter faith group or council or multi faith forum.

At the same time as the publication of this report, the Inter Faith Network also published a good practice booklet, Partnership for the Common Good: Inter Faith Structures and Local Government. This was published in association with the Local Government Association, the Home Office and the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and gives guidance for local authorities working to support or set up local inter faith or multi faith structures, bearing particularly in mind the need to ensure the appropriate involvement of faith communities in the context of initiatives such as development of community strategies or the work of Local Strategic Partnerships.

Complimentary copies of the report and good practice booklet were sent to the over 800 respondents who had sent in information for the project.

Copies of Local Inter Faith Activity in the UK: A Survey are available from the Network office, priced £8.95 including postage and packing.

The good practice booklet Partnership for the Common Good can be found on the Network's website: www.interfaith.org.uk or single copies can be obtained by sending an A4 stamped addressed envelope to the Network office (34 pence second class or 42 pence first class).

NATIONAL UPDATE

Equality and Diversity update

As reported in the previous issue of Inter Faith Update, regulations to implement, in relation to race, religion or belief and sexual orientation, the European Directive of December 2000 which covers discrimination on a variety of grounds in the field of employment and training, were approved by both Houses of Parliament in June. They are due to come into effect on 2 December. A legal action is in progress to seek a judicial review of the regulations relating to sexual orientation as these relate to the employment practice of religious organisations.

The Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service (ACAS) has finalised its guidance for employers and others on the operation of the new regulations, having consulted widely on drafts of this material. The final version is now available on the ACAS website, www.acas.org.uk, and will shortly be published in booklet form. For further information contact ACAS Equality Direct on 08456 003 444.

The Government has been considering for some time the responses which it received to its consultation on Equality and Diversity: Making it Happen, published in October 2002, which set out options for a new “single equality body” covering all six strands of discrimination dealt with by the European Directive (age, disability, gender, race, religion and belief and sexual orientation). In a statement to the House of Commons on 30 October, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and Minister for Women, Rt Hon Patricia Hewitt MP, set out the Government’s proposals for establishing a “Commission for Equality and Human Rights”. She said that “the Government has concluded that a single body represents the best option for realising its vision of a fairer, more inclusive and prosperous Britain”.

The sixth report of the Joint [i.e. both House of Commons and House of Lords] Committee on Human Rights, published earlier this year, called for integrated institutional support for human rights and equality and the Government’s statement says that it has been decided “that the new body’s remit should cover the promotion of human rights together with its equality responsibilities”.

The new Commission will, the statement says, “promote an inclusive agenda, underlining the importance of equality for all in society, as well as working to combat discrimination affecting specific groups. It will promote equal opportunities for all and tackle barriers to participation. It will play a key role in building a new, inclusive sense of British citizenship and identity in which shared values of respect, fair treatment and equal dignity are recognised as underpinning a cohesive, prosperous society. It will promote a culture of respect for human rights, especially in the delivery of public services.”

The functions proposed for the new body, as set out in the statement, include “promoting community cohesion through providing support to local initiatives to promote dialogue and understanding between different communities and groups”. Clearly this could have a bearing on the future handling of inter faith relations as part of the broader community cohesion agenda.

The Government plans to publish a White Paper next spring setting out its more detailed proposals for the new Commission. The Government is setting up a “task force” to help prepare these. The statement says that “late 2006” is the earliest that the new body can be established.

Go ahead for national framework for RE

The Secretary of State for Education and Skills, Rt Hon Charles Clarke MP, has asked the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority to begin work on the development of a national non-statutory framework for Religious Education.

In England and Wales, the RE Curriculum in most schools is set (within current legal requirements) by the relevant local education authority through its Agreed Syllabus Conference and subject to advice by its Standing Advisory Council for RE (SACRE). In aided and foundation schools of a religious character the RE curriculum is set by the faith community in question.

The Secretary of State's initiative follows a period of reflection and consultation on the report produced by the QCA (and published earlier this year) on the feasibility of a framework of this kind, for which there has been substantial support from RE professionals and faith communities. A national framework would reflect current best practice in RE. Earlier this year a number of Churches suggested going beyond this to produce a statutory national syllabus for RE. This has been a more contentious proposal, particularly because of the value which many place on the involvement in syllabus determination of local SACREs.

Against this background, the Secretary of State has concluded as a result of his consultation that the most sensible way forward is to ask the QCA to begin work to develop a national framework, leaving open the possibility that it might, at a later stage, become statutory, but only following further discussion and consultation.

The Secretary of State has also asked officials of the Department for Education and Skills to explore ways in which the existing requirements for collective worship in schools can be clarified, emphasising in particular the existing scope for flexibility in their application. The possibility of changes in the legal requirements for collective worship may be considered at a later stage.

Local Government and Faith Communities

On 14 October, a seminar was held by the Local Government Association (LGA) in London that brought together local authorities and representatives from the Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh communities. The seminar, Local Government and Faith Communities, was chaired by Cllr Sir Jeremy Beecham, Chairman of the LGA and Cllr Clare Whelan, Vice-Chair of the LGA's Equalities Executive. It examined some of the issues that are of most concern to faith groups in their dealings with local councils and looked at ways in which local government might involve faith communities more closely in local decision making.

Speakers at the seminar included; Fiona Mactaggart MP, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State at the Home Office; Brian Pearce, Director of the Inter Faith Network; Jenny Bond of Churches Together in England; Unaiza Malik of the Muslim Council of Britain; Simon Morris of Jewish Care; Sudarshan Bhatia of the National Council of Hindu Temples; and Dr Indarjit Singh of the Network of Sikh Organisations.

Good practice case studies from two authorities which have been engaging with faith groups to the benefit of the wider community were also described by Joe Ahmed-Dobson of the London Borough of Southwark; and Rumman Ahmed of the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea

The eighty delegates, including local authority officers and faith community representatives, discussed the best ways for faith groups to understand the workings of local authorities and vice versa. It was noted that there is a varied pattern of involvement of faith groups within Local Strategic Partnerships across the country. Other points of discussion included the advantages to local authorities of appointing officers with a faith community liaison brief; and the funding problems of local faith groups.

House of Lords: Latest Proposals

Following its failure to secure consensus in Parliament on a more radical reform of the House of Lords (as demonstrated by a series of votes in February 2003), the Government published a consultation paper in September with its new proposals, which are limited to removing the remaining hereditary peers and putting the Appointments Commission on a statutory basis. Under its proposals, the Commission will in future determine the number and timing of appointments to be made in the House of Lords; select independent members entirely; and oversee party nominations, including vetting them on propriety grounds.

The report of the Royal Commission on Reform of the House of Lords of January 2000 contained recommendations to broaden religious representation in a revised Second Chamber in order to embrace other Christian denominations as well as the Church of England (currently represented by 26 archbishops and bishops), and also other faith communities. It recommended that there should be 26 members “representing the various Christian denominations throughout the UK” and in addition “at any one time at least 5 members... specifically selected to be broadly representative of the different non-Christian faith communities.”

In its White Paper of November 2001, responding to the Royal Commission’s recommendations, the Government did not accept its proposal for formal representation for other denominations and religions, on the basis that the practical obstacles were simply too great “since other denominations and faiths do not have a hierarchical structure which would readily deliver identifiable representatives”. It also noted that there were “many more denominations and faiths than could be accommodated within the overall numbers of faith representatives proposed” by the Royal Commission. The Government said, however, that it believed “that leaders of other denominations and faiths had a significant contribution to make to the Second Chamber” and that “it would expect the Appointments

Bishop Jim Thompson Mourned

It is with deep regret that we record the death of Bishop Jim Thompson, who retired as Anglican Bishop of Bath and Wells in 2001.

Bishop Jim, together with the late Rabbi Hugo Gryn, became a Co-Chair of the Inter Faith Network when this was established in May 1987, their having chaired a series of consultative conferences before this. At the time, Bishop Jim was Moderator of the then British Council of Churches’ Committee on Relations with People of Other Faiths and Bishop of Stepney in east London. Through his broadcasting, particularly on BBC Radio 4’s thought for the Day, he was known to millions. He will be sadly missed.

Commission to reflect this in its recommendations” and proposed in this context that the Church of England’s representation should in future be reduced from 26 to 16.

In its more modest proposals published this September, the Government notes its earlier proposal for reducing the size of the Church of England’s representation in the House of Lords, but points out that “this would have been in the context of a much more fundamental reform than is being proposed at this stage, and probably in the context of a smaller House”. The Government is therefore not now proposing any reduction in the size of the Church of England’s representation. It suggests that the separate issue of how to increase the representation for other Christian denominations and for other faiths is a matter to which the Appointments Commission could be asked to give consideration. It proposes that faith representation “should be one of a range of measures against which the Appointments Commission should assess the suitability of potential independent members” to ensure that “the House of Lords should better reflect the make up of UK society.”

FCO Multi Faith Week

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) hosted a Multi Faith Week from 7 to 11 October at its Whitehall headquarters. The aim of the week was to help engage with faith communities on foreign policy and to build a better relationship between those communities and the FCO. Events included a multi faith music evening on 7 October and a seminar Domestic Echoes of Foreign Policy on 8 October which was opened by the Foreign Secretary, Rt Hon Jack Straw MP.

The Multi Faith Week culminated in a family friendly Faith and Culture Day held at the FCO in Whitehall on 11 October which was open to the public. The day included food from different cultures; music including bhangra, gospel choirs, qawwalis; and art exhibitions, stalls, a bazaar and various other activities. Several faith community organisations had stands at the Faith and Culture Day, as did the Inter Faith Network.

Home Secretary visits Southall and York

The Home Secretary, Rt Hon David Blunkett MP, visited the Ram Mandir in Southall on 4 September. The Mandir, one of the oldest in the country, has been working to expand its activities in the community over the last few years. After the formal presentations, Mr Blunkett was introduced to several guests, including members of the Mandir and representatives of local Buddhist, Christian, Muslim and Sikh organisations.

The Home Secretary delivered the Heslington Lecture at York University on 30 October 2003. He spoke on the theme One Nation, Many Faiths - Unity and Diversity in Multi-Faith Britain. In the lecture he highlighted the role of faith in people's lives and said that faith is vital to community cohesion and race relations. He encouraged faith communities to take part in the political process, saying "They have an important role not just in building strong communities, but in building active communities... Any government which is interested in connecting with, mobilising, and empowering communities is going to be interested in engaging with faith communities."

The full text of the speech is available at the Home Office website:
www.homeoffice.gov.uk.

Colloquium on social cohesion

The second annual Colloquium on Social Cohesion was held at the University of Derby on 4 and 5 September. The colloquium looked at promoting positive social cohesion and attempted to identify a number of indicators that might measure or quantify social cohesion. One of the workshops held across the two days focused on religion and belief and included an evening visit to a local Sikh gurdwara. The event was organised by the Institute for Social Cohesion of the Baha'i Community of the UK; the Multi Faith Centre at the University of Derby; and the Home Office Community Cohesion Unit. A final report of the Colloquium will be presented to Parliament in 2004.

Faith and Voluntary Action

On 16 September the Institute for Volunteering Research launched a report written by Priya Lukka and Michael Locke with Andri Soteri-Proctor on Faith and Voluntary Action: Community, Values and Resources. The report explores how people in different faith communities take part in "volunteering"; what motivates them to volunteer; how their volunteering is organised; how their activities are resourced; and the relationship between faith communities and other local networks.

The report shows that faith communities carry out a wide variety of voluntary activities, and that the communities depend on voluntary action. It notes that communities organise themselves in a variety of ways. The report highlights the interest that Government and other public bodies are taking in the activities of faith communities and the contribution these can make to their local communities in tackling social exclusion. It also notes, however, that public agencies need to do more to inform faith communities about sources of external support available.

The full report is available from the Institute for Volunteering Research priced £12.50 including postage and packing. Tel: 020 7520 8900, email: instvolres@aol.com.

Guide to faith communities in Scotland

The Scottish Inter Faith Council launched “A Guide to Faith Communities in Scotland” at an event hosted by the Presiding Officer of the Scottish Parliament, George Reid MSP, at Rany Hall in Edinburgh on 24 September. The booklet provides an introduction to each of the major faiths represented in Scotland and also provides information on inter faith initiatives in Scotland. The guide is available from the Scottish Inter Faith Council, St Francis' Centre, 405 Cumberland Street, Glasgow G5 0SE or email: admin@interfaithscotland.org.

Meeting the religious and spiritual needs of NHS patients and staff

On 5 November at St Bartholomew's Hospital in London the Department of Health's Chief Nursing Officer, Sarah Mullally, launched two new guidance documents to help NHS chaplaincy services to reflect the religious diversity of patients and staff, Meeting the Religious and Spiritual Needs of Patients and

Staff and Caring for the Spirit: a Strategy for the Chaplaincy and Spiritual Healthcare Workforce.

The Department of Health worked with NHS Chaplains and the Multi-Faith Group for Healthcare Chaplaincy in compiling Meeting the Religious and Spiritual Needs of Patients and Staff. It offers guidance to NHS Trusts about providing fair and respectful spiritual care for hospital communities, while also recognising the needs of those of no particular faith. Since the introduction of the Human Rights Act 2000, NHS Trusts are increasingly working with different faith communities to provide representatives of different faiths to visit hospitals and to provide worship spaces for different communities within the healthcare population. The document can be downloaded from the web site: www.doh.gov.uk/chaplain or telephone: 08101 555 455 for a copy.

The second document launched at the event was Caring for the Spirit: a Strategy for the Chaplaincy and Spiritual Healthcare Workforce, published by the South Yorkshire Workforce Development Confederation. It is a good practice guide aimed at NHS Chaplains working in multi faith settings. It is available to download at the web site: www.sywdc.nhs.uk.

Archbishop visits Leicester Mandir

The Archbishop of Canterbury, Rt Rev Dr Rowan Williams, visited the Shree Sanatan Mandir in Leicester on 4 November. He met with representatives of a number of Hindu organisations and also guests from different faith communities. In his address he said: “Leicester is something of a beacon in the way it is a model of understanding and a model of engagement. You are fortunate to live in a city where the diversity of all human life is all around”. Other speakers included Ramanbhai Barber, President of the Mandir; Resham Singh Sandhu of the Leicester Council of Faiths; and the Bishop of Leicester, Rt Rev Tim Stevens.

Inter faith in a global age

The International Interfaith Centre hosted a meeting from 20-21 September at Harris Manchester College in Oxford for representatives of the 14 interfaith organisations which make up the International Interfaith Network. On 20 September there was an open afternoon for invitees to meet representatives of the organisations. There was also a presentation by the Council of the Parliament of the World's Religions about the up-coming international conference to be held in Barcelona, Spain from 7-13 July 2004.

Merchant Navy Memorial Day

The Merchant Navy held an inter faith memorial event to mark Merchant Navy Day on 7 September. The event, held at the Tower Hill Memorial in London, included readings and prayers from the different faiths represented. It was led by Rev Dr Davis Craig of the Mission to Seafarers; Rev Malcolm Wiseman, Senior Jewish Chaplain for the Forces; Dr Indarjit Singh, Network of Sikh Organisations; Imam Abdurrahman Al-Shayyal from Durham; and Mr Ron Maddox, Buddhist adviser to the Armed Forces.

Marking the Pope's silver jubilee

Celebrations have been held at the Vatican and around the world to mark the 25th anniversary of the election as Pope of John Paul II who has been personally committed to building good relations with other faith communities. The Papal Nuncio, His Excellency Archbishop Pablo Puente hosted a reception in London on 9 October, which was attended by Cardinal Cormac Murphy O'Connor and as in previous receptions, representatives of other Churches and also of other faith communities.

Inter faith honours

On 14 November the Archbishop of Canterbury received one of the top honours of the Catholic Church for developing and encouraging dialogue between Protestants and Catholics. Dr Rowan Williams is the first Archbishop of Canterbury to be made Knight Grand Cross - the highest grade - of the Royal Order of Francis I. Lady Thatcher was made a Dame Grand Cross for her work in inter faith dialogue.

Foreign Office Minister, Baroness Symons, presented the Sternberg Foundation's Annual Interfaith Medallion Award to Canon Andrew White of the International Centre of Reconciliation at Coventry Cathedral at a ceremony at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 10 November.

World Congress of Faiths retreat

The World Congress of Faiths held an inter faith retreat from 9-10 September at Fintry House in Surrey. This gave the opportunity for members to reflect on their inter faith work and to look to the future expressing their hopes and desires for a peaceful future. The next retreat will be held from 22-24 July 2004.

Inter faith youth retreat

An inter faith retreat was held from 19-21 September. Thirty-six young people from Baha'i, Brahma Kumari, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jain, Jewish, and Sikh faiths attended. The organising team consisted of people from seven different faiths and the retreat had the backing of respect, a Timebank initiative with the Prince's Trust and was held at the Brahma Kumaris Global Retreat Centre in Nuneham Courtney, Oxfordshire.

Focus on women's inter faith initiatives

The official launch of the Women's Interfaith Network (WIN) took place on 9 September, at the Royal College of Physicians, in the form of a seminar attended by 160 women from the major religions. The new organisation (which is a separate initiative from the Inter Faith Network) began as a result of a personal initiative by Lady Gilda Levy and Mrs Pinky Lilani to bring women of different faiths together to help combat the stereotypes prevalent in society, especially after the terrorist attacks of September 11 2001.

Speakers at the launch seminar, who included Priya Nair Radhakrishnan, Eve Pollard and Cherie Booth addressed various topics, including the feelings of younger people towards organised religion, the power of the media and the problems of stereotyping. In the afternoon the participants split into workshops and discussed issues which had arisen from the morning session, as well as their own personal concerns and what they felt that WIN could offer them. There was also discussion about the possibility of women starting local groups or helping with WIN in some way. Further information about the Women's Interfaith Network and transcripts of the speeches are available at www.wominet.co.uk.

Women of Faith met in London on 4 November to discuss issues including the role of women in conflict resolution and the impact of war and armed conflict on women and families. The Group is a partner body to the Women's National Commission, which arose out of initial discussions at the United Nations session of the Commission on the Status of Women in New York.

Local Inter Faith Activity in the UK : A Survey (see page 1) features information on a number of women's inter faith dialogue initiatives around the country. For example, a Christian-Muslim Women's Group has been meeting since May 2002 in Leicester; the Daughters of Abraham (London) – a group of Muslim and Jewish women have been meeting regularly for the last six years under the auspices of the Maimonides Foundation; Bradford Interfaith Women for Peace has been meeting monthly for some years; the Thames Gateway Women's Multi Faith Forum has been running in North Kent; and a women's inter faith forum is under discussion in Oldham.

REGIONAL UPDATE

Survey of local religious communities in the North West Region

On 11 November the launch took place on a ferry on the River Mersey in Liverpool of a major report looking at the contribution made to the life of the North West Region by the faith communities: Faith in the England's Northwest: The Contribution made by Faith Communities to Civil Society in the Region.

Speakers included the report's author, Monsignor John Devine (Churches' Officer for the North West); Steven Broomhead, Chief Executive of the Northwest Development Agency; Rt Revd James Jones, Bishop of Liverpool; and Dr Khalid Anees of the Muslim Council of Britain. The work for the report was undertaken with the support of the Northwest Development Agency and the Economic and Social Partners Group on the North West Regional Assembly.

The Report contains statistics on the many ways that faith communities are contributing to the life of the North West Region. It looks at how faith groups are serving their neighbourhoods and contributing to culture, education, health, the environment and sport. It also looks at how religious buildings are being used as neighbourhood resources and at issues of funding and use of volunteers.

As part of the project which led to the report, a database has been compiled of all places of worship in the region. This enabled report questionnaires to go to every place of worship of the Baha'i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jain, Jewish, Muslim, Sikh and Zoroastrian communities in the North West. It is intended to develop, in the near future, a North West Regional Inter Faith Forum.

For further information about the report or regional inter faith work in the North West, contact: Monsignor John Devine by email: John.Devine@nwda.co.uk or on Tel: 01925 400100.

North East directory launched

A new directory Ethnicity in the North East - An Overview was launched on 9 October at Newcastle Football Club, with a cultural jamboree featuring dance, music, drama and food from around the world. The directory provides regional information on ethnic minority communities, including facts on religious and cultural diversity and contacts details for community leaders and projects. The directory is the result of a partnership between the Government Office for the North East, the Regional Assembly, One NorthEast, Culture North East, and the Home Office. Speaking at the launch, Veena Soni of the Government Office for the North East said: "This event has been a feast of music, dance, food and drama, highlighting the influence and wealth that so many cultures bring to life in our region". Copies of the directory are available from Veena Soni, Government Office for the North East, Wellbar House, Gallowgate, Newcastle upon Tyne NE1 4TD.

Local Roundup

Cardiff

The second annual "United by Lights" event took place at Canton Uniting Church on 22 November. The 250 participants representing six different faith communities enjoyed a meal of Asian and Welsh food provided by the Hindu community. Speakers at the event included Alan Schwartz, who spoke about the work of the Inter Faith Council for Wales. Presentations were followed by performances of song, music and verse from different communities.

London

Barnet. On 16 September the London Borough of Barnet held a conference "Faith in Communities". The Leader of the Council, Councillor Victor Lyon, welcomed local faith leaders, clerics, cabinet members, local councillors and visitors from other parts of the country to the conference. The conference was chaired by Councillor Aba Dunner, Secretary General for the Conference of European Rabbis, and the keynote speaker was Imam Dr Abduljalil Sajid of the Muslim Council for Religious and Racial Harmony who spoke about the role and importance of inter faith work. Officers leading on Barnet Council's major regeneration discussed how faith communities will help to shape major planning and regeneration schemes in the future and workshops in the afternoon focused on the role of faith groups in the rebuilding and regeneration agenda. Following the conference, consideration is being given to establishing a body to link the faiths in Barnet.

Kensington. The Forum of Faiths in Kensington and Chelsea was officially launched at a reception hosted by the Mayor of Kensington and Chelsea, Cllr Christopher Buckmaster on 9 October 2003 at Kensington Town Hall. The reception was attended by representatives of local faith communities, the leader of the Council, Council Officers and the MP for Kensington and Chelsea. The launch was accompanied by an exhibition on the theme of "Serving the Community", which showed examples of the work that faith communities do in the Borough. For further information contact: Dr Dahbi Skali, Community Relations Section, Tel: 020 7598 4633.

Southwark. The Southwark Multi-Faith Forum was launched at the Damilola Taylor Centre in Peckham on 3 September. The launch event featured performances by Christian gospel singers and Islamic nasheed singers and featured a key note address by Simon Hughes, MP for North Southwark and Bermondsey. The event was sponsored by the Metropolitan Police, Southwark Council and the Neighbourhood Renewal Fund.

The main objectives of the Southwark Multi-Faith Forum are to promote better relations between different faith communities; to support religious organisation in the Borough getting involved with projects to improve the quality of life for Southwark residents; and to elect a faith representative to Southwark Alliance, the Local Strategic Partnership. For further information contact the Forum Co-ordinator, Joe Ahmed-Dobson on tel: 020 7525 0510 or email: joe.ahmed-dobson@southwark.gov.uk.

Westminster. Over 200 representatives of different faiths met at the Maria Assumpta Centre, in Kensington Square on 16 November to share and celebrate the ways in which their

Inter faith profile

Inter Faith Activity in the UK: A Survey highlights the work of local inter faith bodies. This issues Inter Faith Profile is of Zvi Friedman of Interfaith MK (Milton Keynes) who is a long term local inter faith practitioner.

How did you first become involved with the work of Inter Faith MK?

Interfaith MK grew out of a discussion group which formed in Milton Keynes in about 1980. I was a member of the original group. Later, particularly when Rev Murdoch MacKenzie arrived as our second Ecumenical Moderator within the Christian Churches, his encouragement led to the group becoming more formalised and visible - moving from a discussion group to one that supported a greater role for inter faith work in the life of the new city. When I retired from full-time work in 1997 I took on the role of secretary and convenor of IFMK.

What do you see as the main achievements of Interfaith MK?

Chiefly, to ensure that the minority faith communities are visible within the wider community and contribute to the life of the wider community, in particular by regular participation in events such as the Civic Service and the Peace Pagoda anniversary. We have also had a significant role on the Milton Keynes SACRE (Standing Advisory Council on Religious Education), especially in producing the recent Agreed Syllabus. The Group also contributes a Faith Matters column to the local Sunday newspaper to which people of different faiths contribute in rotation. I believe that we have raised the spiritual profile within Milton Keynes.

Is work with the media important for local inter faith bodies?

With few exceptions, we have welcomed the attention of the media, both local newspapers and the local BBC radio station, Three Counties Radio. Along with inter faith groups from the other two counties (Bedfordshire and Hertfordshire) we have a regular monthly radio slot. It's been our position that publicity for inter faith work should be encouraged, despite the frequent difficulty of drawing a line between religious and political matters. It's important, of course, to find articulate representatives.

How does your faith inform your work in the inter faith field?

My faith tells me to 'welcome the stranger' - a general encouragement to be sympathetic towards those who genuinely seek a better life in the UK. I've usually found that being a Jew is an advantage in the inter faith field because Jews have been through the process of adaptation to British society that now faces many other minority communities. As a child, I had personal experience of this process and I believe that Jews have, in general, adapted successfully and therefore we have some understanding of the process and the problems.

How do you see the work of local inter faith groups developing in the future?

Our experience in Interfaith MK has been that the statutory authorities (local government, police, NHS, schools and others), while consulting directly with faith communities, also find it helpful to have an inter faith organisation as a bridge into the needs and customs of the different faith groups. Given the resurgence of religion as a badge of identity in some communities, this role must increase.

So far we have received no funding from statutory bodies and have operated due to the generosity of a local supporter. However, it seems inevitable that inter faith bodies will have to become closer to statutory authorities, and those authorities will need to budget for some support for inter faith work.

various religions hand on their faith and traditions to younger members. Organised by Westminster Interfaith, an agency of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Westminster, the event attracted people from Baha'i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim, Sikh and Zoroastrian faiths. The event was part of Westminster Interfaith's "Celebrating Differences" series and was subtitled "Bringing up our Young People in the Faith".

Nelson

As a contribution to "One World Week", Nelson and Brierfield Building Bridges organised a display of collages produced by local school children on the Week's key themes of diversity and poverty. After a launch in Brierfield Peace Garden, the display traveled around various schools and libraries in Pendle. Participants included the staff and pupils from local schools, Pendle Borough Council, the Mayor of Pendle and the Mayor of Brierfield. It was arranged by Building Bridges in conjunction with Pendle Borough Council and Lancashire Children's Fund.

Sheffield

An Inter faith service to commemorate Hiroshima Day was held at the Peace Gardens in Sheffield in August. It was attended by representatives from the Baha'i, Muslim, Pagan, Jewish, Unitarian, Quaker, Brahma Kumari and Buddhist communities. Sheffield Peace Forum organised the event and Sheffield Interfaith arranged the service. Sheffield Interfaith also ran a stall at the Abbeyfield Multicultural Festival held in July at Abbeyfield Park. The festival was organised by Green City Action and contributions ranged from music and dancing to stalls and workshops run by a wide range of political, ecological and community welfare groups.

Watford

The Watford Inter-Faith Association (WIFA), in association with other community groups, organised a "community cultural arena" to illustrate communities working together at Watford's Rainbow Festival in Cassiobury Park in July. A range of religious and cultural groups were brought together in two large performance and exhibition tents. In September, WIFA hosted a meeting of the Three Counties Interfaith Network at Watford Town Hall, bringing together inter faith groups from Bedfordshire, Buckinghamshire and Hertfordshire. The main speaker was John Battle MP.

INTERNATIONAL UPDATE

Rome meeting of Ministers discusses inter faith dialogue

A conference of Ministers of the Interior of EU Member and Accession States took place in Rome on 30 and 31 October at the invitation of the Italian Presidency of the European Union. Its theme was "Inter faith dialogue as a social cohesion factor in Europe and as an instrument of peace in the Mediterranean area".

The Home Office Minister for race equality, community policy and civil renewal, Fiona Mactaggart MP, reported on the pattern of inter faith dialogue and cooperation in the UK and also on the dialogue between faiths and government at both national and local level. The Minister stressed the involvement of all the UK's major faiths in these twin dialogues and underlined the importance of this to community cohesion. In a separate presentation, the Rt Revd Christopher Herbert, Bishop of St Albans and Chair of the Council of Christians and Jews, representing the Anglican Church, spoke of the great importance of inter faith dialogue and of the lessons that can be learned from the longstanding dialogue between Jews and Christians. He stressed that dialogue between all faiths lies at the heart of Europe's future.

Second meeting of the European Council of Religious Leaders

Members of the European Council of Religious Leaders (ECRL), met in Sarajevo, Bosnia-Herzegovina from 30 September to 1 October and signed a commitment to multi-religious cooperation for peace and justice in Europe and in the world. In the statement they called upon the Inter-Governmental Conference meeting in Rome, to ensure legal mechanisms in the European Constitution for open, transparent and regular dialogue between the EU and European religious organizations.

Participants at the meeting from the UK included Bhai Sahib Bhai Mohinder Singh, Chairman of the Guru Nanak Nishkam Sewak Jatha; Mr. Jehangir Sarosh, Moderator of WCRP Europe; and Shaykh Ibrahim Mogra of the Muslim Council of Britain.

United Kingdom - Sierra Leone Concordat

The World Conference on Religion and Peace (WCRP) UK Chapter signed a Concordat with the Sierra Leone Chapter of Religions for Peace on 17 November. The two organisations aim to work together for the purpose of friendship; shared development and mutual support in their work towards securing sustainable peace in Africa and Europe. The Concordat was signed at the London Inter Faith Centre by Dr Pauline Webb and Rev Fergus Capie for WCRP (UK) and at the West African Peace Forum in Freetown, Sierra Leone by Bishop J C Humper and Alimany P Koroma on behalf of the Sierra Leone Chapter.

RESOURCES

New pictorial calendar from Shap

The listing of religious festivals and holy days published each year by the Shap Working Party on World Religions in Education is widely used in the educational field and in many other sectors of British life. In addition to the popular wallchart and booklet explaining the festivals of the different faiths the Working Party has now also published a pictorial wall calendar for 2004 on the theme of religious festivals. A photograph depicting a different faith community is featured for each month of the calendar. Both calendars are available from: Shap Working Party, P O Box 38580, London SW1P 3XF. The pictorial calendar is priced £6.50, while the Shap Calendar (wallchart and booklet) is £5.20. Full details are available on the new Shap website: www.shap.org.

Activities guidelines for Holocaust Memorial Day

The theme for Holocaust Memorial Day 2004 is "From the Holocaust to Rwanda: Lessons Learned and Lessons Still to Learn". ## UK faiths criticise French ban on religious symbols in schools

UK faith communities have expressed concern over the passing of a law by the French Government on 10 February banning the wearing of religious clothing and symbols in state schools. The ban has been under consideration for some time.

Representatives of the Muslim and Sikh communities have made their strong views against the ban clear at meetings with French officials in Paris and in London at the French Embassy, highlighting how their communities will be affected by the ban. There have been demonstrations against it in London outside the French Embassy and in Paris.

In recent weeks several faith leaders including the Archbishop of Canterbury have made statements urging the French Government to re-consider the ban.

Speaking at a reception hosted by the Muslim community in December Home Office Minister Fiona Mactaggart said, "Britishness today is not homogeneous. It is evolving and is as rich as the different people in Britain. British Muslims have consistently shown how it

Home Office Review Report Completed

As reported in Issue 22 of Inter Faith Update, the new Faith Communities Unit set up in the Home Office has been taking forward the Government's review of the patterns of its consultation with faith communities and their representation at national events. The Steering Group for the Review, chaired by the Home Office Minister, Ms Fiona Mactaggart, approved the terms of its report at its fourth meeting on 2 February. There have been eight meetings of the Working Group. Both of these two Groups included representatives of Government Departments and of faith communities.

The report will review existing arrangements for consultation between individual Government Departments and faith communities and set out "good practice" guidelines on this; make recommendations to faith communities on how to make the consultation process with central Government more effective; look at consultation by central Government at regional and local level; review arrangements for the representation of faith communities at national events; and consider the adequacy of existing central machinery for consultation between Government and faith communities. It is anticipated that the report will be published towards the end of March.

NETWORK NEWS

Meeting Of Faith Communities Consultative Forum

Issue 22 of Inter Faith Update reported the first meeting of the Faith Communities Consultative Forum established within the framework of the Network. This has evolved from earlier meetings of faith community representative bodies in Network membership.

At a meeting of the Forum in London on 1 December, Ms Fiona Mactaggart, the Home Office Minister with responsibility for faith community matters, offered her reflections on the Home Office Review of the Government's engagement with faith communities. She said that "the development of a closer relationship between central Government and faith communities has been a learning experience for both sides. The Government wants to have a closer engagement with faith communities which bring together large numbers of citizens who have an important contribution to make to society". She said that the setting up within the Home Office of a Faith Communities Unit, taken together with the recent Review, were designed to help this process. She added that "the Government expects the views of faith communities to be expressed with candour. Consultation does not always lead to agreement and there will be disagreement from time to time between Government and faith communities on some issues. It is quite right for these disagreements to be clearly expressed, whether from the perspective of faith communities or of the Government. Effective consultation machinery needs to make people feel safe in expressing their views robustly to one another." She emphasised the need for mechanisms whereby the voices of women and of young people in faith communities can be heard better. She spoke of the joy of representing, as MP for Slough, a richly diverse local community and said that her practical experience as MP for this constituency had underlined for her the importance of personal encounter and action at a local level and informed the way she was approaching her work as a Minister.

The meeting also heard a presentation from Debbie Gupta of the Women and Equality Unit in the Department for Trade and Industry on the process for drawing up the Government's White Paper on the proposed Commission for Equality and Human Rights, and considered the report published last June by the House of Lords Select Committee on Religious Offences and the Home Office's response to this, which had just been published.

NATIONAL UPDATE

is possible to be British, Muslim and proud. There has been a long running controversy in France both within the state education system and nationally about symbols and the role of faith in a secular society. This is a debate we had a long time ago, and with our very different traditions and with sensitivity displayed by all faiths, we have been able to find within our own culture a way of celebrating diversity without controversy."

In a written statement in February, Foreign Office Minister Mike O'Brien said "In Britain we are comfortable with the expression of religion. Integration does not require assimilation."

The Network's National Meeting in London on 28 June will have as its theme "Inter faith relations: the UK in Europe".

In England and Wales school governing bodies are responsible for deciding on policy on school uniforms. But the advice of the Department for Education and Skills to school governors is that it is not appropriate "that any pupil should be disciplined for non-compliance with a school uniform policy which results from them having to adhere to a particular cultural, race or religious dress code."

There have been two cases in separate schools in Luton this year over items of clothing worn by Muslim students being banned by the head teachers concerned. In one case, involving the hijab (headscarf), the ban was quickly reversed by the school's governors. The other case, involving the jilbab (ankle length robe) is to be the subject of a court hearing.

Holocaust Memorial Day

Northern Ireland hosted the UK's 4th Holocaust Memorial Day (HMD) Commemoration which took place at Belfast's Waterfront Hall on 27 January. As 2004 is the 10th anniversary of the genocide in Rwanda which resulted in the deaths of up to a million people, the HMD theme for 2004 was 'From the Holocaust to Rwanda; lessons learned, lessons still to learn'.

HMD events took place around the country and many of these involved different faith groups. Some had active involvement from local inter faith organisations. For example, a service hosted by Rochester Cathedral was held in conjunction with the town's inter faith group and in Leicester the Mayor attended a multi cultural evening organised by the Leicester Council of Faiths. Among religious events with an HMD theme was BBC R4's Sunday Worship programme on 28 February which came from the West London Synagogue where Rabbi Mark Winer shared his pulpit with the Anglican Bishop of London, Richard Chartres.

Details of the national commemoration and many local events can be found on the official HMD website: <http://www.holocaustmemorialday.gov.uk>

CCJ Statement

The Joint Presidents of the Council of Christians and Jews issued a statement on 27 January, Holocaust Memorial Day, condemning anti-Semitism and the "politics of hate" in all its forms. In the statement, they note that the good relations between Britain's Christian and Jewish leaders have helped set the tone for tolerance and respectful diversity more widely. Their statement celebrates the contribution of the international Jewish community to "the conversation of mankind" and speaks of the calling of Jews and Christians, as well as other faith communities, to work towards achieving dignity and respect for all people. The Presidents note, however, a resurgence in Europe and around the world of attacks on Jewish people, and call on others to join their pledge not to permit anti-Semitism to “stain our continent’s future as it has our past”. This involves the rejection of all forms of racism, prejudice and xenophobia as well as “the misuse of religion and religious language” in political argument. The statement also includes the expression of a deep longing for justice, peace and reconciliation in the Holy Land. For the full text see <http://www.ccj.org.uk>.

Figures released some days later by the Jewish Community Security Trust showed that 2003 saw the second highest annual figure for anti-Semitic incidents in Britain since records began in 1984. For 2003 the number of incidents was 375, up by 7% on the previous year, which was itself 15% higher than in 2001.

The Passion of the Christ

A private screening of The Passion of the Christ, a controversial new film directed by Mel Gibson took place some days before its general release begins on 1 March. The portrayal of the Jewish authorities of Jesus’ time in the film has caused deep disquiet among members of the Jewish community. It has prompted fears that decades of inter faith work aimed at countering anti-Judaism will be undermined. Some Christians have welcomed the film although others have criticised it for drawing on dubious non-Biblical sources.

Attacks on places of worship

Attacks on churches, gurdwaras, mosques, synagogues and temples have occurred in a number of areas in the last few months. Among these was an attack on the Sri Ram Mandir in Wembley on 25 October, the day of Diwali, when a young intruder grabbed the microphone and began abusing Hindu beliefs and deities. The other intruder lifted the consecrated statue of Ram and threw it to the ground, breaking its arm. The perpetrators, who claimed to be acting in the name of a Christian group, were arrested and charged but were in one case only fined £400 and in the other jailed for 4 months. The Hindu-Christian Forum issued a statement at the start of January deploring this situation, affirming respect for each other’s faith, and asking the Government to provide full protection to places of worship and to amend the law so that people who carry out such acts can be more adequately punished.

The Director of Public Prosecutions, Ken Macdonald QC, met with members of the local Hindu community after the court case was concluded to discuss the basis for the charges the prosecution had opted to pursue. Following a meeting between the Director of Public Prosecutions, some of the CPS’ policy staff and representatives from the Hindu community the CPS has agreed to hold twice-yearly discussions with them and to appoint an independent Hindu adviser to the London Criminal Justice Board.

CPS consults on racist and religiously motivated crime

Issue 22 of Inter Faith Update reported on the new policy statement on racist and religiously motivated crime by the Crown Prosecution Service. People from minority ethnic communities and faith communities across the North West region were consulted about racist and religiously motivated crime at a conference hosted by the Crown Prosecution Service on 10 January. The five CPS North West Areas (Cheshire, Merseyside, Greater Manchester, Lancashire and Cumbria) issued an open invitation to minority ethnic and faith communities in their areas to come along to the event to find out about the prosecution of these crimes and to give their opinions on the new policy.

The CPS policy document can be found at <http://www.cps.gov.uk/home/PressArchive/121-03.htm>.

The latest CPS Racist Incident Monitoring Scheme Report (RIMS) is due to be published in the next two months. For the first time this annual report will include a section on religiously aggravated offences (based on finalised cases completed between 14 December 2001, when the new offences were introduced, and 31 March 2003). Cases completed from 1 April 2003 to 31 March 2004 will be covered in a report later in the year and will cover the same twelve month reporting period.

CRE's Safe Communities Initiative

A leaflet is now available from the Commission for Racial Equality describing its Safe Communities Initiative launched last year. The text of the leaflet can be found on the CRE's website at www.cre.gov.uk.

The aim of the initiative is to provide information and advice on promoting good community relations and to help prevent and resolve disputes or tensions as early as possible. It will draw on successful work that is being done in this field; identify the most effective community relations projects and promote their approaches as widely as possible; and serve as a source of expertise and knowledge for all communities and for local and national organisations working for them. One of the CRE's aims in setting up the initiative is to encourage people to acknowledge, discuss and appreciate their differences and to prevent relations between communities and individuals being harmed by ignorance, prejudice or fear. Further information is available from Dal Babu at the CRE on 020 7939 0115.

CRE Appointments

At the end of January the Commission for Racial Equality appointed Mohammed Aziz, of the Muslim community, and Julia Chain, of the Jewish community, as part time Commissioners.

The CRE have also just announced the appointment of their first Senior Policy Officer for Religion and Belief, Priya Lukka, who will be familiar to many in the inter faith world for her previous work on faith and volunteering.

New measures to prevent workplace discrimination

As foreshadowed in earlier issues of Inter Faith Update, new legislation to prevent discrimination in the workplace on grounds of sexual orientation or of religion or belief have come into force. The Sexual Orientation regulations came into force in Great Britain on 1 December and the Religion or Belief regulations on 2 December. They apply to all employers and businesses whatever their size and whether in the public or private sector. The regulations cover recruitment, terms and conditions, pay, promotion, transfers and dismissals and apply across Great Britain (England, Scotland and Wales). Legislation outlawing discrimination on grounds of religion has been in existence in Northern Ireland for some years.

The Regulations implement the relevant strands of the European Employment Directive adopted in late 2000 outlawing discrimination on grounds of race, gender, sexual orientation, religion or belief, disability and age in employment and vocational training. Amendments to the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 implementing the Directive are due to come into force in October 2004 and new legislation outlawing discrimination on age grounds by the end of 2006.

Jacqui Smith, Deputy Minister for Women and Equality said: "We have long had laws to prevent discrimination in the workplace against women and on grounds of race – these new measures bring about much wider equality. For the very first time we are making discrimination unlawful on grounds of sexual orientation and religion or belief, in workplaces in England, Scotland and Wales. Unfair discrimination in employment must not be tolerated. People should not be denied jobs, suffer victimisation or harassment, because of prejudice."

Planning for new Commission for Equality and Human Rights

A “task force” was established in December to advise the Government on the creation of the proposed new Commission for Equality and Human Rights. Chaired by Jacqui Smith, Deputy Minister for Women and Equality, it will help draw up detailed proposals for inclusion in the consultative White Paper which the Government plans to publish in April.

Three members (sharing two seats) have a particular interest in faith community concerns. They are Mohammed Aziz, of the British Muslim Research Centre; Rev John Kennedy, Co-ordinating Secretary for Church and Society at Churches Together in Britain and Ireland; and Brian Pearce, Director of the Inter Faith Network. The Executive Director of the British Humanist Association, Hanne Stinson, is also a member of the “task force.” A full list of its members can be found at www.womenandequalityunit.gov.uk.

Papers circulated to the members of the Task Force for discussion are available in advance of its meetings and notes of its meetings and other material flowing from them are also available on the same website. It is therefore possible for a much wider range of organisations and individuals to keep in touch with the proceedings of the “task force” and, if they so wish, to contact its members about its work or to approach the Department for Trade and Industry direct.

Select Committee on Religious Offences in England and Wales

As reported in Issue 22 of Inter Faith Update, the report of the House of Lords Select Committee on Religious Offences in England and Wales was published in June last year. It contained a detailed analysis of the current law relating to religious offences. It examined the case for introducing a new offence of incitement to religious hatred; reviewed old common law offences, including blasphemy, and various statutory provisions, including the Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act of 1860 and considered whether there is a case for repealing these, leaving them unchanged or modernising them.

In December the Home Office gave their response to the Select Committee’s report. This confirms that the Government remains sympathetic to the idea of legislating to create a new offence of incitement to religious hatred, as it tried to do in the context of the Anti-Terrorism Bill in the autumn of 2001 (from which it was dropped following opposition in the House of Lords). It says that it has no immediate plans to reintroduce the proposal but will consider doing so if an opportunity arises for doing so. Meanwhile, it will listen carefully to any further debates on this subject.

On the blasphemy law the Government’s position is that it wants to listen to the arguments (on what the Select Committee’s report shows is a rather difficult and contested issue). The Home Secretary has made it clear that he personally does not favour the extension of the law on blasphemy to other faiths and is attracted by the idea of repealing it but sees a need for a full debate to inform the way forward. The Select Committee says in its report that it is doubtful whether a prosecution brought under the present blasphemy law would now be successful, because there could be an objection to this on human rights grounds, on the basis that the blasphemy law is a discriminatory piece of legislation since it only protects the beliefs of the Church of England (and those of other Churches and other faiths only insofar as these overlap with them). Therefore, the existing law may be symbolic rather than having any practical force. Even so, some attach importance to this.

The Government endorses the report’s view that “those of religious faith deserve the best protection the law will allow, including protection for their places and rites of religious observance” but comments that it is unclear whether the Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act in practice addresses conduct not covered by other criminal offences. It says that if the opportunity arises for reform of the law in the areas covered by the report it will look carefully at the case for retaining or updating the Act. The full text of the Home Office's response can be found at www.official-documents.co.uk/document/cm60/6091/6091.pdf.

The Select Committee's report and the Government's response to it were discussed at the meeting of the Network's Faith Communities Consultative Forum on 1 December (see page 2) and subsequently at a further ad hoc meeting on 4 February arranged by the Network to enable representatives of faith community organisations to discuss further their position on the issues covered in the report. These meetings showed considerable support for early legislation on incitement to religious hatred, although views on the blasphemy law were more varied.

A debate in the House of Lords on the Select Committee's report and the Government's response to it is awaited.

Commission on Urban Life and Faith

The Church of England has set up a Commission on Urban Life and Faith, to look into the state of urban life in England and to see what progress Church and state are making in improving life in the cities; to mark the changes made by de-industrialisation, population movement and globalisation; to reflect on the challenge God is making to the Church and the nation; and to offer a new vision of the Church in the city. The Commission will also be seeking to "demonstrate the effectiveness of the Churches' and other faiths' work in deeply disadvantaged areas.". The Commission is chaired by Baroness Rev Kathleen Richardson, of the Methodist Church and Moderator of the Churches' Commission for Inter Faith Relations. It includes representatives of other Christian denominations and also has a Muslim member. The appointment of a Jewish member is awaited. Further information is available by sending an email to: culs@c-of-e.org.uk

National Non-Statutory Framework for RE

As reported in Issue 23 of Inter Faith Update, Charles Clarke, the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, has asked the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority to develop a national non-statutory framework for Religious Education in England. A Steering Group and a Writing Group for this exercise have been established and it is anticipated that a consultative draft of the framework document will be published this spring.

Organ donation and religious perspectives

UK Transplant, an agency of the NHS, has recently published a new leaflet, Organ Donation and Religious Perspectives, which offers a brief guide to religious viewpoints regarding organ donation in Buddhism, Christianity, Hinduism, Islam, Judaism and Sikhism. The leaflet is being distributed through transplant co-ordinators in hospitals around the country and is also available by contacting orders@uktransplant.nhs.uk. Further information is available at the web site: www.uktransplant.org.uk.

The Three Faiths Forum Medical Group met on 12 February to hear and discuss a talk on organ transplantation from Dr David Jones, Senior Lecturer in Bioethics, School of Theology, Philosophy and History, St Mary's College. Further information from The Three Faiths Forum: www.threefaithsforum.org.uk.

Faiths take part in "Big Conversation"

Over 120 representatives from different faith groups took part in an event in Westminster as part of the Labour Party's "Big Conversation" on 5 February. The event was hosted by Health Secretary, Dr John Reid MP. Discussion focused on how best the Government can work with faith communities to develop policy and build cohesive communities.

Lambeth Palace hosts publication launch

A reception was held by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Rowan Williams, at Lambeth Palace on 4 February. This was linked to the publication of Scriptures in Dialogue which is the record of three days of dialogue between 25 leading Christian and Muslim scholars which took place at the invitation of the Archbishop in Qatar in April 2003. The book is edited by Rev Canon Dr Michael Ipgrave and includes the text of a major lecture on inter faith relations given by the Archbishop at the University of Birmingham shortly after the Qatar event. Priced £12.95, the report is produced by Church House Publishing. For further information, email publishing@c-of-e.org.

First Scottish Inter Faith Youth Conference

The first Scottish Inter Faith Youth Conference was held at St. Mungo's Museum of Religious Life and Art in Glasgow on 4 December. The conference had been planned by a steering group of young people from diverse faith communities and the Scottish Inter Faith Council. Opening the conference were the Convenor of the Scottish Inter Faith Council, Ravinder Kaur Nijjar, Shereen Nanjiani TV presenter for 'Scotland Today' and Deputy Lord Provost of Glasgow, Baillie Christine Divine.

The conference offered workshops, meditation, panel presentations, exhibitions and lots of time for dialogue. The 80 or so young people who attended had a great time exploring 'How young people can contribute to Scotland's future'. The steering committee for the conference consisted of young people from the Buddhist, Baha'i, Christian, Jewish, Muslim, Jain, Hindu, Sikh, Brahma Kumaris and Rastafarian faiths and the experience of working together has helped build bonds of friendship and a commitment to future inter faith projects, demonstrating that unity in diversity is possible between religions.

St Martin-in-the-Fields inter faith reception

An inter faith reception at the House of Lords, in support of a major building project at St Martin-in-the-Fields Church, was held on 28 January. It was hosted by the Anglican Bishop of London, Richard Chartres. The church, adjacent to Trafalgar Square, is one of London's best known and has a long tradition of service to the homeless and disadvantaged. It also has a significant place in the history of inter faith relations in this country, having helped start the multi faith Commonwealth Day Observance and continues to host dialogue events. More details of the project are available at: www.stmartin-in-the-fields.org

Faiths discuss regeneration

On 26 February a conference, "Regenerating Communities Through Faith" was held in Preston. The conference was organised by the Faith Based Regeneration Network UK in conjunction with the Gujarat Hindu Society and the Preston Faith Forum. The conference's aims were to enable local faith-based organisations to network with each other and with policy-makers and to influence and shape policies for faith based regeneration. Further information is available by contacting Dr Doreen Finneron, email: fbrnuk@aol.com.

Inter faith debate on restoring faith in politics

The Christian Socialist Movement and Making Votes Count held a meeting, "Restoring Faith in Politics" at the House of Commons on 23

February. The meeting was chaired by Chris Bryant MP and speakers included Beth Breeze of the Social Market Foundation, Sher Khan from the Muslim Council of Britain, and Jonathan Gorsky of the Council of Christians and Jews. Further information from paul@christiansocialist.org.uk

Pilot Project in Leeds on Local Consultation

As part of the recently completed Home Office review of patterns of engagement between the Government and faith communities in England, a pilot project was commissioned to explore the effectiveness of various mechanisms for consulting faith communities at a local level. Leeds Faith Communities Liaison Forum was invited to take the lead in conducting this pilot consultation, which had as its focus the role which faith groups can play in supporting offenders on their discharge from prison and the views of faith communities on sentencing regimes. It was conducted on behalf of the Forum by a project team based in the School of Theology and Religious Studies at the University of Leeds.

The completed report of the project will shortly be available from the Faith Communities Unit in the Home Office. Copies may be ordered from: Warwick.Hawkins@homeoffice.gsi.gov.uk.

Lord Mayor hosts multi-faith dinner at Mansion House

On 10 February the Lord Mayor of London, Alderman Robert Finch, hosted the bi-annual dinner for the Archbishops and Bishops of the Anglican Communion at Home and Overseas". As on previous occasions, representatives of different faith communities in the UK were also invited to attend.

International Interfaith Centre celebrates 10 years of work

The International Interfaith Centre (IIC) celebrated its 10th Anniversary on 6 December with an Interfaith Afternoon at Oxford Town Hall. The event included the launch of the IIC's Directory of Faith Communities in Oxford, an Interfaith Forum addressing local issues of mutual concern within a framework of international and national agendas, a youth interfaith photography exhibition entitled "Through Another's Eyes", as well as music from local musicians and birthday refreshments. For the full report, see www.interfaith-center.org/anniversary.htm (Oxford Projects pdf file).

Baha'i inter faith panel and reception

The Office of External Affairs of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is sponsored an inter faith panel discussion and reception, on "Reconciling to our Creator by Reconciling to our Neighbour". It was held at the time of the visit of Shayk Ali N'Daw of the International Sufi School. The panel included representatives of the Baha'i faith, Christianity, Islam, and Judaism. The event took place at the National Baha'i Centre in London.

WCRP discuss "Cultures for Peace"

The UK chapter of the World Conference on Religion and Peace held a meeting on "Cultures for Peace" at the London Inter Faith Centre on 12 November. This followed an earlier meeting on the same theme last March. The aim of both meetings was to explore what different religions have to say about peace and how this can be applied to the contemporary situation.

Honours and awards

On 13 October the French Ambassador, on behalf of the President of France, presented Sir Sigmund Sternberg with the Order of the Officier de la Legion d'Honneur. The award was in honour of Sir Sigmund's achievements within the British Jewish community and his inter faith work.

Canon Andrew White has received the annual Sternberg Interfaith Award for his work as the Co-Director of the International Centre of Reconciliation at Coventry Cathedral. The award was presented by Foreign Office Minister of State, Baroness Symons, on 9 November at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

In the New Year's Honours list Sidney Shipton of the Three Faiths Forum received an OBE for services to the Jewish community and inter faith relations; and Rabbi Dr Jonathan Romain received an MBE for services to community relations in Maidenhead.

Dr Indarjit Singh received a second honorary doctorate in February when Leicester University conferred on him the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws.

REGIONAL UPDATE

East of England Faiths Council launched

The East of England Faiths Council (EEFC) was launched at an event at Peterborough Town Hall on 4 December. Guests were welcomed by Gillian Beasley, Chief Executive of Peterborough City Council, who hosted the event. Zia-ul Hussain, a Co-Chair of EEFC and Chair of Peterborough Inter Faith Council then explained how the Council emerged from the East of England Faiths Leadership Conference, before introducing John Battle MP who gave the keynote speech. The EEFC has been set up to raise awareness of faith communities and to build good relations between the faiths of the Region. It relates to the East of England Development Agency and has a "seat" on the Regional Assembly.

The EEFC also launched a regional faiths calendar listing religious festivals of different faiths for the year 2004. This is currently available at the web site: www.eefaithscouncil.org.uk and will soon be made available in a printed form.

Birmingham

On 26 February Birmingham City Council held a Faith Round Table Discussion, "Working Together to Address Issue of Faith and Religion in Building Cohesive Communities in Birmingham". The event was chaired by Wendy Momen of the Baha'i community. Harriet Crabtree, Deputy Director of the Inter Faith Network, gave a presentation on the findings of the Network's recent survey of local inter faith activity in the UK. Further information is available by contacting email: equalities@birmingham.gov.uk.

Calderdale

Calderdale Interfaith Council was officially launched on 3 December at the Town Hall Halifax. The launch was entitled "A Celebration of Faiths in Calderdale". The evening was introduced by the Mayor and guest speakers included, Anglican Bishop of Pontefract Tony Robinson; Venerable Samten Kelsang; and Maulana Chishti. Further information from sail.suleman@calderdale.gov.uk

Derby

Work has begun on the new Multi Faith Centre at the University of Derby. The planning for this project began in 1991, with advice and support from members of the Baha'i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh traditions. On 22 December, 14 local children from these seven faiths gathered at the site of the new Centre to help lay its foundation stone. Further information from Eileen Fry, e. ## Inter faith profile

Sister Margaret Shepherd nds is the Director of the Council of Christian and Jews (CCJ) and is an Executive Committee member of the Inter Faith Network.

How did you first get involved with Jewish Christian dialogue?

I belong to the Sisters of Zion, a Roman Catholic Congregation which has the specific task/charism of fostering good relations between Christians and Jews and reminding the Church of its origins and unique links with Judaism. In 1977 I had the opportunity of studying rabbinics for three years at the Leo Baeck College in London, which trains men and women for the progressive rabbinate. This, for me, was my first in-depth encounter with the Jewish community. I went on to help run the Sisters of Zion Study Centre for Christian Jewish Relations (now known as Sion Centre for Dialogue and Encounter) in Central London and from there joined the Council of Christians and Jews, first as Education Officer and now as Director.

How do you see CCJ's role in the wider context of multi-faith dialogue in the UK?

CCJ has now had 62 years of experience in the unique dialogue between Jews and Christians to offer as an example of "dialogue in depth" and our special gift to the wider encounter and dialogue between all faiths. Additionally, at this point in time - after 9/11 and the war in Iraq - we feel it is particularly important to extend our role in a specifically bilateral way with the Muslim community, so we are supporting and engaging in Christian - Muslim and, likewise, in Jewish - Muslim dialogues. We initiated a special CCJ working party three years ago for those of various faiths involved in inter faith work to explore the concept and value of inter faith dialogue and to support each other in this work. Members of the group have found this helpful and the group has initiated study days for others concerning these matters.

CCJ has an active young people's programme. How do you see this work developing in the future?

The CCJ young people's section, YES! runs a Faithshare programme on university campuses to encourage dialogue and understanding. In the future this work will need to become increasingly localised and grass-roots led, to really capture people's imaginations and encourage them to get involved. The ideal situation would be if no formal dialogue was necessary because schools and society were so good at encouraging encounter of the other and celebration of difference. In reality though I suspect that our work will be needed for many more generations to continue to push these issues and challenge prejudice, racism and anti semitism.

What are your hopes for the future for inter faith work in the UK generally?

I hope that we shall go from strength to strength, becoming ever more a source of mutual encouragement, friendship and support, as we deepen our knowledge of, respect for and trust in each other. I also hope that we can work closely together on matters which concern us all as citizens of the UK and as members of God's family.

Media and a multi faith society

A conference looking at the contribution the media can make to good community relations is being organised by the Media Trust in association with the Inter Faith Network for the UK and respect on 31 March in London. For further information contact Harriet Crabtree at the Network Office for details.

Horsham

A new forum has been established to enable the different faith groups in Horsham in Surrey to talk together and also to help others learn about the faiths. It has been running for about a year and will be meeting at the end of February to formalise its aims. Further information from Richard Boeke, email: r.boeke@virgin.net or Tel 01403 257801.

Leeds

Baha'i, Christian, Hindu, Muslim, and Sikh leaders were invited in January to BHH Synagogue in Leeds to be present at a Shabbat service and bar-mitzvah. The invitation was extended through the Leeds Faith Community Liaison Forum which had arranged last year for representatives of the various faiths to attend the Grand Mosque during Ramadan.

Leicester

A Faiths Regeneration Network was launched in Leicester on 9 December. Nearly 70 faith representatives attended from many traditions and representatives from statutory service providers were also present. The event was chaired by the Archdeacon of Leicester, the Ven. Richard Atkinson. Further information from Riaz Ravat, Regeneration Development Officer, tel 0116 248 7424, riaz.ravat@leccofe.org

Moral Maze

The World Congress of Faiths London Programme held a "Moral Maze" inter faith panel discussion on the theme "Religious Prejudice: A Challenge to Interfaith Relations" on 19 February at the London Inter-Faith Centre.

South London RE discussion

An informal discussion about Religious Education policy took place at the Risaala School Tooting, London on Sunday 25 January. The event was organised by South

London Inter Faith Group. It was chaired by Brian Pearce, Director of the Inter Faith Network, and included contributions from Firdos Qazi, the school's head teacher, and Sarah Thorley, a teacher and RE adviser to Lambeth schools. A debate followed on the issues surrounding the Government's proposals for a national framework for RE and on the teaching of RE in faith schools.

Women's inter faith meeting

The Reform Synagogues Guild held an inter faith meeting called Building Bridges on 25 February at the West London Synagogue to explore how women of different faiths live in the UK today.

Barking

The East London Three Faiths Forum held a meeting at the Barking mosque with the theme "Does Christianity have a future in Britain?". Rev Robert Hampson, Barrister Abdul Rahaman Jaffrey and Rabbi David Hulbert spoke at the meeting.

Barnet

Barnet's Inter Faith Network Steering Group held its first meeting on 11 February. Further information from Chris Henshaw at chris.henshaw@barnet.gov.uk or tel 020 8359 7261.

Brent

The eighth meeting of the "Interfaith Call for World Peace" in the London Borough of Brent was held at the Sri Saddhatisa International Buddhist Centre on 28 December. The event involved Venerable Galayaye Piyaddisi, the head of SSIBC, and participants of other faiths.

Wandsworth

On 28 January the Wandsworth Faith Communities Group held an event on the theme of family life. The group was established in 2002. It is chaired by Council Leader Edward Lister and includes representatives from the Baha'i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Muslim, and Sikh communities. Further information from Amanda McDonnell, tel 020 8871 6182 amcdonnell@wandsworth.gov.uk.

On 23 February, a Wandsworth Multi-Faith Network was launched at Wandsworth Town Hall by the Community Empowerment Fund Network. 60 people attended from many faiths and a steering group was formed to take the work forward. Further information from Catriona Robertson, tel 020 8674 4610.

Westminster

Westminster Faith Exchange an initiative of Westminster City Council brought together young people from seven different faiths who developed an interfaith event called Faith Links. The performance event, featuring music, drama, video clips and readings, took place at the Salvation Army's Regent Hall on Oxford Street, London on 25 February. The event was supported by the Neighbourhood Renewal Unit, the Heritage Lottery Fund and the Alma Royalton Kisch Trust.

Nottingham

Last year Nottingham Inter Faith Council received funding from the Community Learning Chest to set up an exhibition about faiths in Nottingham. It includes professionally produced panels about nine local faiths and the inter faith group itself, and there is a linked leaflet pack about the faiths. The exhibition was displayed in Nottingham Central Library for four weeks in October and November, and is now touring schools and community venues. Further information is available on the Inter Faith Council's web site: www.interfaithnottm.org.uk.

Sheffield

A tree planting took place on 30 November at Abbeyfield Park as part of National Tree Week. It was arranged by South Yorkshire Forest with help and support from Sheffield Interfaith. An inter faith service was held to dedicate the tree and there was a discussion of the significance of trees for different faiths. Baha'i, Buddhist, Hindu, Muslim, Pagan and Quaker participants were involved. Further information about the project is available from lynnrisha@fsmail.net

INTERNATIONAL UPDATE*Most Venerable Vajiragnana Celebrates 75 years

A celebration of Network Executive Committee Member, Most Venerable Dr Vajiragnana's, 75th birthday was held in Colombo, Sri Lanka on 12 February. It was attended by the Prime Minister of Sri Lanka and over 1000 guests. Paul Seto of the Network of Buddhist Organisations (UK) made a presentation on inter faith activities and the many Buddhist communities in the UK.

International conference on Christian-Muslim regeneration initiatives

Faith Regen UK, in association with Philadelphia Cathedral and the Islamic Society of North America, held a conference entitled Building Positive Inclusive Communities through Housing and Regeneration at Philadelphia Cathedral in the USA from 17-19 February. Speakers from the UK included Stephen Timms, Minister for State at the Department of Trade and Industry, Rev Chris Beales, Director of the Employment Forum UK, and Saif Ahmed, Chief Executive of Faith Regen UK. Over a hundred delegates discussed the role faith communities can play in regeneration and social and economic development and heard accounts from a number of case studies from both the UK and USA.

Dr Michael Hooker

It is with deep regret that we record the death of Dr Michael Hooker in Brighton on 26 January.

Michael was the driving force behind the Donnington Grove Inter Faith programme for many years and more recently set up the Newton Inter Faith Group, based in Battersea, London. He will be sadly missed.

Inside this issue

Network News	2	On 20 July Connect: Different Faiths Shared Values was published by the Inter Faith Network in association with TimeBank and the National Youth Agency. It is a guide for young people on getting involved in inter faith activity.
National Update	4
Inter Faith Profile	9
Regional Update	13	The guide underlines the reasons why inter faith working is important and offers ideas for projects which can be started and run by young people. There are fifteen case studies from around the UK. A "Good to Talk" section provides guidelines for dialogue and a "Shared Values" section sets out "the Golden Rule" as this is expressed in different faith traditions. The guide also includes a resources section.
Diary Dates	15

Connect: Different Faiths Shared Values

Work on the guide has been a major aspect of the work of the Network office over recent months. The overall project was managed by Bhupinder Singh. The guide was written by Harriet Crabtree and Bhupinder Singh with the assistance of an advisory group of young people from different faiths and staff from the partner organisations. Network Executive Committee members and member bodies contributed their comments on successive drafts.

The guide is being distributed through youth organisations, educational bodies and faith communities. Copies are also

Barcelona Parliament of the World's Religions

The Council for a Parliament of the World's Religions held its 2004 Parliament in Barcelona, Spain from 7-13 July. Entitled, Pathways to Peace: the Wisdom of Listening, the Power of Commitment, the conference attracted nearly 7,000 people from all over the world representing many different faiths and beliefs.

The event was held in association with the City of Barcelona, and formed part of the six month long Universal Forum of Cultures being held there. Participants at the conference included many members of faith communities and inter faith organisations from the UK. A delegation of young people from the UK and other countries attended on behalf of Minorities of Europe.

There were over 400 programmes ranging from lectures, panel discussions and film documentaries to symposia dealing with topics such as inter faith education and the future of religion, the role of the media and the concerns of different communities.

The Parliament was preceded from 5-7 July by an Assembly of religious leaders, key inter faith activists and young people at the Benedictine Monastery at Montserrat, north east of Barcelona.

Single copies are available free of charge from the Network office by sending an A5 sized addressed envelope with 35 pence postage. The guide can also be downloaded free from the Network's web site: www.interfaith.org.uk

Network membership passes 100

The Network's Annual General Meeting, held on 28 June, accepted into membership the following organisations: Alif-Aleph UK; Burnley Building Bridges; Canterbury and District Inter Faith Action; the Centre for Jewish-Christian Relations; Lancashire Council of Faiths; Medway Inter Faith Action; Northampton Inter Faith Forum; North Kirklees Inter Faith Council; North Staffordshire Forum of Faiths; and the Oldham Inter Faith Forum. Rochdale Multi Faith Partnership becomes a member body in place of Rochdale Interfaith Action and Gateshead Inter Faith Forum and the Newcastle Council of Faiths become members in place of the Tyne and Wear Racial Equality Council Inter Faith Panel. The Afro-West Indian United Council of Churches, the Calamus Foundation and the Richmond Interfaith Group have ceased to be members as they are no longer active organisations.

Following these changes, the Network now has 105 member organisations.

Changes in Executive Committee membership

At the Network's AGM Rosalind Preston stepped down from the position of Co-Chair, having served her three year term in this post, but remains on the Committee as a Vice-Chair.

Jagjivan Singh was elected to serve alongside Rt Rev Dr Tom Butler as Co-Chair of the Network. Jehangir Sarosh and Om Parkash Sharma were elected as Vice Chairs and Dr Natubhai Shah stepped down following his term as a Vice Chair but remains on the Committee. The following new members were elected to serve as on the Executive Committee for 2004-05: Phil Henry, Regina O'Callaghan, Dr Nawal Prinja, Janet Scott and Ven Pandit Wiloye Wimplajothi.

The following stepped down from the Committee and were very warmly thanked for their service on the Executive: Saraswati Dave; Simon Reynolds; Shaunaka Rishi das; Paul Seto; Most Ven Dr Medagama Vajiragnana; and Gillian Wood. Dr Vajiragnana had served as a committee member since the Network was founded in 1987.

National inter faith organisations meet

The annual meeting of the Network's national inter faith organisation member bodies was held in London on 22 April. Each of the organisations provided a roundup of their recent activities and future plans and they then discussed the changing context for their work in recent years. Among the issues discussed was that of how to expand membership and increase the level of engagement of people from different faiths in inter faith activity at grassroots level.

Network office intern

Miriam Feldmann from the Orthodox Jewish Community is working at the Network office as an intern for three weeks during the summer. She is currently studying Theology at Cambridge University, where she set up a Muslim-Jewish Women's Dialogue Group, one of the case studies featured in the Connect guide (see page 1).

Network National Meeting: Europe and inter faith relations

The Network's National Meeting was held at Ironmongers' Hall in London on 28 June. The topic was the increasing impact membership of the European Union is having on faith communities and the inter faith agenda in the UK.

The day began with an overview of European institutions from Jackie Gower of the University of Kent's Jean Monnet Centre for Europe. Mike O'Brien MP, Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, then spoke on, "Why Europe Matters" and highlighted the contribution multi faith Britain, with its generally strong inter faith relations, can make to an increasingly diverse Europe. He said "The challenge we face today is to work towards tolerance and mutual respect between faith communities and a basic understanding that people can agree to disagree but still work together." He went on to say, "The Government recognises that working with faith communities is an essential part of our outreach to the whole of British society".

On the European Constitution Mike O'Brien said, "The new EU Constitutional Treaty clearly states that religion remains a matter for member states. It makes clear that the Union respects equally the status of religious and secular organisations. It emphasises, also, the importance of an open and regular dialogue between such organisations and the European Union. The new Treaty reiterates freedom of worship. We believe that it is crucial that the EU respects this freedom."

The morning session continued with an account from Ravinder Kaur Nijjar of the visit of representatives from Scotland's faith communities to Brussels; a presentation from Mohammed Aziz about the European institutions and directives aimed at tackling racism and religious discrimination; and a report from Peter Smith from the Local Government Association on how the LGA has been sharing UK good practice on local authority engagement with inter faith issues with local authorities in other EU member states.

The afternoon session heard from representatives of four organisations which have been actively involved with work in Europe: Jehangir Sarosh of the World Conference of Religions for Peace Europe; Win Burton of the Soul for Europe initiative; Sidney Shipton of the Three Faiths Forum; and Deepak Naik of Minorities of Europe. Delegates then joined small group discussions on five related themes. The meeting was rounded off by a closing presentation from Professor Paul Weller of the University of Derby who reflected on the challenges and possibilities that lie ahead for faith and inter faith bodies in a changing Europe.

A full report of the meeting will be available from the Network office in the autumn.

Faith Communities Consultative Forum

A meeting of the Faith Communities Consultative Forum was held at the National Council for Voluntary Organisations in London on 1 June. Representatives of the Network's member faith community representative bodies considered the Home Office's report, Working Together: Co-operation between Government and Faith Communities and the Government's White Paper setting out its proposals for the new Commission for Equality and Human Rights: Fairness for All: A New Commission for Equality and Human Rights. They also discussed ways to take forward issues related to the report of the House of Lords Select Committee on Religious Offences.

The meeting noted the Home Office consultation document, Strength in Diversity: towards a Community Cohesion and Race Equality Strategy. There was discussion on recent faith community representation on the provisions in the European Constitution relating to religion and to faith communities and of the desirability of setting up a multi-faith media group to look at media issues. The meeting also discussed possible responses to the BBC charter review which runs until the end of 2006 and the Office for Communications (Ofcom) review of public service television broadcasting.

The Media and a Multi Faith Society

The Media Trust, in association with the Inter Faith Network and respect (an initiative of TimeBank and the Prince's Trust), held a conference on the Media and a Multi Faith Society at Regent's College in London on 31 March. The UK has become one of the most religiously diverse countries in Europe and there is, increasingly, a recognition of the importance of shaping a cohesive society in which people of different faiths live together in a spirit of cooperation, mutual respect and understanding. The media have a highly significant contribution to make to this through coverage of religious and of inter faith issues and the conference looked at different aspects of this.

Fiona Mactaggart MP, Parliamentary Under Secretary for Race Equality, Community Policy, and Civil Renewal at the Home Office, in her speech to the delegates, urged faith communities and the media to work together to communicate how the different faiths contribute to creating an integrated multi faith society. The chair of the morning session, Bishop Tom Butler said, "People of different faiths in the UK have much to contribute to our shared national life. As we become an increasingly diverse society it is vital that different groups relate to each other with tolerance and respect. But it is not just a matter of people of different faiths getting on well and working on shared projects - this has to be seen and heard to be done. Media coverage which contributes to greater mutual understanding and which celebrates the positive stories of cooperation has a key role to play in this."

Other speakers at the conference reinforced this theme of co-operation. They included: broadcaster and producer Roger Bolton; Dr Indarjit Singh, Director of the Network of Sikh Organisations; Alex Brummer, City Editor, Daily Mail and contributor, Jewish Chronicle; Hazel Baird, from the Commission for Racial Equality; Simon Cohen, freelance writer and Director of Tolerance Ltd (who also assisted in the planning and organising of the conference); Dr Salah Beltagui, Glasgow Muslim community and Scottish Interfaith Council; Hari Shukla, Chair of the Inter Faith Sub Committee Tyne and Wear Racial Equality Council; Carmel Heaney, Project Manager of Respect; and Nick Carter, Editor of the Leicester Mercury. The afternoon session was chaired by Caroline Diehl, Chief Executive of the Media Trust.

NATIONAL UPDATE

Working Together: Co-operation between Government and Faith Communities

The Home Office launched, on 29 March, Working Together: Co-operation between Government and Faith Communities. This is the report of the Steering Group of the review of the patterns of central government consultation with faith communities and their representation at national events. The Steering Group was chaired by Home Office Minister, Ms Fiona Mactaggart and included representatives of faith communities and Government Departments. The report is available to download from www.homeoffice.gov.uk

Tools for Regeneration

Yvette Cooper MP, the Ministerial Chair of the Inner Cities Religious Council (ICRC) in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister (ODPM), launched Tools for Regeneration: A Holistic Approach for Faith Communities at the Faith Based Regeneration Network UK (FbRN) conference held at the Muslim Cultural Heritage Centre in London on 25 March.

In her keynote address, the Minister highlighted the earlier publication of Faith and Community by the Local Government Association in association with the Inter Faith Network and the ICRC as having signalled to local authorities the importance of engaging with faith communities. She announced a Special Grants Programme for 2004-5 from the ODPM. This will be for voluntary and community groups involving people in delivering renewal and regeneration. The Faith Based Regeneration Network is one of the first recipients of a grant under this programme.

The Tools for Regeneration toolkit includes a step-by-step guide to setting up and managing community organisations and to community development and capacity building in faith based organisations. Copies of the toolkit can be ordered from the FbRN on Tel: 020 8947 6160 or visit their web site: www.fbrn.org.uk.

Cultural Diversity Network seminar on multi-cultural faith programmes

On 8 July, the Cultural Diversity Network held a seminar in Manchester on multi-cultural faith programmes. The seminar was led by the BBC's Religion and Ethics Department and was designed to seek the views of programme makers, contributors and opinion leaders on how broadcasters should be taking forward their coverage of multi-faith stories and issues.

Home Office consultation on community cohesion and race equality strategy

The Home Office published last month a consultative document entitled, Strength in Diversity: Towards a Community Cohesion and Race Equality Strategy. The document provides a framework for a wide ranging consultation exercise that the Home Office is undertaking to inform the development of the community cohesion and race equality strategy which it plans to announce in the autumn. It sets out issues and challenges which need to be addressed and poses a series of questions with which it wants people to engage.

The Home Office is holding a series of consultation events to discuss the document, including workshops and events for public sector audiences and regional events, involving local public services, voluntary and community organisations and members of the public. Faith community representatives are being invited to some of these events. The Home Office is also asking "those in positions of responsibility and leadership" to promote and lead the debate across their networks and organisations.

The consultation document comes with a "toolkit" for organising and facilitating consultation events. The Home Office has also published a separate booklet designed to engage young people in the consultation process. All three of these documents can be downloaded from www.homeoffice.gov.uk.

Government White Paper on the proposed Commission for Equality and Human Rights

A White Paper, Fairness For All: A New Commission for Equality and Human Rights, was published by the Department for Trade and Industry on 12 May, in association with the Department for Constitutional Affairs, the Department for Education and Skills, the Department for Work and Pensions and the Home Office. The White Paper (and the accompanying response form) can be downloaded from www.dti.gov.uk/access/equalitywhitepaper.pdf. The deadline for comment on the White Paper is 6 August.

The White Paper confirms that, in line with the Government's statement to Parliament at the end of October last year, (reported in an earlier issue of Inter Faith Update), the CEHR will be responsible for challenging discrimination across society and for the promotion of human rights. It will also have responsibility for promoting good relations between different communities. It is intended that the CEHR will bring together the work of the existing equality bodies, the Commission for Racial Equality, the Disability Rights Commission, and the Equal Opportunities Commission. It will also take on responsibilities arising from the new legislation (giving effect to the European Directive of December 2003) outlawing work place discrimination on grounds of religion or belief, sexual orientation and age.

The White Paper sets out in detail the proposed functions, powers and governance arrangements for the CEHR and outlines the way in which it will be expected to carry out its duties, in particular in supporting "key customers". It describes the regional arrangements planned for the new body and the way in which it will fit into the patterns of devolution in Scotland and Wales. Its proposals take account of the work of the 'task force' set up to advise the Government, as described in the last issue of Inter Faith Update.

Legislation will be needed to set up the new body and the White Paper says the launch date will not take place before the end of 2006 at the earliest. The Government is setting up a 'transition group' to oversee and manage the process of introducing the new institutional arrangements and the merging of the existing Commissions into the new CEHR

Legislation on incitement to religious hatred

On 7 July the Home Secretary, David Blunkett, announced that the Government intends to introduce legislation into Parliament to create a new offence of incitement to religious hatred "as soon as the legislative opportunity arises". He was speaking at a seminar on Challenges for Race Equality and Community Cohesion in the 21st Century held by the Institute of Public Policy Research. His wide-ranging speech is available to download from www.homeoffice.gov.uk.

Home Office Citizenship Survey

In May the Home Office published a report, Religion in England and Wales: Findings from the 2001 Home Office Citizenship Survey. The Citizenship Survey is carried out every two years in England and Wales. It has a 10,000 nationally representative sample and a 5,000 minority ethnic booster sample. Areas covered by the Survey include volunteering, civic participation, race relations, and faith.

The new report looks at the profile of respondents affiliated to the major faith communities in England and Wales in terms of key demographic factors such as sex, age, educational attainment and employment status. Specifically it seeks to identify the types of people who are likely to have a religious affiliation. It examines the extent to which religion is important to the respondents' self-identity compared to other personal characteristics and looks at the extent to which support from employers is translated into practice, by allowing time to be taken off work for religious festivities and providing prayer facilities at work. The Report is available for downloading at www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/horspubs1.html

English test for ministers of religion

On 22 July the Home Office announced new measures to ensure overseas ministers of religion coming to the UK have the skills needed for ministry in a diverse and cohesive society. The move, that will affect ministers from all faiths, including imams, priests and granthis, means that those entering the UK for the purposes of ministry must have a basic grasp of English (level four of the International English Testing System). It is also proposed to raise the requirement to level six - a competent writer and speaker of English - in two years time. The Home Secretary, David Blunkett said, "We have consulted and listened to faith groups and are encouraged that many faith representatives recognise the need for ministers to speak for the communities they represent and in particular to communicate effectively with the younger generation."

Draft Charities Bill

The Home Office published a draft Charities Bill on 27 May. The proposed changes include broadening the definition of a charity and provide for 11 charitable purposes which include, among others, the advancement of religion; the advancement of citizenship or community development; and the advancement of human rights, conflict resolution or reconciliation. Other proposed changes include new powers for the Charity Commission; new regulations for face-to-face fundraising; and the introduction of a new framework for charities. A Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament has been set up to take written and oral evidence from interested parties and will publish a report on its findings in September.

A meeting for faith community representatives was convened by Hays Macintyre in association with Conference of Religious, on 12 July at Vaughan House in London to discuss the impact on them of the proposals. The main point discussed was the proposed removal of the presumption that religious charities, by definition, are of public benefit. Under the proposals this privilege would be removed for religious organisations and they would be subject to a universal public benefit test in the same way as for other organisations applying for charitable status.

National RE Framework

It is expected that the new national non-statutory framework for Religious Education in England will be published later this summer.

As reported in earlier issues of Inter Faith Update, in October 2003 Charles Clarke, the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, asked the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority to develop such a framework to provide a model for use by Local Education Authorities, SACREs and others. A Steering Group and a Writing Group were formed to help prepare a draft of this. They included representatives of “faith and belief communities” and professional associations for Religious Education, as well as representatives of the QCA and DfES.

In April this year the QCA issued, with the endorsement of the Secretary of State, a draft document as a basis for wider consultation. The draft included material about the purposes of RE, its place in the broader school curriculum, programmes of study for the Foundation Stage, Key Stages 1, 2 and 3 and for 14-19 year olds and also attainment targets. It included a number of references to the importance of dealing with inter faith issues in Religious Education as well as studying different religious traditions. The QCA said that: “The aim is to raise standards and achievements in Religious Education by improving teaching and learning; to support pupils’ spiritual, moral, social and cultural development; and to develop the contribution of Religious Education to inclusion”.

Responses to the consultation were requested by early July and have since then been receiving consideration prior to the publication of the final text of the framework document. Proposed changes to the text were discussed at a meeting of the Steering Group on 9 July.

Community Newswire launched

On 17 June the Home Secretary, David Blunkett, launched the Community Newswire service from the Press Association (PA) in association with the Media Trust. The service aims to expand the media exposure of community and voluntary organisations and will provide a voice to many groups who currently have little contact with the media by delivering their news stories to national and local media. A team of journalists at the Press Association will select and write stories daily from news releases submitted by community organisations. About twenty stories a day will then be made available through the PA newswire and also on PA websites.

Stories and photographs can be submitted through the Community Newswire web site at: www.communitynewswire.org or by contacting Dominic O'Reilly, Community Newswire Manager, by email: communitynewswire@mediatrust.org or Tel: 020 7874 7606.

Community organisations can also seek advice from media professionals through the Media Trust. For more information go to their web site: www.mediatrust.org. The service has been made possible by a Home Office Active Communities Unit grant.

Forum of Muslims and Christians proposed

The Archbishop of Canterbury’s Christian-Muslim initiative published its report on 7 July. The initiative was set up in 2001, under the previous Archbishop, Dr George Carey. It has involved “listening” visits by a small group of Christians and Muslims to Blackburn, Nelson, Bradford, Leicester, London, Birmingham and Oldham. In all they met with over five hundred individuals and organisations in both communities. Many who took part were clear that Christians and Muslims need to develop a new vision for understanding and partnership.

The Bishop of Aston, Rt Rev John Austin, who chaired the group which produced the report, commented: “The people we met were genuinely enthusiastic in their conviction that a national organisation enabling Muslims and Christians to work together was necessary, timely and increasingly urgent. They were glad that the Archbishop of Canterbury had taken this initiative. It is our unanimous recommendation that a Forum of Muslims and Christians be created.”

The next stage of the process is that a group of Muslims and Christians chaired by the Bishop of Bolton, the Rt Rev David Gillett, will work on the implementation of the proposals made in this report.

Faiths unite to campaign against the BNP

Faith organisations joined trades unions, community groups and thousands of individuals to campaign against the British National Party (BNP) in the run up to the local elections on 10 June. In Leeds they formed Leeds Unity Against Racism and Facism as part of a national network of campaign groups. The group met in Millennium Square in Leeds for the launch of Rainbow Ribbons, multi-coloured lapel ribbons symbolising unity between different faith and ethnic communities.

In Manchester a meeting of the City's faith leaders was hosted by the Bishop of Manchester Rt Rev Nigel McCulloch at his home on 3 June, where the Bishop said, "There is one God, one creation, and one human race. Therefore we cannot support any party promoting division and the scapegoating of others."

In Portsmouth Christian, Muslim and Jewish leaders joined MPs and trade unions in issuing a statement against the BNP. It declares: "We jointly call upon the people of Portsmouth and the South East Region not to vote for the British National Party and to decisively reject them at the ballot box".

Security of places of worship

On 18 May the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Rowan Williams, hosted a seminar on issues relating to the security of faith communities. Dr Williams convened the meeting in the wake of conversations with religious leaders deeply concerned by recent incidents which had left members of their communities feeling under threat.

The seminar, 'Looking after each other: the security of our faith communities', at Lambeth Palace brought together some 30 representatives from a range of faith communities, agencies and organisations in England. Participants explored the challenges they faced and ways in which they could work together to increase a shared sense of security among all communities.

Attacks on places of worship continue to be a major source of concern for faith communities (see the earlier report in Issue 24 of Inter Faith Update). Synagogues in South Tottenham and Hendon in North London suffered extensive attacks in late June and graffiti saying "BNP" was daubed on Birmingham's Central Mosque in a racist attack in late May.

Daniel Pearl Dialogue for Muslim-Jewish Understanding

On 23 June Baroness Uddin, Lord Carey and Lord Haskel hosted the launch of the Daniel Pearl Dialogue for Muslim-Jewish Understanding at the Moses Room in the House of Lords. The dialogue has been set up by Dr Akbar Ahmed and Dr Judea Pearl, the father of Daniel Pearl, the American Journalist murdered in Iraq. The launch was held in association with Q News magazine.

Alif-Aleph launch manifesto

On 24 June, Mike O'Brien MP, Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs hosted the launch of Alif-Aleph UK's manifesto for promoting understanding between British Muslims and Jews, at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Co-Chairs of the joint Jewish-Muslim organisation, Richard Stone, chairman of the Jewish Council for Racial Equality and Maqsood Ahmad, Director of Diversity for the National Probation Service also addressed the audience of over 200 people.

UNICEF Inter Faith Action

UNICEF, the United Nations Children's Fund, is launching a national inter faith appeal seeking the help of faith communities and inter faith groups to raise funds for its work. The national appeal follows a successful appeal in Birmingham last year where faith leaders joined together to launch an appeal to help the children of Iraq. That appeal was a joint call for peace to

Inter faith profile

John Battle is MP for Leeds West and the Prime Minister's "Envoy to the Faith Communities"

How does your personal faith inform your work?

Faith is not just a private matter. It should be engaged with the public realm at every level. I don't accept a split between the personal and political. The core of my faith commitment, as a Roman Catholic Christian, is a commitment to the inclusion of the poor and to social justice. This belief informs my politics at local, national and international levels.

What has your role as "faith envoy" involved?

I was appointed to this role in 2000 and my job is to talk with all the different faith communities in Britain at all levels to see what can be done to draw the best from them so as to find solutions to the challenges we face, rather than dismissing these communities or blaming them as the cause of problems. We are trying to establish a new, fruitful and dynamic relationship between a state that listens and takes faith communities seriously, and faith communities which are able to be true to their role and to challenge and nudge the state to do more. We are trying to see if we can get real partnership between faith communities and government.

What do you see as the contribution faith communities can make to British society?

To understand how significant the value of the faith communities' contribution is to society, imagine if they were to completely withdraw their commitment to social provision. I believe whole communities would collapse.

Faith communities have much to contribute. They are often located alongside people in poorer neighbourhoods and so they are present in all our communities. If the faith communities combine their energies they could make an even larger impact on the future development of the community.

How did you first become aware of inter faith activity here in the UK?

From my experience in my own neighbourhood in Leeds, where we have people of every major faith tradition in the UK. We have a history of over 30 years of working together, 30 years of cooperating and 30 years of struggling together.

What are your hopes for the future of inter faith work in the UK?

I think that faith communities will provide the challenge to the developing culture of fear, helping all people in society develop a renewed sense of hope in each other. Inter faith initiatives that bring people of different faiths together to engage with each other and to cooperate on issues of mutual concern will play an increasingly important role at every level.

I hope that young people will become increasingly involved in inter faith bridge building. I very much welcome resources like the Network's excellent new guide, Connect: Different Faiths Shared Values, which can help them do this.

Holocaust Memorial Day Local Activities Pack

The theme for Holocaust Memorial Day 2005 is "Survivors, Liberators and Rebuilding Lives". The national ceremony will be held on 27 January 2005 in London. It marks the 60th anniversary of the liberation of the concentration camps.

A local activities pack is being developed to help those wanting to organise events. The pack will be available from September on the web site: www.holocaustmemorialday.gov.uk or it can be obtained by telephoning: 0870 240 1180.

It is with deep regret that we record the deaths of Ivy Gutridge and Rabbi Dr Albert Friedlander.

Ivy Gutridge

Ivy Gutridge passed away in Wolverhampton on 19 June, aged 81, after many years of illness. Ivy was a Methodist Christian who played a key role in widening awareness in this country of the importance of inter faith work. She was a pioneer in local inter faith activity in the UK and worked tirelessly for the Wolverhampton Inter Faith Group as its Secretary for over twenty years. She was awarded an MBE for her work in 1994.

Ivy served as a member of the Network's Executive Committee from its founding in 1987 and served as a Vice-Chair from 1992 until 1997 when she stood down from the Committee due to ill health. In his words for her obituary, Brian Pearce said "The Inter Faith Network owes a particular debt of gratitude to Ivy. She lives on through the inter faith work across the country of which she was a vital inspiration". Her life and work were remembered with gratitude at the Network's National Meeting on 28 June.

Rabbi Dr Albert Friedlander

Rabbi Dr Albert Friedlander passed away on 8 July in London. He was a key leader of Reform Judaism in the UK and the first Joint President of the Council of Christians and Jews from the Progressive Jewish movement. He was Dean of the Leo Baeck College in London and Rabbi Emeritus of the Westminster Synagogue.

Big Listen

The Big Listen takes place from 25 to 31 October. It is part of a campaign sponsored by BT to raise awareness and ensure that the UK is listening to young people's voices. It will be raising money for Childline, the children's free advice helpline. There are a number of ways that faith communities and inter faith groups can get involved with the campaign, such as arranging talks or events on the theme of listening or helping to raise money for the charity. For more information see the web site: www.biglisten.co.uk or contact Deb Ain Tel: 020 7462 7634 or email: deb.ain@cc-plc.com.

Religious dress and religious freedom

The International Association for Religious Freedom (British Chapter) held a seminar on 14 April at University College, Chester examining issues surrounding dress code and religious freedom, as a response to the recent French legislation on religious clothing. The main speaker was Rev Jopie Boeke, a Council member of IARF and President of the International Association of Liberal Women.

On 15 June the High Court ruled that Shabina Begum, a fifteen year old pupil at Denbigh High School in Luton, could not attend school wearing a jilbab, a full length Islamic style gown. The school's uniform policy, which was framed after consultation with local communities, includes provision for the wearing of the hijab headcovering and salvaar kameez.

Honours for inter faith activists

The Queen's Birthday Honours list published in June included honours related to inter faith work for the following: an OBE for Sara Joseph for services to inter faith dialogue and women's rights; an OBE for Rabbi Dr David Goldberg for services to inter faith relations; and an MBE to Jalal Uddin, a long standing member of the Birmingham Council of Faiths, for services to community relations in the West Midlands.

Jewish-Muslim relations post

On 21 April the Chief Rabbi's Office announced the creation of a new portfolio in the Chief Rabbi's Cabinet covering Jewish-Muslim relations. Rabbi Naftali Brawer of Northwood Synagogue will take the post. Chief Rabbi Dr Jonathan Sacks said, "This appointment marks the priority we give to good Jewish-Muslim relations. We value the importance of the relationship and believe it is the task of religious leaders to show a lead in this area."

Dalai Lama's Scotland visit

Members of the Glasgow Forum of Faiths met with His Holiness the Dalai Lama in a meeting at the Scottish Exhibition and Conference Centre on 30 May. His Holiness spoke of the importance of inter faith work and the need to recognise that there were good and bad people in all religions, indeed in all walks of life and that no religion had a monopoly on goodness.

The Edinburgh Inter Faith Group helped to organise the Dalai Lama's trip to Edinburgh and assisted in organising his visit to the Scottish Parliament on 2 June. He then went on to Dunfermline on 3 June where had meetings with religious leaders of Scotland and with hundreds of school children.

Three Faiths Forum meeting with MCB

A joint meeting of the Three Faiths Forum and the Muslim Council of Britain was held on 19 April at the St Ethelburga's Centre for Peace and Reconciliation in London. The meeting was aimed at cementing relations between the communities and encouraging a stand against islamophobia and anti-semitism.

On 11 June Three Faiths Forum members met with an Egyptian delegation led by Mufti Professor Ali Gomaa Mohamed Abdel Wahab, and Professor Gaafar Abdel Salam, of the Islamic Universities League to discuss how Islam was taught in schools and to consider the employment situation of Muslims in the UK. On 12 May Forum members met with a delegation from Iran led by Mahmood Mohammadi Araqi, President of the Islamic Culture and Relations Organisation.

Religious Tolerance in Britain

Religious Tolerance in Britain was the theme of a one day conference held on 20 April at the Museum in Docklands. The Conference was organised by the East London Mosque and London Muslim Centre and sponsored by the London Borough of Tower Hamlets and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Muslim-Jewish football programme

The Maimonides Foundation held their annual Muslim-Jewish football programme on Sundays from 4-18 July at Arsenal's Highbury football stadium. Over 100 children aged 9-12 from 20 different groups took part, training together and playing in mixed faith teams. Mehri Niknam, Executive Director of the Foundation, said, "The aim of the tournament is to encourage the children to play as a member of a mixed faith team and to take back their positive experiences to their other friends"

Women's Inter Faith Meeting

On 11 March forty five women from many different faiths gathered at the House of Commons. The main aim of the meeting, organised by the Women's Interfaith Network, was to promote the formation of local inter faith discussion groups for women, initially in the London area. Some of the women present were already involved with inter faith work and described how this was managed in their own areas. For further information see: www.wominet.co.uk

Religion and belief training

Diversiton, the training wing of the Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum, launched a CD-Rom based training package in May. The company was set up by the Forum last year to develop training resources for employers in the run up to the introduction of the Employment Regulations (Religion and Belief) December 2003. The resources were developed in association with representatives of different faith communities and with funding from the Department of Trade and Industry. The company also offers training courses in cities around the UK and in-house training for larger employers. The web site www.diversiton.com, includes freely accessible resources on religion and belief issues including festival dates and good practice checklists. More information about ordering the products or training is available on the web site or by calling 028 4175 4777.

Directory of Hindu Temples

The National Council of Hindu Temples (UK) has compiled a directory which contains information on 141 Hindu temples in the UK. The highest concentration of temples is in London where there are 32. The Directory was launched on 17 July at Shree Sanatan temple in Leicester. Copies are available from the National Council of Hindu Temples for £10.00. Contact Tel: 01923 856269 or email: bimal.krsna.bcs@pamho.net

Course for Muslim Chaplains

Markfield Institute for Higher Education, a subsidiary of the Islamic Foundation, has introduced a course for the training of Muslim chaplains, to meet the growing need for Muslim chaplains in further education, the health service, prisons and the police and armed forces. The theoretical part of the course includes introductions to chaplaincy work and to the different fields where chaplains work and Islamic perspectives on common issues and also a module on inter faith relations. The practical part of the course involves a placement practice in a hospital, prison or in higher education.

Anglo-Sikh Heritage Trail launched

On 2 July, Home Office Minister, Fiona Mactaggart MP, launched the Anglo-Sikh Heritage Trail at an event held at the Royal Hospital, Chelsea. The Trail celebrates Anglo-Sikh heritage by helping to build links between institutions and communities. The Trail is a project of the Maharajah Duleep Singh Centenary Trust and has been supported by a number of organisations including English Heritage. Harbinder Singh Rana of the Trust said, "Despite Sikhs' high visibility, what remains unknown about the community is the long and remarkable history which connects Sikhs to Britain". Information about the Trail can be found at the web site: www.asht.info.

New Director at IIC

Sarita Cargas has been appointed Director of the International Interfaith Centre at Oxford following the retirement of Sandy Bharat in March. Sandy was one of the IIC's longest serving officers and helped to make the Centre a hub of the world-wide inter faith movement. Jael Bharat also left the IIC in March. Working on behalf of IIC he developed several local inter faith activities in Oxford.

WCF Younghusband Lecture

On 5 May William Dalrymple gave the annual Younghusband lecture of the World Congress of Faiths at the Liberal Jewish Synagogue in London. He spoke about his journey through the Middle East in 1994 and the changes that have taken place since then in particular to the Christianity Orthodox communities.

People on the move

Rev Canon Dr Michael Igrave is to be the new Archdeacon of Southwark. Michael is currently the Secretary to the Churches' Commission on Inter Faith Relations. Neville Nagler, Director General of the Board of Deputies has announced that he is to retire from the Board in the autumn. Both Michael and Neville will remain as Network Executive Committee members. Paul Seto of the Network of Buddhist Organisations, is moving to Australia and will be working with Buddhist organisations there. Gillian Wood has retired from the Free Churches Council and the RE Council for England and Wales.

Cardinal Bea Memorial Lecture

The Sion Centre for Dialogue and Encounter hosted the Cardinal Bea Memorial Lecture on 12 May in London. Peter Stanford and Rabbi Tony Bayfield explored the significance of Pope John Paul II's contribution to Catholic-Jewish relations.

Focolare conference

The Focolare Movement held a day conference at Westminster Central Hall in London on 19 June. The Movement, which has Christian roots, works for unity in all spheres of life and brings together people from different faiths and those of no formal faith who share the aim of building a more united world. The founder of the movement, Chiara Lubich, gave a presentation entitled “What future for a multi-ethnic, multi-cultural, multi-faith society?”. She explained how the Focolare Movement has built bonds of fraternity with groups from other faiths such as Buddhists of the Rissho Kosei-kai and the American Muslim Society.

Other panel members at the event included Baroness Kathleen Richardson, Dr Zaki Badawi and Bhai Mohinder Singh. Chiara Lubich’s full speech is available at the web site: www.folocare.org.uk.

Young Commonwealth

The Commonwealth Secretariat hosted the 2004 Youth Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (CHOGM) on 9 March at Marlborough House, London. 100 young people aged between 14 and 24 from different Commonwealth countries role played being Commonwealth diplomats for the day. They were joined by Julian Robert Hunte, President of the United Nations General Assembly and Don McKinnon, Secretary-General of the Commonwealth.

Spiritual Elders meet Emerging Visionaries

The United Religions Initiative UK is organising a series of meetings to promote relationships and the exploring of values between the generations, bringing together young people and experienced religious practitioners for the opportunity to have conversations spanning faiths and generations. The series follows a successful launch event held at the Houses of Parliament in London in 2003. Meetings are planned for Manchester, Newcastle and London (see back page for dates). Contact URI UK for more details, Tel: 01768 777 671 or email info@uri.org.uk

Regional Update

Leicester “embraces the present and plans the future”

A report, “Embracing the Present and Planning the Future”, celebrating the social contribution made by the faith communities to the life of Leicester, was launched at the Shree Prajapati Association in Leicester on 2 July. The research for the report, undertaken by Riaz Ravat for the Leicester Faiths Regeneration Project, found that over 240 groups across 14 faiths operate social projects in Leicester. This is over half of all faith groups in the city. Among the speakers at the launch were Rt Rev Tim Stevens, Bishop of Leicester and Resham Singh Sandhu, Chair of Leicester Council of Faiths. The research was sponsored by the Anglican Diocese of Leicester, Leicester Council of Faiths and Voluntary Action Leicester. The report is available from the Leicester Faiths Regeneration project, c/o Diocese of Leicester, St Martin’s East, Leicester LE1 5FX, priced £4.99. Further information from Riaz.Ravat@LecCofE.org

Establishing a faith forum for Sussex

Over 60 representatives of different faiths and religions are being drawn into work to establish a faith forum which is being set up in Sussex. The initiative is being promoted by East and West County Councils together with Brighton and Hove City Council. An initial conference was held at Falmer on 18 March and the input from that conference is now being used to help the future development of the Forum. One aim of the Forum will be to attempt to draw together work in 15 Local Authority areas – the county councils, city council and the district and boroughs – to improve contact with faith communities and to allow their voices to be heard. For further information contact ianpchisnall@aol.com or Joanna.Hill@eastsussex.gov.uk.

London

Brent

Over 100 people gathered in Brent Town Hall for the official launch of the Brent Multi Faith Forum on 4 May. At the launch Rev Steve Nolan presented the findings of a research project into barriers to participation and highlighted the fact that Brent's faith communities employ nearly 30 staff supported by over 180 volunteers for community activities but only 11% of these projects are publicly funded. Aisha Khan, Chair of the Multi Faith Forum, outlined plans for future work of the Forum. The Forum is also seeking representation on the Local Strategic Partnership, Partners for Brent.

Croydon

A Faith Audit of North West Croydon was launched by Croydon Council on 16 July at the North West Croydon regeneration conference. The audit, carried out by Penny Smith, found that there were 136 worshipping groups in North West Croydon using 84 places of worship and numerous other venues such as community halls. She also found that there were 146 community activities being carried out by these groups, most of them, voluntary activities open to people of all faiths.

Hampstead

The Hampstead Inter Faith Group held a meeting featuring many of the speakers who have spoken to the group over the last ten years. The event marked the retirement of Eva Tucker who has held group meetings in her home since 1995. She presented a short report on the ten years of the group and was warmly thanked by the many who came.

Harrow

Harrow Inter Faith Council held the Harrow Inter Faith Festival at various venues in Harrow between 27 June and 4 July. A linked exhibition of Faith in Harrow, including projects by Harrow school children, was displayed all week at the Harrow Museum and Heritage Centre. The festival closed with an open air event at St George's Shopping Centre on 4 July.

Westminster

Westminster Faith Exchange held Faith Links, a youth event, on 25 February at the Salvation Army's Regent Hall on Oxford Street, London. The event featured young people from seven different faiths performing poetry, song, dance from each of their own faith traditions to portray the circle of life from birth, coming of age, marriage and death and the afterlife. The evening culminated in a joint finale. The group hopes to organise further events in the future.

Peterborough

Members of the Peterborough Inter-Faith Council were invited by the youth group at the Husaini Islamic Centre, a Shi'a Muslim Centre in Peterborough, to attend a film about the Prophet and a talk and dinner on the occasion of the Anniversary of the Prophet Mohammed (pbuh) on 5 May.

Salford

The Inter Faith Network for the UK

The Inter Faith Network was founded in 1987. It works with its member bodies to promote good relations between the faith communities in the UK, to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make the UK a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions where all can practise their faith with integrity. The Network:

- Provides information on faith communities and on inter faith affairs
- Advises on multi faith projects and inter faith issues
- Publishes materials to aid work in the religious and inter faith sectors
- Fosters inter faith co-operation on social issues
- Holds regular meetings where social and religious questions of concern to the different faith communities can be examined together

Community cohesion action guide launched

Practical advice to local authorities on how they can build communities which value people's differences was launched on 2 November by the Local Government Association at a Home Office Community Cohesion: Action and Learning Summit in London. Produced in partnership with the Audit Commission, Commission for Racial Equality, Home Office, Improvement and Development Agency, Inter Faith Network, and the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, Community Cohesion – An Action Guide provides local councils with up to date advice on how to develop cohesive communities.

The guidance aims to help local authorities build on work already being done to tackle community cohesion issues. It covers issues including working with black and ethnic minority communities; faith communities; older people; and children and young people. The guide also explores how community cohesion can be integrated into the delivery of all services, and offers advice on dealing with conflicts that arise. It includes numerous case studies highlighting examples of good practice from local councils and helpful signposts to further information.

Included in the guide is a chapter on working with faith communities which highlights the important role faith communities and inter faith bodies can play in increasing community cohesion. Case studies about inter faith projects appear both in this chapter and in other sections dealing with such topics as education and culture and sport. The guide can be downloaded from www.lga.gov.uk/documents/publication/communitycohesionguide.pdf

New legislation on religious discrimination

Following the European Directive adopted in 2000 and the subsequent Westminster legislation which came into effect in December 2003 (as reported in Inter Faith Update Issue 24) discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief in employment and vocational training is now unlawful.

At the Labour Party Conference in September the Prime Minister announced that the Government now intends to legislate further on religious discrimination. The Home Office issued an accompanying press release announcing the intention to end discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief in the provision of goods, facilities, services and premises.

NETWORK NEWS

Thank you, Bhupinder

Bhupinder Singh, sadly for the Network, left in mid October to help run his family's hotel business. He has been with us for over six years and brought considerable gifts to the Network's work. We would like to take this opportunity to put on record the gratitude of office colleagues and Trustees for all he has done for the Network, including editing the Network's newsletter.

Supporting the Network

In the last year, the Network has faced an increasing challenge in raising the money necessary to continue its work. As readers may know, the Network is supported by a mixture of Trust grants, Government funding, structured faith community support, membership fees and the kind donations of individuals. We are currently working hard to secure the funding necessary for next year and beyond. If you are not already a donor and would like to support the work of the Network in building good inter faith relations in the UK, you may like to make use of the donation form enclosed with this issue.

Network publishes new directory of inter faith organisations

Over 200 organisations are now working to promote good inter faith relations at UK-wide, national, regional and local level. The Network has published a directory which gives contact details for these bodies and includes brief descriptions of their work.

This new publication is a significant new resource for all those engaged in the work of developing mutual respect and understanding between the faith communities of the UK.

Inter Faith Organisations in the UK: A Directory is £6.50 (inc. £1.55 postage and handling).

To order a copy of the directory, please send a cheque for this amount, payable to The Inter Faith Network, to: Ms Gaylina Nguyen, The Inter Faith Network, 8A Lower Grosvenor Place, London SW1W 0EN.

The Inter Faith Network

The Inter Faith Network was founded in 1987. It works with its member bodies to promote good relations between the faith communities in the UK, to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make the UK a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions where all can practise their faith with integrity. The Network:

- provides information on faith communities and on inter faith matters
- advises on multi faith projects and inter faith issues
- publishes materials to aid work in the religious and inter faith sectors
- fosters inter faith co-operation on social issues
- holds regular meetings where social and religious questions of concern to the different faith communities can be examined together
- links 105 member organisations including: representative bodies from the different faith communities; national and local inter faith organisations; and educational and academic bodies.

Inter Faith Update

Inter Faith Update is the newsletter of the Inter Faith Network for the UK. It keeps a wide range of organisations and individuals interested in developing good inter faith relations in the UK in touch with UK events and projects with a significant inter faith component.

Please send any items and diary dates for consideration for inclusion in the next issue by 30 January 2005 to: The Newsletter Editor, Inter Faith Network, 8A Lower Grosvenor Place, London SW1W 0EN or email to harriet.crabtree@interfaith.org marking your email 'newsletter'.

NATIONAL UPDATE

Launch of national framework for Religious Education in England

The first non-statutory national framework for Religious Education in England was launched at an event in London on 28 October. Speaking at the launch, Charles Clarke, Secretary of State for Education and Skills, said “Religious education can transform pupils’ assessment of themselves and others, and their understanding of the wider world. I see it as vital in widening inclusion, understanding diversity and promoting tolerance... I support the development of materials that can be used with the framework... Faith groups must seize this opportunity to develop their own resources that enhance understanding of their faith, and their response to world issues...”

Earlier issues of Inter Faith Update have reported on progress with the preparation of the framework, which has been developed by the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority, in partnership with the Department for Education and Skills, representatives of faith and belief organisations, and RE professional groups, over a consultation period lasting some 18 months. The framework is non-statutory because the responsibility for determining an RE syllabus rests with the relevant local education authority, assisted by a syllabus conference which draws on the membership of the local Standing Advisory Committee on Religious Education (SACRE).

The document sets out the national expectations for teaching and learning in RE to ensure that all pupils benefit from consistently high quality RE teaching. It provides guidance on how RE can be taught, so that pupils not only learn about religion, but learn from it. It sets out ways that pupils can develop their knowledge, understanding and skills and suggests the levels of attainment that they should achieve.

The framework emphasises the contribution which RE can make to promoting an awareness among pupils of religious diversity and makes specific mention of the need to explore inter faith issues. At the launch Ken Boston, Chief Executive of QCA, said “[This framework] has an essential contribution to make to the inclusion agenda, particularly in prompting respect and sensitivity to the beliefs and values of others. [It] highlights the importance of RE in combating prejudice and discrimination. A fundamental purpose of the framework is to develop themes of respect and inclusion... The framework promotes awareness of how inter faith co-operation can support the pursuit of the common good.”

Copies of the framework document can be ordered from QCA Publications, PO Box 29, Norwich, NR3 1GN (Tel: 08700 606015) or can be downloaded at www.qca.org.uk/re/.

The statement by the Home Office said that the provisions in the new legislation would ban direct discrimination where a person, on grounds of religion or belief, is treated less favourably than another; indirect discrimination where a provision, criterion or practice has the effect of putting people of a particular religious belief at a disadvantage which cannot be justified; and victimisation where someone is treated less favourably than others because, for example, they have complained of discrimination or have assisted someone else in a complaint. There are plans for some exemptions, for example, to allow faith-based schools to continue to discriminate in favour of that faith in selection policy; to allow faith-based charities to discriminate in favour of that faith in the provision of services on the grounds of religion or belief; and to permit action required to safeguard national security.

There is speculation that provisions along these lines will now be included in legislation to set up the new Commission for Equality and Human Rights, and that this will be introduced in the new Parliamentary session. Whether this is the case will become clear from the Queen’s Speech at the opening of the new Parliamentary session on 23 November, which will outline the Government’s legislative programme for this.

The new Commission for Equality and Human Rights

The Government has been considering the responses which it has received to its White Paper Fairness for All: A New Commission for Equality and Human Rights, published in May (on which see the last issue of Inter Faith Update) and there have been further consultations over the last two months. The Commission for Racial Equality has expressed its opposition to the proposals in the White Paper and it is widely expected that, while the new Commission will carry responsibility for dealing with issues of religion and belief from the outset, the merger of the existing Commissions (the CRE, the Equal Opportunities Commission and the Disability Rights Commission) will be a phased process. However, the Government has yet to publish its plans in the light of the responses it has received to Fairness for All.

Incitement to religious hatred

In early July (see the last issue of Inter Faith Update) the Home Secretary, David Blunkett, announced that the Government intended to introduce legislation into Parliament to create a new offence of incitement to religious hatred "as soon as the legislative opportunity arises". The Home Office has recently been conducting detailed consultations on the proposed legislation and it is widely anticipated that the Government will also introduce this in the new session of Parliament beginning at the end of November.

Focus on Religion

Focus on Religion, published by the Office of National Statistics on 11 October, draws on the 2001 Census data and other Government surveys to give detailed profiles of the different faith groups in the UK. It charts the distribution of members of different faiths, for example noting that 56% of the Jewish population and 52% of the Hindu population in Great Britain lived in London and 31% of the Sikh community in the West Midlands at the time of the Census. People in the North East and North West were most likely to describe themselves as Christians, with London having the lowest number of people self-defining as Christian (58%).

Focus on Religion looks also at other aspects of life. For example, it shows that the Muslim population is the youngest of the faith community populations, with 34% under 16 years of age. It also has the highest unemployment rate (14% compared to 4% for Christians). In Northern Ireland, Catholic men have a 9% unemployment rate compared to 5% for Protestant men. The link between faith and ethnicity is explored, with Buddhism emerging as the most ethnically diverse faith community (White, 38%; Chinese, 25%; Asian, 10%; Mixed ethnic background, 3%; Black, 1%; Other, 24%). Sikhs emerge as most likely to be from an Indian ethnic background and also as the Asian background faith community population most likely to have been born in the UK (56%). The report also looks at such issues as family life, with, for example, Hindus and Sikhs emerging as the least likely to be separated, divorced or remarried. The full report can be downloaded from www.statistics.gov.uk/focuson/religion.

Speakers at the Action and Learning Summit included Fiona Mactaggart, Home Office Minister for Race Equality, Community Policy and Civil Renewal; Cllr David Rogers, Chair of the LGA's Community Well-being Board; and Alan Riddell, Director of Operations of the Neighbourhood Renewal Unit of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. The Summit had a particular focus on the Community Cohesion Pathfinder Programme. Further information about this can be found at www.communitycohesion.gov.uk.

Charities Bill

As reported in issue 25 of Inter Faith Update, the Home Office published a draft Charities Bill in May. A Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament was set up to take written and oral evidence from interested parties and it published a report on its findings on 30 September.

Of particular concern to many religious bodies has been the proposed removal of the presumption that religious charities are, by definition, 'of public benefit'. Under the Government's proposals this presumption would be removed for religious organisations and they would be subject to a universal public benefit test which would apply to all charities. However, according to the Joint Parliamentary Committee's report on the Bill, the Home Office and the Charity Commission have now agreed that the criteria for assessing public benefit should be decided on a case by case basis with different standards for different charitable purposes. Religious charities will only have to demonstrate that their work is for the benefit of the public, or for a sufficient section of it.

There have also been concerns among some faith communities about the way that 'religion' is defined in the Bill. The Joint Committee recommends that the Bill include a definition of 'religion' which would allow 'non-deity and multi-deity' groups to satisfy the definition of 'religion' for charitable purposes. It also wants to see added to the existing list of charitable purposes 'the promotion of religious harmony, racial harmony, and equality and diversity'.

Gambling Bill passes second reading

On 1 November, the Gambling Bill received its second reading in the House of Commons. It proposes, among other things, that the opening of regional "super-casinos" be allowed. The bill was passed with a government majority of 74. During the debate, the Culture Secretary, Tessa Jowell, accepted that passions were running high and said she would give every consideration to suggestions intended genuinely to improve the Bill. The proposals will now be scrutinised by a committee of MPs.

A number of concerns had been expressed in the run up to the vote by faith bodies and others who are concerned that some of the measures may lead to a spread in the problem of gambling among vulnerable people. The Methodist Church, for example, working with the Salvation Army and other Churches, while welcoming parts of the Bill which offer greater protections for children and young people, expressed deep concern that these protections will, in its view, be wholly undermined by the proposals massively to increase the availability of the harder or more addictive forms of gambling. See the briefing material in the "What's New" section on www.methodist.org.uk/

A copy of the Bill and further information is available at:

Disability Discrimination Act (DDA)

From 1 October 2004, disabled people have new rights of access of goods, services, facilities and premises. The Disability Discrimination Act (DDA) gives disabled people rights in the way they receive goods, services or facilities.

Businesses and organisations, such as shops, restaurants, leisure centres, are defined in the Act as 'service providers'.

'Service providers' also include places of worship, so churches, synagogues, gurdwaras, mandirs, mosques and viharas now need, like other service providers, to take 'reasonable' steps to tackle physical features that act as a barrier to disabled people to access services. This will vary from case to case but may mean removing, altering or providing a reasonable means of avoiding, physical features of a building which make access impossible or unreasonably difficult for disabled people. Examples include:

- putting in a ramp to replace steps
- providing larger, well defined signs for people with a visual impairment
- improving access to toilet or washing facilities

Even before 1 October, service providers have needed to change the way they deliver their services if they are difficult for disabled people to use. Since 2 December 1996 it has been against the law for service providers to treat people less favourably because of their disability. Since 1 October 1999 service providers have had to make "reasonable adjustments" for disabled people, such as giving extra help or changing the way they provide their services. The new Act, which came into force this month, adds to these earlier provisions.

The Disability Rights Commission has produced a new Code of Practice for service providers about the DDA. It will be taken into account by the courts where relevant and it guides disabled people and service providers on how reasonable adjustments should be made. It is available on the Disability Rights Commission website at: www.drc-gb.org

Media and a Multi-Faith Society

The Media Trust, in association with the Inter Faith Network and respect (an initiative of TimeBank and the Prince's Trust), held a conference on "The Media and a Multi Faith Society" at Regent's College in London on 31 March (see Issue 25) The report on this conference is now available from the Media Trust: maureenb@mediatrust.org.

Following a suggestion made at the conference, discussions have begun, under the auspices of the Churches' Media Council and the Inter Faith Network, to discuss the formation of an inter faith media group.

New Multi-Faith Centre at Derby opens its doors

On 11 September the Multi-Faith Centre at the University of Derby opened its doors to the communities of Derby and the surrounding areas with an event to mark the completion of the new building. This was attended by over 400 people.

The Centre provides space for the University's ecumenical chaplaincy and the local faith advisers to the University. There are three rooms where events, open to all, will take place to promote both inter faith dialogue and an understanding of the different faith traditions. As well as the three main rooms there is a Reading Room and a Meditation Room which contains a series of steps ascending towards a narrowing point and lit by tiny blue lights at the side. It is a place for personal prayer, meditation and quiet reflection open to the University staff and students and the local community.

To find out more about the Centre and the events please contact the Centre office on 01332 591285 or email mfc@derby.ac.uk or visit the website www.multifaithnet.org

Moves on inter faith front

Revd Canon Dr Michael Ipgrave moved, at the end of October, from his post as Inter Faith Relations Adviser to the Archbishops' Council of the Church of England and from the additional post for which he was seconded, Secretary to the Churches Commission for Inter Faith Relations of Churches Together in Britain and Ireland (CCIFR). He moves to become Archdeacon of Southwark in the Anglican Diocese of Southwark. Revd Guy Wilkinson will be the acting Inter Faiths Relations Adviser to the Archbishops Council of the Church of England for the coming period. The CCIFR role will be shared, on an interim basis, by Revd Dr Elizabeth Harris and Revd Peter Colwell.

Sikhs celebrate 400th anniversary of first reading of the Guru Granth Sahib

On 26 September, the Prince of Wales joined 5,000 Sikhs at an event organised by the Network of Sikh Organisations at London's Royal Albert Hall to mark the 400th anniversary of the first reading of the Guru Granth Sahib Verses. Among other speakers were Chief Rabbi Dr Jonathan Sacks; the Bishop of London, the Rt Rev and Rt Hon Richard Chartres; the Director of the Network of Sikh Organisations, Dr Indarjit Singh; the Chair of the Commission for Racial Equality, Trevor Phillips; the Leader of the Conservative Party, Rt Hon Michael Howard MP; and Simon Hughes MP of the Liberal Democrats. The Prime Minister sent a video message as the event coincided with the Labour Party conference. The programme included shabads (verses) from local Sikh musicians as well as a performance by the Dya Singh Group from Australia.

On 15 October, The Queen and Prince Philip visited the Sri Guru Singh Sabha in London. It was her first visit to a gurdwara in London. While at the gurdwara, she visited an exhibition marking the 400th anniversary of the Guru Granth Sahib.

Diwali celebrations

A drizzly evening did not deter a large crowd from gathering in Trafalgar Square, London, on 7 November to celebrate Diwali. The event was organised by the Diwali in London Committee. It was launched by the Mayor of London, Ken Livingstone, and the Indian Minister of Tourism, Renuka Chowdhury. Other speakers included representatives of the Sikh community and of the Inter Faith Network. The crowd enjoyed music played by a Gujarati bagpipe band and other singers and entertainers.

A Diwali event is also planned for the evening of 10 November, organised by the Hindu Forum of Britain, in the Members' Dining Room in the House of Commons, which will be transformed with traditional Hindu decorations. There are due to be speakers at the event from all the main political parties.

These events in London form part of a wide ranging pattern of Diwali celebrations across the UK, many of which have guests invited from other faith communities.

Scottish inter faith seminar for women

In August the Scottish Inter Faith Council hosted a seminar for women of nine different faith traditions from across Scotland: "Faith, Family and the Future". It took place at the St Mungo Museum of Religious Life and Art in Glasgow and was opened with an address from the Lord Provost of Glasgow and a welcome from the Convener of the Scottish Inter Faith Council. The day included inter faith discussion groups, workshops, story telling and banner making.

Meeting of religious leaders in Scotland

The religious leaders of Scotland came together on 6 September for their twice yearly meeting. They supported the idea of St Andrew's Day being made a national holiday and also endorsed a plan that the last week of November be a national inter faith week in Scotland. They met with the Scottish Inter Faith Council Youth Steering Group and agreed to lead a workshop for this at the close of Inter Faith Week. The leaders also agreed to visit one another's places of worship during this week.

Health on the Agenda

Faith Regen UK and the National Health Service University held a conference on 23 September to raise awareness of the role of faith communities within health care, with presentations from speakers from the Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh communities. Anil Bhanot, General Secretary of Hindu Council UK, was among the speakers and, noting particular health concerns of members of his community, said "We are all aware of these problems but what is needed is an education campaign just targeted for the Asian population." Further information from Jennifer Ballinger jennifer@faithregen.org

Jewish community discusses inter faith work

On 8 September the Board of Deputies of British Jews joined with Jewish leaders and around 20 organisations involved in inter faith activity at a national or local level to discuss how better to coordinate and inform each other about the range and variety of inter faith initiatives in which the Jewish community is involved.

Three Faiths Forum in Wales

On 11 October an inaugural meeting was held in Cardiff of the Three Faiths Forum in Wales/Fforwm y Tair Ffydd yng Nghymru. It was held in association with the Welsh Centre for International Affairs and chaired by Lord Elis-Thomas, Presiding Officer of the National Assembly of Wales. Speakers included Rev Dr Marcus Braybrooke, Imam Mohamed Ovaisi and Sidney Shipton, Coordinator of the Three Faiths Forum.

New youth inter faith project with global focus

The Diversity and Dialogue Project is an inter faith project working with young people in the UK and inviting them to look outward beyond their own communities. Through its workshops and practical projects it will be encouraging them to learn about global issues and work together constructively for a better world. The project began in September and will run for two years. It is funded by the Department for International Development and led by Save the Children working in partnership with a range of humanitarian organisations. Project workers are based in Leeds, London, and Manchester. For information about its programme or to become involved, contact Becky Hatch at r.hatch@savethechildren.org.uk

One World Week

17–24 October was One World Week. Around the UK, many groups and organisations held events in their local area to raise awareness about injustice, poverty and degradation here and around the world and ways to end such problems; and to celebrate the good aspects of being part of one diverse yet interconnected world.

One World Week (OWW) is supported and sponsored by the members of the Churches World Development Network but people of many faiths take part in OWW events, often through their local inter faith groups. For example, as part of this year's One World Week, an inter faith service was organised by Canterbury and District Inter Faith Action in a former Dominican priory; Sheffield Interfaith held a multi-faith service at the Quaker Meeting House; and Hounslow Friends of Faith held a conference at the Civic Centre.

The Keighley Inter Faith Group worked with Peace Direct on a OWW linked event: 'Moves to bring peace to the UK – Lucknow Dialogues'. Jagdish Gandhi from Lucknow's City Montessori School and colleagues from Lucknow spoke. CMS was heavily involved in calming tensions that arose between Muslims and Hindus as a consequence of the Ayodhya Mosque in 1992. The experience of organisations working for good inter faith relations in Keighley/the UK and in Lucknow/India and their role in peace building was discussed at the meeting. 'Lucknow Dialogues' were also held in Bradford, London, Loughborough, Newcastle, and Slough.

Building Bridges Interfaith Community Project worked on series of OWW events, including a display celebrating the diversity of Pendle which included stories of local people, their background and how they came to be a 'Pendle Person'. This was launched with an event in Christ Church, Nelson on 18 October in partnership with Pendle Borough Council before touring during the week to Brierfield, Colne and Barnoldswick.

One World Week is a development education programme, established in 1978, currently under the auspices of the World Development Movement Trust. Further information about it can be found at: www.oneworldweek.org/ Peace Direct was founded in 2002 to promote nonviolence by: directly supporting groups in conflict areas, by linking them with UK groups and developing a strategic grants programme; and raising the profile of non-violent conflict resolution among the public – to show how peaceful solutions can work, do work and where they work. Further information about Peace Direct and the Lucknow dialogues can be found at www.peacedirect.org

National Mosque Open Day

The second UK National Mosque Open Day, organised by UK Islamic Mission, took place on 3 October. The aim was to build bridges between different ethnic and faith communities. Further information at www.ukim.org. Mosques across the country opened their doors to the public and civic visits took place in a number of cities. For example, Lord Mayor of Newcastle, Councillor George Douglas and the Leader of Newcastle City Council, Councillor Peter Arnold visited the Bilal Jamia Mosque on Elswick Road to find out more about the mosque and its role in the community.

60:10 Joint visit of Muslims and Jews to Auschwitz and Bosnia planned

The Diverse Trust is planning a joint trip by a group of Jews and Muslims to Auschwitz and Bosnia next year as part of a project to promote mutual understanding. This is part of the 60–10 project, the name of which highlights the fact that it is 60 years since the liberation of the death camps and 10 years since the massacre of Muslims in Bosnia.

Fiyaz Mughal, one of the Trust's officers, said: "One of the key reasons for starting this project was to try to get both communities to understand the real social and cultural commonalities between them. In today's world, it is essential that we promote this common understanding and learn that if anti-Semitism and Islamophobia are allowed to continue the lessons of Auschwitz and Srebrenica will never have been learned." The journey is, however, only possible if full funding is found for it by early next year. Further information from the Diverse Trust, admin@diversetrust.org or see www.diversetrust.org.

Rabbi Tony Bayfield becomes a CCJ joint President

In October, Rabbi Tony Bayfield, the Executive Director of the Reform Synagogues of Great Britain, became a joint President of the Council of Christians and Jews in succession to the late Rabbi Albert Friedlander, who was the first Progressive Jewish leader to be appointed to this post.

Centre for Jewish-Christian Relations

The Centre for Jewish-Christian Relations, Cambridge, has recently won a grant for a research programme which will look at the interaction between Jewish and Christian biblical commentators in the formative period of both religions. Evidence of an exegetical encounter will be presented in the form of a traditional rabbinic Bible, known as Mikra'ot G'dolot (Great Bible). This presents the biblical text, surrounded by Aramaic translations and numerous rabbinic commentators. The Exegetical Encounter between Jews and Christians in Late Antiquity will follow a similar format, presenting commentaries both from early Christian and rabbinic commentators on a verse-by-verse basis, beginning with the book of Genesis. For this, two post-doctoral researchers (in Patristics and Rabbinics respectively) will examine the interpretations of Genesis in the formative period of both religions – the first six centuries CE. In showing the influence of the Christian and Jewish traditions upon each other across the centuries, the project will contribute to promoting inter faith understanding.

faithandfood.com

A new website, www.faithandfood.com, was launched during British Food Fortnight on 20 September 2004, with an inter faith lunch in the Jubilee Room at the House of Commons, provided by Govinda's Pure Vegetarian Restaurant. Keith Vaz MP and Tolerance Ltd (owners of faithandfood.com) played host to members of a number of the major faiths in the UK, including Sheikh Dr Zaki Badawi, Rabbi Lionel Blue, Dr Atul Shah and Dr Indarjit Singh, as well as key figures in the food industry.

Alexia Robinson, organiser of British Food Fortnight, said: "Food is a great vehicle for understanding different cultures and religions. So much of our knowledge of different peoples comes from food. Few of us have travelled to China or India yet a Chinese or Indian take-away is part of our lives. It is fitting that religious leaders have chosen British Food Fortnight, which takes place during this country's traditional harvest festival celebrations, as a time to discuss food as a means of achieving greater understanding between the faiths."

Faithandfood.com is about both education and inter faith eating. The website's faithandfood Fact Files are designed to educate the public about the dietary practices and beliefs of the UK's diverse faith communities. The directory of registered food outlets shows people of different faiths where they can eat in London. Further information from Simon Cohen at simon@tolerancelimited.com.

9/11

A number of events took place in different parts of the UK around the time of the anniversary of the terrorist attacks of 11 September. For example, Bolton Interfaith Council hosted a discussion on 14 September on the issue of terrorism. The discussion was led by Dr Mahmood Chandia, the Executive Director of Lancashire Council of Mosques, who stressed that "terrorism has no religion" and has no place in Islam. He also talked about how the British National Party is distorting passages taken from Islamic scripture.

In London, the Maimonides Foundation, in association with Third World Solidarity, hosted a seminar at the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea Town Hall on 9 September. The speakers included political figures as well as members of the three Abrahamic faiths, on "The Imperative for Dialogue after 9/11". The seminar was attended by delegates from inter faith and faith bodies as well as grass roots members and religious leaders of the Abrahamic faiths and representatives of Middle Eastern and American embassies.

In Cambridge, the Cambridge Inter-Faith Group arranged a visit on 11 September to the local mosque to build up fellowship with the Muslim community of Cambridge.

Jain and Christian leaders bless charity cyclists

Rt Revd Richard Chartres, Bishop of London, and Her Holiness Acharya Chandanaji of Veerayatan of the Jain tradition participated in a joint ceremony of blessing at St Paul's Cathedral for 125 cyclists, including 80 children, who set off on 21 July for a fund raising ride to Paris. The ride was organised by Veerayatan and Cycling for Children (c4c) and raised over £100,000 for children's charities.

Week of Prayer for World Peace

The Week of Prayer for World Peace took place from 17–24 October. On 17 October a service was held at Westminster Abbey to mark the thirtieth anniversary of the inauguration of the Week of Prayer for World Peace. The preacher was the Revd Dr Marcus Braybrooke, President of the World Congress of Faiths. The Abbey's Peace Flame was lit throughout the Week of Prayer. Later in the week a gathering to pray for peace took place at Gurdwara Sri Guru Singh Sabha, Southall, London. This was linked to the celebration of the 400th anniversary of the first opening of the Guru Granth Sahib.

Northern Ireland Diversiton Project

Diversiton, the training wing of the Northern Ireland Inter-Faith Forum, has recently published a Religion and Belief training package including information and training materials on religion and belief issues for employers and individuals. Further information is available from www.diversiton.com

INTER FAITH PROFILE

Deepa Mashru is a member of the Hindu community. She is 17 years old and lives in Leicester.

You were part of a group of young people from Leicester who went to the World Parliament of Religions in Barcelona this summer. Tell us about the experience.

It was a great privilege to attend the World Parliament of Religions in Barcelona which met in July. Hajar, Anu, Milli, Georg, Maryem, Preet, Sumaiya, Rumena and myself, Deepa, were nine students from Leicester chosen and sponsored to attend a conference which attracted over seven thousand people.

We went with Radio Leicester's "BBC Youth Extra" inter faith youth broadcasting group. Armed with minidisks, notepads and our BBC passes we met, interviewed and challenged some of the world's top religious leaders! Often the encounters were completely by chance; my random meeting with a Wiccan over breakfast one morning was as unexpected as Georg sheltering with renowned theologian Hans Kung in the rain.

Did it change your views of the importance of inter faith dialogue?

The event highlighted the need for inter faith dialogue in an increasingly diverse world, especially between young people. Barcelona was a great start. People weren't afraid of differences between faiths, and realised the benefits of breaking down religious barriers and working together to solve major world issues, such as international debt and religiously motivated violence.

What have you done since you returned?

We returned enthused, inspired and eager to share our unique experiences with others. On 11 October, a Civic Reception was held at the Town Hall in our honour and we made a presentation to the Lord Mayor of Leicester, Councillors and other distinguished guests. It seemed natural to continue what had begun in Spain by setting up an 'inter faith youth group', the first of its kind in Leicester.

What will the Inter Faith Youth Group do?

We hope it will enable young people to express themselves freely and learn about different faiths, while developing their media skills. Our first task is to produce an exhibition and a radio feature which will reflect the World Parliament through the eyes of young journalists of different faiths and motivate others to join us!

What are your hopes for inter faith relations in the UK in the coming years?

Personally, I would like to see young people actively involved in improving relations between the faiths. Whether this happens through dialogue, dance, drama or sport is not as important as people uniting, regardless of what religious background they come from. The World Parliament has definitely inspired us, and I hope that our work will encourage others.

Bedford

On 12 September, Bedford Council of Faiths hosted a showing of the film 'Mistaken Identity' which showed how Sikhs in the USA were victimised after 11 September 2001 and how this prompted a journalist to publicise the Sikh contribution to the USA since the 1880s. A discussion with its producer/director Vinanti Sarkar and Dr Savi Arora, who offered a UK perspective, then took place.

Bristol

The University of West England Chaplaincy in collaboration with the University of Bristol Chaplaincy, United Healthcare Trust – Department of Spiritual Care, and the North Bristol NHS Trust Chaplaincy have recently published an updated version of their booklet Faith in the City. It is a 62 page, pocket-sized directory of places of worship and inter faith bodies, student religious groups and relevant chaplaincy and health bodies. Further information from chaplaincy@uwe.ac.uk

Cambridgeshire

32 young participants of different faiths from across Cambridgeshire (Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh) took part in a young people's faith forum in Cambridge in early October. The Forum, which took its inspiration from the Golden Jubilee Young People's Faith Forum, was organised by Cambridgeshire's RE Adviser, a SACRE member and representatives from the Cambridgeshire Race Equality and Diversity Service. Further information is available from Dr Sarah Smalley at sarah.smalley@cambridgeshire.gov.uk

Elmbridge

About 230 Bahá'ís, Buddhists, Christians, Hindus, Jains, Jews, Muslims, Zoroastrians and others came to the Joyce Grenfell Centre at Claremont School for the inaugural get-together of the Elmbridge Multi-Faith Forum on 17 September. This included cultural performances and food and presentations from the Forum's Chairman Dr Nabil Mustapha and its Secretary, Geoff Morris. The Mayor of Elmbridge, Councillor Martin Schofield, Mr Ian Taylor MP and Mr Philip Hammond MP were welcomed to the event.

Leeds

On 20 October, Leeds Concord Interfaith Fellowship held their annual inter faith peace service at the Friends Meeting House. During the service, different faith communities in Leeds lit candles for peace and justice around the world.

Leicester

Two free 'Discover Leicester Faiths' tours were held at the end of August by Leicester Shire Promotions, in partnership with the Leicester Council of Faiths and the Diocese of Leicester. The open top bus tours were organised as part of Leicester Expo 04 and provided many people with the chance to learn more about the major faiths of the city. The route went past: Bishop Street Methodist Church; Jain Centre Europe; St. Nicholas' Church; Guru Nanak Gurdwara (Holy Bones); National Spiritualist Church; St. Margaret's Church; Leicestershire Brahma Samaj; Shreeji Haveli; Masjid-E-Hussein; Shree Swaminarayan Temple; Masjid Ul-Imam-Il Bukhari; Shri Guru Dashmesh Sahib Gurdwara; and Shree Sanatan Mandir. Experts provided a commentary about the faiths as each of their venues were passed.

Intercultural leadership school seminars in Leicester and Bradford

Leicester held its first Inter Cultural Leadership School (ICLS) seminar at Hothorpe Hall conference centre in late September. The aim was to help build a new generation of leaders for Leicester who can generate mutual respect, peaceful contacts, real understanding and long-term co-operation among those who belong to the different cultures, religions or traditions that make up its community. It was supported by Leicester Council of Faiths, the Islamic Foundation, The Community Relations Initiative, the Anglican Diocese of Leicester, and Community and Economic Development Action (CEDAC). Funding also came from the European Union through funding for the ICLS 'CODE' programme which is setting up seminar programmes in five European cities (Rotterdam, Berlin, Lyons, Leicester and Rome).

The four day seminar was attended by 13 young people between the ages of 18–30 from the Christian, Bahá'í, Muslim and Hindu faiths. During the week there were sessions on the topics of faith, emotional intelligence, leadership skills, conflict resolution and the media. The main facilitators were Geza Tessényi, the ICLS president, supported by Shireen Rizvi from Pakistan.

The ICLS seminar follows earlier Intercultural Leadership School seminars held in Bradford between 2002 and 2004 (the initial pilot series which was funded by Yorkshire Forward and Bradford Vision) and subsequently in other parts of the world such as Indonesia. ICLS is an independent organisation involving people from a number of different countries including the UK. In Bradford a core group of ICLS seminar participants has this year set up the Bradford Society of Intercultural Leadership. It has been negotiating with Yorkshire Forward to extend the programme to West Yorkshire more generally.

For further information about Bradford and West Yorkshire programmes contact Dominic Moghal of Active Faith Communities, Bradford dominicmoghal@activefaiths.org.uk For information on the pattern of ICLS work nationally and in Europe, contact Selina Ullah at S.Ullah@bdct.nhs.uk or Revd Guy Wilkinson at guy@gwilkinson.org.uk

Liverpool

The year 2004 is being celebrated in Liverpool as a year of 'Faith in One City', as part of the build-up for it being European Capital of Culture in 2008. Summer events included workshops on Liverpool's diverse faith community heritage in a cross-section of local secondary schools carried out by Liverpool Community Spirit with Liverpool Hope University. These are feeding into the production of education resources and an exhibition in the Museum of Liverpool Life. The events also included a multi faith evening called "The Hours" at Liverpool's Anglican Cathedral on 9 July, hosted by BBC Radio 3. This was an evening of live performances and debate focusing on the way music is used by world religions to mark the passing of the hours of the day and night. The event was a dual celebration of the cathedral's centenary and Faith in One City 2004.

London

The Maimonides Foundation held a series of events on Sundays during September on 'Dialogue Through Art'. Jewish and Muslim children were invited to visit together the Islamic art exhibition 'Heaven on Earth' at the Hermitage Rooms, Somerset House. During the visit, the pupils learnt about the cultural heritage of Islam and were shown by a calligrapher how to write 'Abraham' and 'Peace' in Hebrew and Aramaic.

London, Greenwich

A major new housing and commercial development is taking shape on the Greenwich peninsula in South London. A visit was paid to this on 27 September by the four Presidents of Churches Together in England: Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Rowan Williams; the Archbishop of Westminster, Cardinal Cormac Murphy O'Connor; the Moderator of the Free Churches Group, Rev David Coffey; and Rev Esme Beswick representing other denominations; and members of local faith communities and Greenwich Council. They went to see the Greenwich Pavilion, a glass and steel building on the end of the peninsula which it is planned to move to South of the Dome to become a place where faith communities can work together, worship and serve the wider community. A multi faith chaplaincy will be at the heart of this cooperative work.

South London Inter Faith Group and Greenwich Multi-Faith Forum held a joint inter faith walk on 3 July. It took place in Plumstead and visited Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Muslim and Sikh places of worship. The aim was for the 70–80 people who took part – including people from each of the places of worship – to learn more about each other's traditions and also to bear witness, walking through the public streets, to the existence of harmony between religious communities. Walkers were joined by the Mayor of Greenwich, Cllr Brian O'Sullivan and his wife Sonja O'Sullivan.

Luton

Luton Council of Faiths held their 8th annual pilgrimage on 9 October. It began from the Guru Nanak gurdwara in Dallow Road and continued by bus to the Hindu mandir in Hereford Road and on to St Luke's, Leagrave High Street. Pilgrims went on by foot through Bury Park to return to the gurdwara.

Middlesbrough

Increasingly, local inter faith initiatives are contacting each other to learn more about each other's work. In June, a group of 35 people of different faiths from Middlesbrough went on a 'learning journey' by coach to meet with faith group leaders in Leicester. They also met the Mayor of Leicester, Councillor Piara Singh Clair, and Councillor Roger Blackmore, Leader of Leicester City Council. Short talks were given by, among others, members of Leicester Council of Faiths, including its Chair, Resham Singh Sandhu, and by Liz Blyth, the Cultural Strategy Manager for Leicester City Council, Haseeb Ahmad, Community Cohesion Officer Leicester City Council and Paul Winstone, Policy Officer for Leicester City Council.

Many of those taking part in the trip were members of the Cleveland Interfaith Group and the group was led by its coordinator, Richard Stainsby. They were especially interested in learning more about how to achieve better understanding and respect between different faiths. In particular, they wanted to see the Leicester Council of Faith's Welcome Centre and to get ideas for a possible centre of a similar kind in Middlesbrough. The visit was organised by the Voluntary Development Agency and paid for by Middlesbrough's Community Network and a number of staff also went on the trip. They were interested to find out from Leicester how they work to achieve 'social regeneration' and 'neighbourhood renewal'.

Manchester

Members of many of the inter faith and multi faith groups in Greater Manchester and surrounding areas came together at St Peter's House, Manchester on 11 October to share news of their activities. Harriet Crabtree of the Inter Faith Network gave a presentation on local inter faith activity in the UK.

Manchester Cathedral has just held the sixth annual International Religious Poetry Competition. Over five hundred poems were submitted by more than two hundred poets from many faiths and nations. The winner was Rebecca Irvine, a Buddhist from Lancaster.

Nelson

Imams and Christian clergy of Nelson came together on a countryside visit to Wycoller Country Park on 21 July to discuss the barriers that ethnic minorities face in accessing the countryside. The event was sponsored by the Building Bridges Interfaith Project and Lancashire Countryside Service.

Oxford

The International Interfaith Centre and the University Church co-sponsored an evening on 3 November with Eliyahu McLean, peace activist from Israel, "Towards healing the faiths of Abraham". The evening began with a torchlit procession.

Suffolk

On 20 October, representatives from the different faiths came together for a 'festival of festivals' to share aspects of their autumn festivals on the theme of 'light'. The festival was organised by Suffolk Inter-Faith Resource and Suffolk College.

DIARY DATES

Television and Radio

Faith and the City. A six part television series from ITV1 Meridian focusing on the six major faiths in the City of Southampton: Hinduism; Judaism; Buddhism; Christianity; Islam; and Sikhism. Involving participants from these faiths and from Southampton Council of Faiths. The programmes run for 6 Sundays at 12 noon from 14 November.

Special 'days' and 'weeks'

21–28 November, Scotland's Inter Faith Week. Events taking place throughout Scotland. For further information Tel: 0141 429 4012.

22–28 November, Islam Awareness Week. IAW was initiated by the Islamic Society of Britain in 1994. This year's theme is 'Your Muslim Neighbour' and the Week seeks to highlight the valuable contributions to society made by Muslims from all walks of life. Information on events happening as part of the week can be found at www.iaw.org.uk

The launch of the Week will take place at Shakespeare's Globe in London and throughout the week special activities will be taking place there. More than twenty speakers will give talks on subjects from Islamic gardens to Abrahamic dialogue. Further information from gerry@shakespearesglobe.com

IAW events will also be taking place in other parts of the UK. Some have an inter faith focus. See under 'Local Events', 23 November, Birmingham.

27 January, Holocaust Memorial Day 2005

Next year's Holocaust Memorial Day falls on 27 January. It coincides with the 60th Anniversary of the liberation of Auschwitz concentration camp and the theme will be 'Survivors, Liberation and Rebuilding Lives'.

Planning is under way for the national HMD event which will take place at Westminster Hall, London, on 27 January in the presence of the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh. Earlier that day, they will host a reception at St James' Palace for survivors of the Holocaust and British veterans who liberated the camps in 1945.

Holocaust Memorial Day stresses the importance of learning and educating each other about different cultures and religions, and accepting and embracing diversity. Antisemitic, Islamophobic and other racist attacks on individuals and groups seen as 'different' are a reminder of where prejudices can lead. HMD is an opportunity to bring together local people from all backgrounds and religions to remember all the victims of the Holocaust, to reflect upon those affected by more recent atrocities and work together to educate about the dangers of antisemitism, racism and all forms of discrimination.

Last year hundreds of councils, schools, churches, synagogues, museums, libraries, youth clubs, community groups and individuals held HMD events. Examples of the kind of events held last year can be found at: www.holocaustmemorialday.gov.uk/events/organizing/pastevents. HMD organisers hope the 2005 theme will inspire similar engagement, particularly among inter faith groups which have as one of their key aims to build mutual understanding and respect between religions. For more information on how to organise a local event please see the HMD local activities pack which is available for download from the HMD website www.holocaustmemorialday.gov.uk or hard copies are available by emailing localactivities@holocaustmemorialday.gov.uk

Commission for Equality and Human Rights and new "equality" reviews

The Government introduced its Equality Bill into the House of Commons on 3 March. In addition to including provisions offering further protection against discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief it also creates a duty on public authorities to promote equality of opportunity between men and women and prohibits sex discrimination in the exercise of public functions. However, the primary purpose of the Bill is to create the legal framework for the new Commission for Equality and Human Rights, following the extensive consultations which the Government has carried out, as reported in past issues of Inter Faith Update. The Bill is due to have a Second Reading in the House of Commons on 5 April.

The Bill provides for the new Commission to bring together the work of the Commission for Racial Equality, the Disability Rights Commission and the Equal Opportunities Commission. The CEHR will also have responsibility for the new equality areas of age, religion and belief, and sexual orientation and will work to promote human rights, therefore bringing together expertise on equality, diversity and human rights issues in one organisation. The present intention is that the new Commission will be established in October 2007 for all areas except those for which the Commission for Racial Equality is responsible. These would transfer to the CEHR by April 2009.

New legislation on religious discrimination

The last issue of Inter Faith Update reported the Government's intention to end discrimination on the grounds of "religion or belief" in the provision of goods, facilities, services and premises, following the legislation already introduced dealing with discrimination on these grounds in employment and vocational training. As was anticipated, the relevant legislative provisions have been included in the Equality Bill, whose primary purpose is to establish the framework for the new Commission for Equality and Human Rights. As reported above, the Bill was introduced into the House of Commons on 3 March and is due to have its Second Reading on 5 April.

NETWORK NEWS

Executive Committee

Rev Daniel Otieno-Ndale, a nominee of the Minority Ethnic Christian Affairs Reference Group of Churches Together in Britain and Ireland, which brings together representatives of the different strands of the ethnic minority Christian presence in Britain, has been coopted as a member of the Network's Executive Committee to fill the place left vacant by Rev Simon Reynolds who stood down at the 2003 AGM.

Rev Guy Wilkinson, currently acting as part time adviser to the Church of England on inter faith matters, has been coopted onto the Committee to fill the place left by Ven Michael Ipgrave, who has now become the Anglican Archdeacon of Southwark, as reported in the last issue of Inter Faith Update.

Staff

Gaylina Nguyen, who has worked part time, while a student, for the Network since Autumn 2002 was appointed in March as full time Finance and Administration Assistant.

NATIONAL UPDATE

The Bill sets out a range of powers for the CEHR to promote equality and tackle discrimination. These include: a new duty to consult with stakeholders to ensure all groups have an opportunity to participate and engage in its work; a new duty to monitor progress on equality, human rights and good relations between communities, through publishing a regular 'state of the nation' report; a new duty to promote good relations between and within communities, across all sections of society (the Commission is required to pay "particular regard" to exercising their responsibilities in this sphere "in relation to communities defined by reference to race, religion or belief"); an explicit role to combat prejudice and to work to reduce crime affecting particular communities, including new powers to monitor hate crimes; and provision for a regional presence across the country, and in Scotland and Wales.

The Inter Faith Network

The Inter Faith Network was founded in 1987. It works with its member bodies to promote good relations between the faith communities in the UK, to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make the UK a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions where all can practise their faith with integrity. The Network:

- provides information on faith communities and on inter faith matters
- advises on multi faith projects and inter faith issues
- publishes materials to aid work in the religious and inter faith sectors
- fosters inter faith co-operation on social issues
- holds regular meetings where social and religious questions of concern to the different faith communities can be examined together
- links 105 member organisations including: representative bodies from the different faith communities; national and local inter faith organisations; and educational and academic bodies.

Inter Faith Update

Inter Faith Update is the newsletter of the Inter Faith Network for the UK. It keeps a wide range of organisations and individuals interested in developing good inter faith relations in the UK in touch with UK events and projects with a significant inter faith component.

Please send any items and diary dates for consideration for inclusion in the next issue by 28 June 2005 to: The Newsletter Editor, Inter Faith Network, 8A Lower Grosvenor Place, London SW1W 0EN or email to harriet.crabtree@interfaith.org marking your email 'newsletter'.

It will also have general powers to publish or disseminate ideas and information, to give advice and guidance, to undertake research, to provide education and training and to publish and disseminate ideas and information. It will have the power to work in partnership with and provide grant aid to others in support of its functions and to work with individuals, communities, businesses and public services. Copies of the Bill (and the explanatory notes) can be found on the Parliamentary website at www.parliament.the-stationery-office.co.uk/pa/pabills.htm.

On 25 February, a few days before publication of its Equality Bill, the Government announced an Equalities Review which will be chaired by Trevor Phillips, the Chair of the Commission for Racial Equality, who will be joined by a panel of experts from the public and private sector social policy arenas. The Review panel is due to start work in March 2005 and to report to the Prime Minister by the Summer of 2006. It will look at barriers to opportunity and will make practical recommendations on key policy priorities for the Government and public sector; employers and trade unions; civic society and the voluntary sector. Its findings will inform the modernisation of equality legislation and the development of the new CEHR.

In the Government's earlier consultations on its equality and discrimination proposals, many respondents argued strongly that a new comprehensive "Single Equality Act" is needed. The Government has announced that in conjunction with the Equalities Review there will be a Discrimination Law Review, led by the Women and Equality Unit of the Department of Trade and Industry, which will consider how Britain's anti-discrimination legislation can be modernised to fit the needs of the 21st Century. This review will benefit from the background and analysis that will be provided by the Equalities Review and it is intended to be the basis for developing a single equality legislative framework that will be fairer to individuals and simpler for employers and service providers.

New legislation on religious discrimination

The provisions would ban:

- direct discrimination where a person, on grounds of religion or belief, is treated less favourably than another;
- indirect discrimination where a requirement, condition or practice has the effect of putting people of a particular religious belief at a disadvantage which cannot be justified; and
- victimisation where someone is treated less favourably than others because, for example, they have complained of discrimination or have assisted someone else in a complaint.

The new measures would make it unlawful to discriminate against people because of their religion or belief or their lack of religion or belief. 'Belief' is defined as 'any religious or philosophical belief'. The courts have previously ruled that a religious belief "must attain a certain level of cogency, seriousness, cohesion and importance, and be worthy of respect in a democratic society and not be incompatible with human dignity". 'Philosophical belief' only includes beliefs which are similar to a religious belief, so the provisions would apply to discrimination against atheists and humanists, but not supporters of a political party or football team.

There are important exemptions for: faith-based schools to allow them to continue to operate a selection policy based on faith; charities and religion and belief organisations (which would, for example, allow faith-based charities to discriminate in favour of that faith in the provision of services on the grounds of religion or belief); and acts safeguarding national security.

It will be of particular interest to inter faith organisations that they are covered by these exemptions in a way which would allow them to restrict their membership to particular religious groups or restrict the range of faiths which are involved in their activities.

The Home Office press release relating specifically to the religious discrimination provisions in the Bill can be found at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/n\_story.asp?item\_id=1249.

Legislation on incitement to religious hatred

As foreshadowed in the last issue of Inter Faith Update, the Government introduced into Parliament at the end of last year legislation to create a new offence of incitement to religious hatred. The relevant provisions, included in the Serious Organised Crime and Police Bill, are along the same lines as those contained in the Anti-Terrorism Bill debated by Parliament in the Autumn of 2001, which were dropped before its enactment following opposition in the House of Lords. The Bill has passed through all its stages in the House of Commons and received a Second Reading in the House of Lords on 14 March. However, in the course of the debate a number of members expressed their opposition or disquiet about the provisions dealing with incitement to religious hatred and it is unclear whether the provision will be agreed at the House of Lords Committee stage, due in April.

The new Bill expands the existing criminal offence of incitement to racial hatred contained in the Public Order Act 1986. The relevant provisions make it an offence knowingly to use words, behaviour or material that is threatening, abusive or insulting with the intention, or likely effect, that hatred will be stirred up against a group of people targeted because of their religious beliefs or lack of religious beliefs. During the progress of the Bill through the House of Commons the name of the expanded offence was changed (through an amendment tabled by the Government in order to clarify the purpose of the provisions) to "Hatred against persons on racial and religious grounds". An amendment to provide for the repeal of the blasphemy law (which did not have the support of the Government) was heavily defeated.

The proposed legislation on incitement to religious hatred has been the focus of widespread public debate over recent months. Some critics have argued that the provisions would impose unacceptable restrictions on freedom of speech and might curtail freedom to engage in missionary activities. Others have suggested that the legislation will arouse excessive expectations of its effect, on the mistaken assumption that it will prevent straightforward vilification or abuse, which it is not designed to do. It has also been suggested that existing provisions under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 provide sufficient protection, but this is disputed by supporters of the legislation.

The Government has made it clear that the purpose of the legislation is to protect groups of people against the consequences of the incitement to religious hatred and that it is not intended to limit the freedom to criticise religious beliefs and practices or to engage in robust argument about these or to tell jokes. Under the legislation the consent of the Attorney General would be required for any prosecution in order to protect against frivolous or vexatious court actions or unintended consequences of this extension of the law.

The Network's Faith Communities Consultative Forum discussed the legislation at its meeting in mid-December and there was general support for it. The Forum is precluded by its terms of reference from issuing any statement of public policy, but a number of faith community members subsequently issued a joint ad hoc statement on 18 January welcoming the proposed legislation. This followed a similar ad hoc statement in April 2004 which had urged the Government to legislate against incitement to hatred on grounds of religious identity.

The January statement pointed to "an unjust and anomalous gap in the present law". The Jewish and Sikh communities are already protected from incitement to hatred under the provisions relating to incitement to racial hatred, while other faith communities are not, by contrast with the position in Northern Ireland where a similar provision extends to all faith communities. The statement argued that the present legal position "leaves the way open for extremists to incite hatred of religious groups not covered by the law at present, setting one group against another, in ways which could significantly undermine the good community relations painstakingly developed by ethnic and faith communities in Britain over recent decades. Where this happens it is not just specific communities who are vulnerable - the bonds of our common society are put under strain..... Stirring up hatred on grounds of religion is as damaging as stirring up racial hatred."

It remains to be seen whether the argument about the relevant provisions in the Bill can be resolved before the widely anticipated dissolution of Parliament prior to a general election.

There is detailed information about the legislation to be found on the Home Office's website at <http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/comrace/faith/crime>.

Watch your language!

It is widely anticipated that a general election will be held shortly. Elections often trigger complaints from members of the public concerned about the content of some electoral addresses and leaflets.

Trevor Phillips, the Chair of the Commission for Racial Equality, has written to a wide range of community-based organisations inviting them to encourage members of the public to report to the police and other public agencies any racially or religiously motivated criminal acts or materials they consider incite hatred. This might include graffiti and slogans in public places or election materials. He suggests that any concerns about the effectiveness of current legislation in this area should also be raised with local MPs and parliamentary candidates. In his letter he says: "Elections should be a time for the fullest debate of the issues faced by the people of Britain. This debate should be informed by fact and directed towards solutions; it should not be an occasion for peddling prejudice and stirring up and exploiting fear and anxiety."

The Commission for Racial Equality would be grateful to receive copies of any controversial election material so that they can raise this with the leaders of the relevant political party. Such material should be sent to the CRE's Senior Parliamentary Officer, Finola Kelly at the Commission for Racial Equality, St Dunstan's House, 201-211 Borough High Street, London SE1 1GZ. Her email address is fkelly@cre.gov.uk.

Improving Opportunity, Strengthening Society

Following its consultation last year on Strength in Diversity: Towards a Community Cohesion and Race Equality Strategy, the Home Office published on 19 January a document entitled Improving Opportunity, Strengthening Society setting out its strategy in the light of that consultation. The main focus of the new document is on the Government's policies and programmes in the field of race equality and community cohesion more generally and it does not address inter faith relations in any detail.

The document does, however, contain two specific policy announcements of particular interest to faith community and inter faith organisations. It announced that the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will be setting up a 'network' of officials from the 50 local authorities whose areas are the most diverse in terms of faith. The 'network' is to be coordinated through Government Regional Offices but the arrangements for it have yet to be worked out in detail.

The document also announced that the Government intends to establish a new £3 million programme to help faith communities, making it clear that this would not be "a programme to promote particular faiths", but "to encourage dialogue and understanding between faith groups and others in the community so that they can work in partnership for the good of all. It will also help build leadership in faith groups in a way that contributes to good race and faith relations." Details of the way this programme will operate are not yet available.

CPS religious crime data published

The number of defendants dealt with by the Crown Prosecution Service for racially motivated crimes rose by 13 per cent last year according to a report published on 17 January. The report also includes figures for religiously aggravated crimes in 2003-04. 49 cases (each of which can have a number of defendants and charges) were finalised. A total of 60 offences were prosecuted, of which 44 were religiously aggravated. The actual or perceived religion of the victim in 22 of the 44 cases was Muslim. In the remaining cases, the victims were Christian (8), Jewish (5), Hindu (3), Sikh (2), Jehovah's Witness (1), and unknown (4). A guilty plea was submitted in 50 per cent of offences with an overall conviction rate of 77 per cent.

The breakdown of religiously aggravated offences mirrors racially aggravated offences. Public order was the predominant offence followed by assault, criminal damage and harassment. The majority of the charges were prosecuted in the magistrates' courts. In magistrates', crown and youth courts the overall conviction rate was 77 per cent on religiously aggravated charges and 86 per cent on all charges.

Holocaust Memorial Day

Holocaust Memorial Day (HMD) took place on 27 January. It coincided with the 60th Anniversary of the liberation of Auschwitz concentration camp and the theme was 'Survivors, Liberation and Rebuilding Lives'. The national HMD event took place in Westminster Hall, London in the presence of the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh. Earlier that day they had hosted a reception at St James's Palace for survivors of the Holocaust and British veterans who liberated the camps in 1945. The ceremony in Westminster Hall brought together over 600 Holocaust survivors living in Britain, as well as British soldiers who helped liberate the Bergen-Belsen death camp. Religious and political leaders also attended. The Queen led survivors in lighting 60 memorial candles and grandchildren of survivors read the names of 3,000 relatives who perished at the hands of the Nazis.

HMD events were held around the UK, including a number with a strong inter faith dimension. Some had a particular Christian-Jewish focus. For example, Birmingham Council of Christians and Jews hosted a meeting at Woodbrooke Quaker Study Centre on 16 January where Dr Hannah Holtschneider, of the Centre for the Study of Jewish-Christian Relations, spoke on Liberation and Rebuilding Lives: Topics for Jewish-Christian Relations. Other events had a multi faith dimension. Political leaders in Wales and religious representatives marked HMD on 26 January in an event also reflecting on the 90th anniversary of the Armenian genocide.

Brighton and Hove City Council in collaboration with the Brighton Inter Faith Contact Group organised a civic event which included key speakers on three main elements: hearing local survivors; teaching the lessons to younger generations; and how the city supports today's 'survivors'. Nottingham Inter Faith Council and the City Council hosted an event at Nottingham Council House. This included, among other contributions, a Statement of Commitment by a member of the Jewish Community and drama performed by Nottingham Youth Theatre. In Lewisham, a multi faith service was held at the Catford Synagogue on Crantock Road when candles were lit in memory of those who died. In Derby an evening of prayers, readings and prose from different faiths took place on 24 January at the Multi-Faith Centre at The University of Derby. This was organised by Derby HMD

Working Group in conjunction with the Forum of Faiths for Derby. Members of all faiths and cultures came together to remember victims of oppression and torture across the world at a short ceremony on 30 January on the steps of Blackburn Town Hall on King William Street in the town centre. This was arranged by Blackburn with Darwen Council and the Interfaith Council for Blackburn with Darwen whose chair, Madhubala Pandya, led the ceremony. Reverend Leslie Olsberg, Minister of Heaton Park Synagogue in Manchester, gave the main address. Following the Mayor's closing address there was a lighting of candles ceremony.

Does free speech have boundaries?

In recent weeks there have been several events which have raised in an acute form the question of how to balance the claims to freedom of speech with the sensitivities of faith communities and others.

Performances of Behzti (which means 'dishonour') written by Gurpreet Kaur Bahtti and depicting scenes of sexual violence in a gurdwara were cancelled in December after violence by a few of those members of the Sikh community demonstrating outside the theatre. There had previously been discussions between representatives of the theatre and of the community about some of its concerns. The community were not seeking to have the play banned but to have changes made to it, including its setting within a gurdwara, in view of the offence which they said would be caused to many Sikhs by this.

Events surrounding the play gave rise to widespread debate about the extent to which artistic freedom should be constrained by regard for the sensitivities of those of particular faiths or cultures in a diverse society. The discussion recognised that there are separate but overlapping issues of where the law should intervene and where restraint should be shown in cases where the law itself will not limit freedom of speech. The Birmingham Faith Leaders' Group (which includes Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh representatives) expressed support for the concerns of the Sikh community and anxiety about "the harm that this play will do within Birmingham and the wider society" and asked for "a higher degree of sensitivity and understanding” from the management of the theatre, particularly given its financial subsidy “by local and national public funds”.

The fact that these issues arise in relation to concerns within both minority and majority communities was demonstrated by the pressure brought to bear (unsuccessfully) against the BBC by many Christian activists seeking the withdrawal from its programme schedules on 8 January of Jerry Springer: The Opera, whose characters include portrayals of God and Jesus which many find offensive.

It has been made clear by the Government that its current legislation on incitement to religious hatred would not cover cases of this kind.

Merger of Home Office's Faith Communities Unit and Community Cohesion Unit

The Home Office set up a separate Faith Communities Unit in the spring of 2003 (as reported in Issue 22 of Inter Faith Update). The Unit has now merged with the Community Cohesion Unit to form the joint Cohesion and Faiths Unit. The Head of the new Unit is Judith Lempriere, who became Head of the Community Cohesion Unit in the summer of 2004. Tony Heal, Deputy Head of the new combined unit, is carrying responsibility for faith issues. Godfrey Stadlen, who was Head of the separate Faith Communities Unit, will have continuing responsibility for a separate project team dealing with the Government's legislation on both incitement to religious hatred and religious discrimination.

New entry restrictions on ministers of religion cause problems

Last summer the Government introduced a new pre-entry English language requirement for overseas ministers of religion coming to the UK so that they have “the skills needed for ministry in a diverse and cohesive society” (as reported in Issue 25 of Inter Faith Update). Both the Hindu and Sikh communities are experiencing difficulties as a result of the restrictions. The Hindu Council for the UK has pointed out that priests (known as pujaris) who work in Hindu temples, while carrying out important functions in relation to ritual and worship, do not preach or have a role in pastoral care and therefore that the language requirement is less relevant in their case. It poses a major problem because Hindu priests are trained in Sanskrit and generally come to this country only from India or Sri Lanka, normally only for one or two years at a time, because most temples rotate their priests. The operation of this system has been made much more difficult by the new legislation. There are no training institutions yet in this country.

The Sikh community have had similar problems with the new restrictions. Granthis also do not traditionally have a pastoral or preaching role. Gurdwaras traditionally have a system of visiting preachers who come to this country for around six months at a time. They may well not have fluent English skills and normally preach in Punjabi. Gurdwaras provide English translations or accompanying literature for those who need these.

These concerns have been taken up with the Home Office which has promised that there will be a review of the impact on faith communities of these restrictions, but this has yet to be initiated.

Religious slaughter of animals

The Government published on 8 March its final response to the Farm Animal Welfare Council (FAWC) report on the Welfare of Farmed Animals at Slaughter or Killing. In its response, the Government rejected a recommendation by the Farm Animal Welfare Council that religious slaughter of animals without prior stunning should be banned. Mr Bradshaw said the Government had maintained its position in not accepting FAWC's recommendation that slaughter without prior stunning should be banned. He said the Government respected the rights of communities in Britain to slaughter animals in accordance with the requirements of their religion.

Religious dress and uniform

On 2 March a Muslim girl from Luton, Shabina Begum, won the right to wear “head-to-toe” dress (jilbab) in the classroom after the court of appeal ruled her school had acted unlawfully in barring her. The school allows girls to wear the hijab, a headscarf, and trousers and tunic, but had refused Ms Begum permission to come to classes in full-length dress. Lord Justice Brooke, Vice-President of the Civil Division of the Court of Appeal, ruled that her school had: unlawfully excluded her; unlawfully denied her the right to manifest her religion; and unlawfully denied her access to suitable and appropriate education. He called on the Department for Education and Skills to give schools more guidance on how to comply with their obligations under the Human Rights Act. The appeal has important implications for schools across the country.

The swastika

The swastika (sanskrit svastika) is a cross with its arms bent at right angles to either the right or left. The symbol has been used by a variety of cultures throughout the ages as a sign of good fortune and stability and is often seen in Hindu architecture and Indian artwork. It connotes well being and blessing. The image of the swastika has, sadly, become associated for decades across much of the world with Nazism. Because of this there were calls, following the wearing of the image at a fancy dress party by Prince Harry earlier this year, from German MEPs for the use of the swastika to be banned in Europe.

On 20 January, the Hindu Council UK called on all MPs and MEPs to oppose this move. Anil Bhanot, general secretary of the Hindu Council, said: “The Hindu Council is asking all MPs and MEPs to influence the European Union to respect the right of religious freedom of a billion people of this globe, by not allowing a general ban on one of the most sacred Hindu symbols. We condemn Nazism, which uses the swastika in an inverted form signifying ignorance, but that does not mean that the true spiritual symbol worshipped by a billion people can be subjected to any legislation of the temporal world, in any form, whatsoever.” In the event, EU legislators decided against the blanket ban proposed and suggested instead that member states tackle the problem individually. At the end of February the UK government said that it did not intend to ban the swastika, because Britain’s current race hate laws were sufficient to prevent its improper use. Holocaust Educational Trust chairman Lord Janner highlighted the difficulty of banning the symbol. “Having been a war crimes investigator in Germany and hating the swastika symbol I would love to have it banned, but it is totally impossible in the UK. Not least because of its perfectly proper use by my Hindu friends.” For further information, see <http://www.hindu counciluk.org/swastika.asp>

National identity cards

The Home Secretary published proposals for legislation on identity cards in April 2004 and the findings of a subsequent consultation exercise were published, together with the Government’s response to the report of the relevant Home Affairs Select Committee of the House of Commons in October 2004. The Identity Cards Bill was introduced on 29 November 2004 and has now passed through all its House of Commons stages.

The Government’s proposed scheme involves a database linked to cards carrying basic information, such as name, address and date of birth, together with biometric information, such as the image of face, iris of the eye or fingerprints. According to the Government, it is not planned that it will have details of religious identity, ethnicity, marital status or health records. Individuals will have subject access rights under the data protection act but strict safeguards will be placed on others who can access the information. A new Executive Agency, which incorporates the functions of the UK Passport Service and works closely with the Home Office Immigration and Nationality Directory, will operate the scheme. The scheme will be overseen by an independent commissioner. Identity cards will be mandatory but there will be no requirement to carry them. The purposes of the scheme are to: tackle illegal working and immigration abuse; to disrupt the use of false and multiple identities by organised criminals and those involved in terrorist activity; to help protect people from identity fraud and theft; to ensure free public services are used only by those entitled to them; and to enable easier and more convenient access to public services.

A faith community consultation consortium was formed in 2004 by the Hindu Forum of Britain specifically to look at aspects of the Government's plans to introduce national identity cards. The consultation was sponsored by Fujitsu. It led to a report, A Response to the Introduction of Identity Cards, which was launched in the Jubilee Room at the House of Commons on 14 March. Speakers included Des Browne, Minister of State for Citizenship, Immigration and Nationality and Stephen Pound MP.

The consultation was carried out in order to explain the details of the scheme to faith communities; to inform the Government of the issues that different groups will face during enrolment and to identify ways by which faith communities can communicate the benefits of identity cards to their constituent congregations. Focus groups met in London, Birmingham, Leicester and Manchester. The concerns expressed by the participants related to: the security of the scheme itself and the information held within it; how to ensure the accuracy of the information recorded; verification methods; the costs of applying for the card and for any replacements; access to enrolment centres; physical contact with biometric sensors such as fingerprint systems; hygiene issues linked to multiple use of equipment during enrolment and verification; issues linked to physical appearance and national dress; and lack of confidence in the police service and other authorities.

Scotland's first 'Inter Faith Week'

The first 'Scottish Inter Faith Week' was held between 20-28 November. The objective was the promotion of dialogue, understanding and cooperation between Scotland's diverse religious communities in order to build a better Scotland for all. Inter Faith Week was supported by the Scottish Executive and Ministers and MSPs attended several events during the week. See page 17 for news of some of the events that took place during the week.

As part of the week, SIFC held a national youth conference on 28 November. This brought 150 young people together from the Baha'i, Brahma Kumaris, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Latter Day Saints, Muslim, and Pagan communities of Scotland to dialogue about inter faith issues, to get to know each other better, to have fun and to interact with other young people not affiliated with any faith. There were workshops with representatives from all the faith communities to discuss service projects throughout Scotland and also to prepare questions for a panel of religious leaders.

Visit to the Scottish Parliament

A group of 23 people took part in the Scottish Inter Faith Council's visit to the Scottish Parliament on 15 December. A total of 23 people, from across Scotland's faith communities attended the tour of the new building. Their guide was Shiona Baird MSP, the Reporter to the Parliament's Equal Opportunities Committee on issues of religion and belief. Afterwards Ms Baird took questions and discussed issues of concern with members of the faith communities. SIFC plan to build on the good relations begun at this visit and hope there are many opportunities for faith communities to engage with Parliament in future.

Diversity and Dialogue North West

The Diversity and Dialogue Project is an inter faith project working with young people in the UK and inviting them to look outward beyond their own communities. It is funded by the Department for International Development and led by Save the Children working in partnership with a range of humanitarian organisations. Project workers are based in Leeds, London, and Manchester. On 11 March, a seminar was held in Manchester at UMIST for people working within faith based organisations, education and the local community. Participants listened to presentations from Oldham LEA and local and community faith groups, shared experiences and talked about some of the problems faced by young people and about the potential for inter faith work with youth groups and schools. A report on the day is planned and a second event is likely. For further information, contact s.dunbar@savethechildren.org.uk

Principles of working together – new CTE guidance on inter faith relations

Churches Together in England (CTE) published, in March, A Statement of operating principles relating to other faith communities. It is described by CTE as seeking to combine respect, integrity and working collaboratively for the common good. It shows how CTE as an ecumenical organisation is committed to function, and though it does not comprise a complete statement of the views of all CTE's 23 member Churches, CTE believes it will be a useful resource for Christian groups working in a multi faith context. The statement draws material from the Churches Commission on Inter Faith Relations' Principles of Inter Faith Dialogue, from Working Together - Cooperation between Government and Faith Communities (Home Office, February 2004) and the Millennium Act of Reflection and Commitment (January 2000). The document can be found at www.churches-together.org.uk.

Faith groups and inter faith bodies respond to Tsunami disaster

The Tsunami disaster which occurred on 26 December was responded to on a wide scale by faith and inter faith organisations in the UK.

Across the UK, special prayers were offered in places of worship. Services of remembrance and memorial events were held in many areas, often with a multi faith dimension and still others are planned. In Wales, the First Minister held a simple ceremony of silence as a mark of respect for the victims and invited members of the Inter Faith Council for Wales to attend. A national memorial service attended by the Queen and Prime Minister for the British victims of the Asian Tsunami will be held at St Paul's Cathedral on 11 May. Prime Minister Tony Blair announced in January that the Queen would attend the ceremony and other senior royals and politicians are expected to attend. Guests will include representatives of communities and faiths with close ties with the countries affected by the disaster, and of the relief agencies involved. As well as remembering the UK victims, the service will also recognise the suffering endured by all the countries affected and the overwhelming humanitarian response.

The World Congress of Faiths arranged an inter faith service on 26 January at Essex Hall, London, hosted by the Unitarian and Free Christian Churches. This was led by WCF Chair, Rabbi Jacqueline Tabick with devotions led by Buddhist, Christian, Hindu and Muslim members. In Glasgow, an inter faith gathering of prayer and reflection in memory of victims was held on 23 January at the University of Glasgow's Bute Hall. The event was supported by the Lord Provost of Glasgow, the Scottish Inter Faith Council and the Glasgow Forum of Faiths and featured speakers from diverse faiths, including Buddhism, Christianity, Hinduism, Humanism, Judaism, Islam, and Sikhism. In Edinburgh, Cardinal Archbishop O'Brien offered a special mass at St Mary's Catholic Cathedral for victims of the disaster. The Moderator of the General Assembly, Dr Allison Elliot and the Episcopal Bishop of Edinburgh, Rt Rev Brian Smith, also participated in the service which was attended by many members and friends of Edinburgh Inter Faith Association.

In Southampton, the Mayor, MPs, and 400 people attended a 'Tsunami Act of Commitment' held at St Mary's Church, City Centre, with involvement from seven faiths affirming their unity and common commitment in the face of disaster. In Harrow, London, a 'multi faith/no-faith' memorial service took place at the Zoroastrian Centre on 22 February, organised by Harrow Interfaith Council. This was followed by a linked community conference on local relief projects and further aid work. Speakers during the service and conference included the Leader of Harrow Council, Cllr Navin Shah; the Deputy Leader, Cllr Sanjay Dighe, and the Chief Executive of Harrow Council, Joyce Markham. A Tsunami Interfaith Commemorative Service was held on 13 February at the House of Meditation, Monastery of Christ the King in Enfield, London with Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh prayers and readings from sacred texts.

A service was held on 3 February at Oxford University's University Church where the Chancellor Rt Hon Lord Patten introduced the service and the Rt Revd Richard Harries, Anglican Bishop of Oxford, was among the speakers. Readings were given by different faith groups and there were musical contributions by the Oxford Gamelan Society, the University Church choir and St Hilda's String Quartet.

Faith linked aid relief agencies, such as CAFOD, Christian Aid, the International Buddhist Relief Organisation, Islamic Relief, Khalsa Aid, Muslim Aid, SEWA International, and World Jewish Aid have moved to assist. Hindu Council UK, worked closely with international agencies such as UNICEF to raise support or encouraged their followers to give through the combined Disasters Emergency Committee, as did other bodies. Many faith and inter faith bodies also led or participated in fundraising drives and relief programmes. There has been coordinated relief work undertaken within some faith communities. Hindu Forum of Britain, for example, organised a disaster task force linking over 50 organisations to launch a media campaign to appeal for funds.

Across the country, individual places of worship swung into action to gather donations and channel these to the affected countries. In Sparkhill Birmingham, for example, with support from Buddhist and Sikh relief organisations, scores of volunteers at the local gurdwara packed and sent donations to Sri Lanka, the Maldives and South India. The London Buddhist Vihara in Chiswick, with a significant Sri Lankan Buddhist congregation, was the focus of an aid effort to assist the Sri Lankan areas devastated by the recent Tsunami. Prince Charles visited the Vihara on 6 January to support the temple's ongoing effort. He commented, "We hear how people's faith may be challenged but, nevertheless, it has also helped in a strange way to reveal the love and compassion that exists in people's hearts."

On 14 January, the Earl and Countess of Wessex, visited Southampton to support the Southampton Inter Faith Council's initiative to raise funds and support for the Tsunami victims. They also visited a local gurdwara and the Vedic Temple to meet with local people who had been helping organise the donated clothing, blankets and provisions. In Northern Ireland, the Laxmi Naryan Temple in Belfast became a fund raising hub, with donations, channelled on through UNICEF, coming in from communities across Ireland.

There were also inter faith fund raising events. In Glasgow, an inter faith Tsunami relief concert took place at the Couper Institute. People of all faiths took part, including young people working together to help people affected by the Tsunami.

Individual faith linked bodies also responded in a variety of ways to the tragedy. The Jewish charity, Tzedek, produced a special educational pack for schools to explore Jewish responses to the disaster.

Natural disasters such as the Tsunami raise difficult religious and philosophical questions and these have been the subject of discussions at a number of inter faith meetings. For example, during the visit of the Earl and Countess of Wessex to Southampton, they visited the Medina Mosque where they took part in a discussion with Christians, Jews and Muslims about how natural disasters are understood within different faiths and how they can work together following them. On 25 February Cambridge Inter Faith Group held an open discussion on the theme 'Faith and Natural Disaster' for participants to listen and share views on how people from different backgrounds deal with disasters like the recent Tsunami. In Bath, on 17 March, the Bath Interfaith Group held an event, 'Reflections after the Tsunami', where, after a period of reflection there was a discussion on faith and response to natural disasters.

Note: The sheer scale of the events and programmes responding to the disaster is so enormous that in this newsletter we have only been able to include illustrative examples.

Consultation paper on 'Spirituality and Spiritual Development in Youth Work'

The National Youth Agency is inviting individuals and organisations to take part in a consultation exercise on the subject of spirituality and spiritual development in youth work. The consultation was introduced at a policy meeting at the Agency in February and will run until the end of July. The Agency has issued a consultation paper, commissioned by the Department for Education and Skills and written by Maxine Green, Spirituality and Spiritual Development in Youth Work. Copies can be requested from Helena Ferrao-Read e-mail: helenafr@nya.org.uk or the document and comment form can be downloaded from the NYA's website: <http://www.nya.org.uk>

UNICEF and Religions for Peace

Religions for Peace is working with UNICEF to highlight their work across the world, providing children with health, education, equality and protection. As part of the project, every inter faith group in the UK is asked to join in helping the world's children throughout 2005. Further information from Brian Walker, Chair, Religions for Peace (UK) at hopeis@btinternet.com

Issues at the heart of Jewish-Christian relations

Sion Centre for Dialogue and Encounter held three linked one day seminars during the Autumn of 2004 on issues at the heart of Christian-Jewish relations, looking at fundamental questions regarding God's covenant with Jews and Christians; the heights and depths of human behaviour in the Shoah (Holocaust); and the role of Jesus from Christian and Jewish perspectives. Speakers included Dr Ed Kessler, Dr John Pawlikowski, Frank Dabba-Smith and Rabbi Mark Solomon.

On 6 December, the Centre for the Study of Jewish-Christian Relations hosted a conference on 'The Place of Covenant in Judaism, Christianity and Jewish-Christian Relations' which brought together Archbishop Rowan Williams, Chief Rabbi Dr Jonathan Sacks and Cardinal Walter Kasper.

Grand Mufti of Bosnia visits Three Faiths Forum

The Grand Mufti of Bosnia, Dr Mustafa Ceric, visited the offices of the Three Faiths Forum during his visit in February to London's Muslim community. The meeting, on 18 February, was hosted by Sir Sigmund Sternberg, one of the Co-founders of the Three Faiths Forum, which promotes dialogue and understanding among the Muslim, Christian and Jewish communities.

Jewish-Muslim lectures at SOAS

In November and December a Jewish-Muslim lecture series took place at the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS) in London arranged by the Maimonides Foundation and Leo Baeck College Centre for Jewish Education, in association with the London Middle Eastern Institute and SOAS. The theme this year was 'The challenge of living with multiple identities'. The specific topic of the series was chosen as relevant to both Jewish and Muslim young people.

The series enabled the audience to explore their national and religious identity without compromising one at the expense of the other.

Speakers included Sarah Joseph, Editor of Emel magazine; Professor Haleh Afshar, University of York; Rabbi Jacqueline Tabick, North West Surrey Synagogue; Dilwar Hussain, Islamic Foundation, Leicester; Rabbi Jonathan Wittenberg, New North London Synagogue; and Imam Monawar Hussain, Eton College. Chairs included Rt Revd Richard Harries, Anglican Bishop of Oxford; Professor Doris Abouseif, SOAS; and Sheikh Dr Zaki Badawi.

Healing through remembering

The Corrymeela Community ran a special one day conference at St Ethelberga's Centre for Reconciliation and Peace on 12 March. It was called 'Healing through Remembering: Dealing with the Past'. It explored issues of peace and reconciliation with particular consideration of the lessons from truth and reconciliation processes around the world. It examined how lessons learned through the reconciliation work in Northern Ireland and South Africa could be applied to reduce current divisions in our society, such as the tension between communities arising from war in Iraq. Speakers included Professor Roy McClelland, Brandon Hamber and Oliver McTernan. That evening there was a concert at St Martin in the Fields, London and the following day a service there, both marking the Corrymeela Community's 40th anniversary.

Chief rabbi's reception for Hindus

Chief Rabbi Dr Jonathan Sacks hosted a reception on 1 March to celebrate the relationship between the UK Jewish and Hindu communities. He told the gathering that Hindus had added "colour, grace and warmth" to British life, and praised their "gentleness and dignity". He said that both communities "seek to honour our traditions while contributing as members of British society. We both cherish our communities, our families and our children. We both think we have something more special than the individualism and consumerism of contemporary culture.....What we have in common unites us and our differences enrich us."

Archbishop Rowan Williams visits Swaminarayan Mandir, Neasden

Dr Rowan Williams, the Archbishop of Canterbury visited the Swaminarayan Mandir, Neasden, the largest traditional Hindu Mandir outside India, on 29 January. He was greeted by A P Patel, Trustee of the Mandir, Sarah Teather MP, Brent East, Kamlesh Sharma, the High Commissioner for India, the Mayor of Brent, Cllr. Ahmed Shahzad and Cllr. Ann John, Leader of Brent Council. As the Archbishop entered the Haveli he was welcomed in the traditional Hindu manner by Sadhu Atmaswarupdas, Head of the Mandir. Dr Williams was formally garlanded in the main prayer hall in the presence of 2000 worshippers. Sadhu Atmaswarupdas in his address spoke of the Hindu tradition of welcoming visitors from all faiths. He went on to say that the message of Hinduism is that the entire world is but one human family. He added "Let us teach our followers that religion does not grow by quantity of numbers, but by quality of spirituality. We want to stress the unity in diversity, that there are more things that unite us than divide".

BBC Faith to Faith

During March BBC Radio 4 ran a series of three programmes produced by Phil Pegum where believers from across a religious divide spent time in each others' communities to discover the reality behind the hype, headlines and prejudice. Faith to Faith brought together Samina, a young British Muslim and Jenny, a Pentecostal Christian from a black majority church, the Church of God of Prophecy. Jenny experienced Ramadan firsthand as she joined Samina in her fast, with no eating or water for 12 hours and prayers five times a day. Jenny also wore the Muslim headscarf, or hijab, for the first time. Samina attended a Pentecostal service and challenged the church over its missionary work in a predominantly Muslim area of Birmingham. Faith to Faith explored what it means to be religious in Britain today as Jenny and Samina recorded their reflections and Religious Correspondent Jane Little asked them both what they had learnt about each other's communities and their own faith. In the second programme in the series, Jagroop Singh, a Sikh, spent time with Hindu Girish Patel and in the third programme, Munisha, a Buddhist and Irene, a Jew met. You can hear the programmes using the BBC's 'Listen Again' option at http://www.bbc.co.uk/religion/programmes/misc/faith\_to\_faith.shtml

Islam Awareness Week

Islam Awareness Week took place last November. The theme was 'Your Muslim Neighbour' and the aim was to highlight the valuable contributions to society made by Muslims from all walks of life. The launch of the Week took place at Shakespeare's Globe in London and throughout the week special activities took place there. More than twenty speakers gave talks on subjects from Islamic gardens to Abrahamic dialogue. As part of the week, the Three Faiths Forum led a discussion on Shakespeare and Islam.

Year of the volunteer

Early in 2004, Chancellor of the Exchequer Gordon Brown designated 2005 as the Year of the Volunteer. The Home Office, as the government department with responsibility for encouraging active citizenship, is working in partnership with Volunteering England (<http://www.volunteeringengland.org.uk/>) and CSV (<http://www.csv.org.uk/>) to coordinate the Year. Its main aims are to: increase the number of volunteers, particularly individuals from marginalised groups and young people; open up more volunteering opportunities in the public and voluntary sector; raise the profile of the work volunteers are doing nationwide; and thank volunteers everywhere for their time and commitment.

All volunteer organisations are encouraged to participate in, and benefit from, the Year of the Volunteer 2005. It offers the chance to increase engagement by providing opportunities for the public to volunteer, and to increase awareness of volunteering in general, and in particular that of participating organisations by branding existing work under the Year of the Volunteer banner. ## INTER FAITH PROFILE

In this issue, we interview Brian Pearce, who has been the Director of the Inter Faith Network since it was set up in 1987.

Q Can you tell me why the Inter Faith Network was founded?

In 1987 there were a number of national inter faith organisations in the UK, such as the long established Council of Christians and Jews, with its local branches, and the World Congress of Faiths, and separate local inter faith initiatives had also begun to emerge in different parts of the country. But there was no structure for linking these various national and local initiatives or for directly engaging the different faith communities of the UK in inter faith work in a structured way. So there was a need for a framework to enable those involved in this activity to share their experience and concerns and to discuss together ways in which inter faith work needed to develop in the future.

Q How did the Network begin?

A two year process of consultation took place to discuss with faith communities and inter faith organisations what kind of structure might be helpful. Following extensive discussions, 60 organisations came together in March 1987 to set up the Inter Faith Network for the UK with the late Rabbi Hugo Gryn and the late Bishop Jim Thompson at the helm as its first Co-Chairs, together with Vice-Chairs Dr Indarjit Singh, Dr Mughram Al-Ghamdi and Mr Om Parkash Sharma. We have been very fortunate throughout the Network's life to have particularly committed Officers and other Trustees to guide and oversee its work.

Q Has the Network helped raise the profile of inter faith work?

Together with its member organisations, the Network has helped to raise public awareness of the importance of working for good inter faith relations. Its own work and publications, and its cooperative work with Government and other public bodies has contributed significantly to this process. I think we crossed a watershed with the work we did through the 'Lambeth Group', advising on the "faith" dimension of the Millennium celebrations and working with the Department for Culture Media and Sport on the Shared Act of Reflection and Commitment by the Faith Communities of the UK in the Houses of Parliament at the beginning of 2000. This focused on values held in common by different faiths and was part of the official Millennium celebrations.

Q The Network links faith community representative bodies; inter faith organisations; local inter faith bodies; and educational and academic bodies. Why has this broad pattern of membership been so important?

Each type of member body has a vital contribution to make to building good inter faith relations in the UK. Faith communities have a key role in developing dialogue between their traditions and in educating their followers to understand their own faith well and to engage with respect with followers of other faiths. National inter faith organisations have dedicated programmes of activities which enable deep dialogue and shared action on particular issues. The establishment of Scottish, Welsh and Northern Irish inter faith bodies has added an important strength. Educational and academic bodies help to increase knowledge of different faiths and to educate for a positive inter faith future. Local inter faith bodies make a direct contribution to the development of grassroots inter faith understanding.

Q In recent years, the Network has worked closely with central and local government on a range of issues. Why do you think this is important?

There has been increasing engagement between Government and faith communities in recent years to ensure that policies and service delivery respond to the different needs and concerns of all its citizens. The Network has contributed in a major way to this process because its member bodies are clear that good inter faith relations can only develop securely where people of different faiths feel they are justly treated as truly equal members of a shared society rooted in common values. The development of the "community cohesion" agenda since the disturbances in northern towns and cities in 2001 and 9/11 later that year (and the events following that) has been of particular importance in this respect.

Q But will Government agendas bump 'real' inter faith work out of the picture?

Work on the public dimension of inter faith relations is 'real' inter faith work. But it must always go hand in hand with the more traditional inter faith work carried out by the Network and its member bodies, including in depth dialogue to achieve greater mutual understanding and to tackle the difficult burdens of past history; multi faith cooperative projects; inter faith education; and special focus work, such as the engagement of young people with inter faith issues.

Q What do you see as the challenges facing the Network in the next few years?

The proposed Commission for Equality and Human Rights is due to begin its work in 2007 and one of its major responsibilities will be in the field of 'good relations'. There is a need to work out what the implications of this will be for inter faith work in the future.

Like most voluntary bodies, the Network faces challenges of staffing and funding. However, its member faith communities have committed themselves to providing structured financial contributions for the Network and we have just received an assurance of sufficient Government funding to ensure that most of the Network's core work over the next two years can be sustained. Some additional funding needs, however, to be found, particularly for key projects, from trusts and other sources.

Q What are the best things about working for the Inter Faith Network?

The wonderful people I meet and work with, the amazing variety of the issues with which we deal and the strong conviction that we are making a genuine contribution to ensuring that this country's greater religious diversity is enriching our society in very positive ways.

Trade Justice Movement seeks to broaden faith involvement

The Trade Justice Movement (TJM) was formed in 2000 to work for change of the rules and institutions governing international trade to make trade work equitably for all. In 2005 Britain will host the G8 Summit and hold the Presidency of the European Union and TJM sees this as a particularly crucial campaign period. TJM links 50 UK organisations, including aid agencies, environment and human rights campaigns, trade unions, faith and consumer groups. Together, TJM's member organisations have over 9 million members, but until now the faith groups represented have been predominantly Christian. TJM is actively seeking to increase its diversity and involve other faith groups in its membership, policy and decision making. To find out more see www.tjm.org.uk or contact Glen Tarman, Trade Justice Movement Co-ordinator, glen@tjm.org.uk Tel: 020 7404 0530

Make Poverty History

Make Poverty History is a UK alliance of charities, trade unions, campaigning groups, faith communities and celebrities and is the UK mobilisation of the Global Call to Action Against Poverty. They are keen to engage faith and inter faith bodies in this year's campaign. See www.makepovertyhistory.org

The 2007 Project

2007 is the bicentenary of the abolition of the Slave Trade Act. Churches Together in England will be heading up a project to mark this. It has recently appointed Richard Reddie as Project Director. The Project Executive is chaired by Rev Dr Inderjit Bhogal of the Methodist Church. For further information contact richard.reddie@cte.org.uk

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Scottish Inter Faith Council appoints new staff members

In November, the Scottish Inter Faith Council appointed a new Chief Executive Officer, Pramila Kaur, to replace Sister Isabel Smyth on her retirement from the post. Vanessa Taylor has been appointed as SIFC's Equality and Policy Officer and Calum Henderson as full time office administrator. They join Maureen Sier who continues as Development Officer.

Board of Deputies

Jon Benjamin took up post in January as Chief Executive of the Board of Deputies of British Jews. He was previously Chief Executive of British ORT. A retirement reception was held on 15 February at Gray's Inn for Neville Nagler, who had been Chief Executive of the Board since 1991, following a civil service career in the Treasury and Home Office. He has now become part-time Director of the Sternberg Foundation, which deals with a variety of inter faith activities, including the Three Faiths Forum, but will be continuing to serve as a consultant to the Board on inter faith matters.

Faith-based Regeneration Network

FbRN have recently secured funding to appoint two staff and move to offices at: J2, 4th floor, Charles House Charity Centre, 375 Kensington High Street, London W14 8QH. Their Executive Director is Dr Doreen Finneron and their newly appointed Development Officer is Malcolm Deboo. The Faith Based Regeneration Network (FbRN) is drawn from nine faith traditions: Baha'i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jain, Jewish, Muslim, Sikh and Zoroastrian. It was established in 2001 by and for regeneration practitioners who identify with faith traditions, or who work with or for faith community organisations. Further information from admin@fbrn.org.uk.

Council of Christians and Jews moves office

The Council of Christians and Jews has moved offices to a different suite within its current building. The new address is: 1st Floor Camelford House, 87-89 Albert Embankment, London, SE1 7TP.

Honours for inter faith workers

In the New Year's Honours list, Mehri Nikham, Director of the Maimonides Foundation, received an MBE for services to Jewish-Muslim inter faith relations. Malcolm Stonestreet received an MBE for services to the community in Cumbria. He is the Chief Executive of United Religions Initiative UK. The Rev Dr Inderjit Bhogal, Methodist Minister and theologian and former President of the Methodist Conference of Great Britain, received an OBE for services to inter faith relations. Dr Syed Abdul-Aziz Pasha, founder of the Union of Muslim Organisations, received an OBE for services to race relations.

A farewell to inter faith friends

Archpriest Sergei Hackel

The Very Revd Archpriest Sergei Hackel, Russian Orthodox priest, died aged 73 on 6 February. As well as being a lifelong contributor to the Christian ecumenical movement, he was a Board and Executive Member of the Council of Christians and Jews and had made a very active contribution to Jewish-Christian understanding at national level as well as in Sussex where he was joint chairman of the CCJ branch in Brighton and Hove. He was also a well known broadcaster on the World Service

Hamid Husain

Hamid Husain, a much valued member of Manchester Interfaith Forum's Committee since its early days, died suddenly on 27 November 2004. He was born in Muradabad in India in 1932 and came to the UK in 1957, where he trained in chartered accountancy with a Birmingham based firm. He settled in Manchester in 1962. In his spare time he shared his knowledge of Islam both with fellow Muslims, through a study circle and Sunday school talks, and with members of other faiths. He was an official visitor for HM prisons, and a speaker for Muslim patients at NHS hospitals as well as a Rotarian and a member of Amnesty International. Manchester Inter Faith Forum's Committee paid tribute to him as a 'tower of strength' for them and will miss his open mindedness, dry humour, courtesy and constant readiness to help.

Gulam Musa

Gulam Hussain Musa died on 26 December aged 84. He was well known to many for his work with Gloucestershire Interfaith Action, of which he had been Chairman for many years, and for his role within the Gloucester Shi'a community. Mr Musa came to Gloucester in 1969 from Kenya having been born in Zanzibar. Over the years he served on numerous committees and boards. The current chair of GIFA Mr Ahmed Bham said at his memorial service on 7 March, "Gulam Musa was a well respected and much liked elder statesman like figure who will be sadly missed. His legacy of inter faith work in Gloucestershire will be carried forward with much enthusiasm as he would have dearly liked."

REGIONAL AND LOCAL UPDATE

Scotland

Edinburgh

Edinburgh Inter-Faith Association held a series of events during Scotland's Inter Faith Week (see page 9), including the Scottish Film Premier 'Mother Teresa: The Legacy'; an Open Space Evening at Augustine United Church; a Christian Buddhist Dialogue held in St Georges West Church, and the first Annual Meeting of Edinburgh's Religious Leaders, which was followed by a 'Question Time' when young people from Edinburgh had the opportunity to question the Religious leaders. This was filmed by Edinburgh Education Department for future use. On Sunday 21 November the Edinburgh Inter Faith Association also coordinated the visits of religious leaders and representatives, and MSP's to a Mosque and Islamic Centre and to a Sikh Gurdwara.

Dundee

In Dundee, Inter Faith Week was marked with a Shared Meal in Meadowside St Paul's Church. Baha'is, Christians, Jews, Muslims, Quakers, Sikhs enjoyed sharing food and fellowship. Maureen Sier, the SIFC Development Officer was also present. An inter faith display provided the backdrop to the meal, comprising information about SIFC and recently produced materials, as well as some local information about Dundee Inter Faith Association.

This display, augmented by further leaflets and panels from SIFC, formed a small exhibition for the concourse at Ninewells Hospital from 30 November to 3 December, and was seen by the many hundreds of people who use the hospital, as well as medical professionals. Many stopped to ask questions or take leaflets. This was initiated by NHS Tayside Spiritual Care Committee, and supported by the hospital chaplain, Rev David Gordon, who is keen to develop a multi faith dimension to the work of the Chaplaincy in the hospital.

Glasgow

On 20 November leaders and representatives from the Baha'i, Christian, Sikh, Muslim and Hindu communities and from SIFC and 'Glasgow Churches Together' visited Garnethill

Synagogue for their morning service. The following day leaders and representatives from the Buddhist, Baha'i, Christian and Muslim communities, with members of SIFC and 'Glasgow Churches Together' visited Blessed John Duns Scotus Priory Catholic Church proceeding then to Glasgow Central Mosque.

England

Meeting on regional faith forums

A meeting was held on 29 November by the Inner Cities Religious Council of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, in partnership with the Home Office Faith Communities Unit and the Inter Faith Network, to enable participants from different regional inter faith structures in England to reflect on their roles and share experiences. It also enabled regional and national government to catch up with recent developments in this field. Further information from Nigel.Wright@odpm.gsi.gov.uk.

East

Bedford A gathering of 120 people attended a celebration at The Place, Bradgate Road on Tuesday 25 January to mark Bedford Council of Faiths' recent acquisition of charity status. A variety of food generously given by the different communities was enjoyed by guests and music contributed by different faiths provided a tapestry of background sound. There were speeches by the High Sheriff of Bedfordshire, Clifton Ibbett, and Brian Pearce, Director of the Inter Faith Network who provided a perspective on the national inter faith scene. Members of ten different faiths gave presentations conveying their essential beliefs and values. Rabbi Daniela Thau, chair of Bedford Council of Faiths, presided over the event, inviting organisations to link with BCoF, and to benefit from its experience and knowledge of local religious and cultural diversity.

Cambridge On 20 March, Cambridge Faith Fair took place at the Small Guildhall under the auspices of the Cambridge Inter-Faith Group, Cambridge City Council and Cambridgeshire County Council.

Luton. The Luton News/Gazette reports that on Christmas Day, a group of Muslims from Bury Park Central Mosque, with support from Luton Council of Mosques and Luton Council of Faiths, came to Bury Park United Reformed Church to greet the Christian community. They were warmly welcomed by the church and Luton Council of faiths congratulated the Central Mosque for this initiative. The gesture was reciprocated by the Christians on the eve of Eid-ul-Adha on 19 January when a representative group from Bury Park United Reformed Church, along with other representatives from the Bury Park/Beech Hill Council of Churches delivered a Happy Eid message to the Central Mosque.

Peterborough. Peterborough Inter Faith Council held an event at Peterborough Town Hall on 16 January to celebrate 25 years of its work. This brought together members of Peterborough's Christian, Sikh, Hindu, Jewish and Muslim communities. There were presentations by faith speakers, including PIFC's chairman, Mr Jaspal Singh; Chuck Salamon of the Peterborough Jewish community; Dr Ataulah Siddiqui of the Islamic Foundation and Dr Indarjit Singh, Director of the Network of Sikh Organisations. Maqsood Ahmed of the Home Office's Cohesion and Faiths Unit gave a talk about how the Government is working to cement improving relationships between Britain's religious leaders. City Council Chief Executive Gillian Beasley also spoke. She said, "All faith groups have a major and important role in helping to contribute to the city's vision to develop Peterborough and its growth into a bigger and better city. We look forward to continuing our work with Peterborough Inter Faith Council and the positive support and help they provide."

East Midlands

Northampton. On 3 March, Northampton Faiths Forum held an evening on 'Fasting in Faith' with contributions from John Josephs of the Hebrew Synagogue and Njla Momen of the Bah'ai faith.

Nottingham. At a meeting on 1 February Nottingham Inter Faith Council met with a representative of Nottingham City Council, who made a presentation on the work currently being prepared with the City Council on Social Cohesion. There are to be further discussions on how NIFC can cooperate with the Council in this area.

London

East London. The Anglican Bishop of Chelmsford, Rt Rev John Gladwin, was the guest speaker at a meeting of the East London Three Faiths Forum on 3 February at the Community Centre attached to the Ilford Mosque. His topic was: "The Importance of Peace in the Middle East – A Christian Perspective".

Kensington and Chelsea. The Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea have published an eighth edition of their Guide to Ethnic and Faith Organisations in the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea. It is compiled by the Community Relations Section. For further information, telephone 020 7598 4632.

Southwark. The London Borough of Southwark has developed, with voluntary organisations, and the Southwark Multi Faith Forum, a booklet called 'Mark of Faith' which gives an insight into how people's faith impacts on their daily lives - births, marriages, death, worship, and special celebrations. The booklet is part of a project 'Celebrating Southwark' which is supported by the Southwark Alliance as part of the Home Office's Community Cohesion Programme. For further information, contact kevin.dykes@southwark.gov.uk or Julie.Humphreys@southwark.gov.uk

Tower Hamlets. Tower Hamlets Inter Faith Forum have been working in partnership with secondary schools and the SACRE to develop a model to support religious education and community cohesion by encouraging faith leaders to visit schools. Three schools will be piloting the project. A workshop took place on 21 February, led by Deborah Weston, Head of RE at Mulberry School, to look at how visits would be structured and to encourage faith leaders to be volunteers for the pilot. The idea is that volunteers would visit the classroom in pairs, as part of a lesson planned by the class teacher. They would be able to give faith perspectives and would also be role models showing respect and understanding across religions.

Westminster. Westminster Interfaith held its annual inter faith conference on 21 November at the Maria Assumpta Centre in London in association with the World Congress of Faiths. The main speakers at the November conference were Imam Dr Abduljalil Sajid, Sr Chandasiri, Rev Lawrence Hillel and Fr Michael Kirwan SJ. The theme was Buddhist, Christian and Muslim views on violence. On 27 February, WI arranged a visit to Bajtul Futuh Mosque in Morden.

North West

A report 'Faith in England's Northwest: Economic Impact Assessment', was launched at an event on 3 February at Manchester Town Hall supported by the Northwest Regional Development Agency (NWDA) and Manchester City Council. According to the report, faith communities in England's Northwest contribute between £69.6 million and £94.9 million per annum to the region's economy. At the same event, the North West Forum of Faiths was launched; and the 'opening' of faithnorthwest.org.uk, a website dedicated to faith communities in the region was celebrated.

Among the speakers at the event were Cllr Afzal Khan, Deputy Lord Mayor of Manchester and Muslim Council of Britain; Claire Curtis Thomas MP for Crosby; Rt Rev Nigel McCullough, Anglican Bishop of Manchester, Louis Rappaport, President of Manchester Jewish Representative Council; and Mgr John Devine, Churches' Officer for the North West; and Steven Broomhead, Chief Executive of the NWDA who said "The NWDA is pleased to support this unique event which brings together the Northwest's faith communities to ensure they are involved in the regeneration of England's Northwest. Faith communities make a valuable contribution to the regional economy and the drive to improve our local communities. They have an excellent record of bridging the gap between the affluent and the deprived, with their infrastructure and volunteer network. As key stakeholders in the region's future, it is only right that they should be consulted and involved in the regeneration process. We are happy that the North West Forum of Faiths and the faithnorthwest website will enable them to do exactly that."

For further information and to view a copy of the 'Faith in England's Northwest: Economic Impact Assessment' report, visit: www.faithnorthwest.org.uk

Altrincham. The Altrincham Interfaith Group held an Any Questions session in Timperley, which was attended by more than one hundred people. In the chair was District Judge, Michael Jackson. He fielded the questions to Fr David Roberts, a Catholic priest, Dr Kamal Rauniar, a Hindu from Nepal, Basil Hatahet, a Muslim orthodontist from Damascus and Julian Levy, the Jewish son of an Orthodox rabbi and father of Conservative and trainee Reform rabbis. AIG also held their second annual inter faith supper on 26 February at St Ambrose RC College, Hale Barns. Guests included the Mayor of Trafford, Cllr Pamela Dixon. The evening's theme was 'family values' and this was addressed by Professor Ram Gokol from the Hindu community, Michel Sharp from the Jewish community and Dr Sara Saigol from the Muslim community and Revd Alan Morris from the Christian community. The evening was chaired by AIG treasurer Iftikhar Awan. There were blessings from different faiths before the meal.

Bolton. Gary Titley, MEP, was the guest of the Bolton Interfaith Council at the Friends Meeting House on 19 November 2004. The MEP spoke about legislation going through the European Parliament and Commission. He also told the audience how the European Commission worked and the consultation processes that enabled legislation to eventually be passed. He stressed the importance of meeting and sharing experiences between the faith communities throughout Europe and that positive steps should be taken to break down barriers caused by misunderstanding or ignorance of the members faiths and customs.

Manchester. On 20 January, Manchester Interfaith Forum held an event called 'Endings?', to discuss beliefs and practices related to death. It was a follow-up to an earlier meeting on 'Beginning, Belonging and Continuing'. Participants split up into groups of five or six to discuss their beliefs about what happens to beings at death and after; what this means for our obligations to those dying and those who have died; and our attitudes to our own mortality. At the end they reassembled in one group, and shared thoughts that had come out of the discussions. Particularly timely, in the wake of the tsunami tragedy, was the question of how communities cope with widespread loss of life, caused by atrocity or natural disaster.

A Muslim-Jewish Forum has been started in Manchester. Its Co-Chairs are Cllr Afzal Khan, Deputy Mayor of Manchester, and Henry Guterman of the Jewish Representative Council.

Rossendale. On 23 February, a meeting was held in Rawtenstall, 'A Day to Decide', to discuss the setting up of a Rossendale Faith Communities Partnership. This followed earlier work by East Lancs Together (ELT) and Community Action in Rossendale and by a steering group with representation from the two main faiths in Rossendale (Christian and Muslim) and community partners. Speakers at the event included Rev Keith Garner, Bolton and Rochdale Methodist Circuit, Dr Mahmood Chandia, Lancashire Council of Mosques, Fawad Bhatti, Hyndburn Borough Council, and Brian Pearce, Inter Faith Network. Further information from Anayat at anayat@elp.org.uk

South East

Brighton and Hove. Brighton and Hove Inter Faith Contact Group held its AGM on 20 February. Revd Johanna Boeke, President of the International Association of Liberal and Religious Women, spoke from a Unitarian perspective on 'Many are our names: In harmony with diversity.'

The Jewish Chronicle, 11 March, reports on an inter faith art project at the Brighton and Hove New Synagogue involving 20 young people, aged 8 to 14, from the synagogue, a church, a mosque and two local schools. They are working together on a mosaic, 'Pillars of Faith' which they hope to donate to the prayer room of the children's hospital in Brighton.

Medway. Medway Inter Faith Action Forum (MIFAF) has been working with staff at the Demelza House Children's Hospice to develop links between the hospice and local religious communities. Its programme began on 23 November with a training evening for care workers at the hospice. Representatives from some of the local faith communities gave talks to staff. These started by outlining the basic beliefs and structures of their religions before moving on to speak about the beliefs and practices surrounding death, dying and bereavement in their different traditions. Staff found the evening to be very helpful and moves are now being made to build on these early links that have been made between the hospice and local faith communities. It is hoped that MIFAF will be able to offer further assistance to the hospice as it develops its 'quiet room' into an area with resources for a number of different faiths to use. In addition plans are being made for staff training days that will include visits to local places of worship. This contact will give the hospice a number of religious communities to draw upon in the event that patients and their families need faith support beyond that which is currently offered by the chaplain. It is hoped that this will be the start of an enduring and fruitful relationship that serves to educate both the hospice staff about important faith issues and the local faith communities about the excellent work carried out at Demelza House.

Guildford. A Surrey branch of the Three Faiths Forum was launched on 2 March at Guildford Cathedral. Addresses were given by the Co-Founders of The Three Faiths Forum, Sheikh Dr M A Zaki Badawi KBE (Director, the Muslim College) and Sir Sigmund Sternberg KCSG. This initiative has been brought to fruition by Rev Andrew Facey (Vicar of Christ Church, Epsom and Inter-Faith Adviser to the Bishop of Guildford), Imam Shahid Hussain (Inter-Faith Adviser at the Islamic Cultural Centre, Regent's Park and Kingston Mosque), and Rabbi Danny Rich (Chief Executive, Liberal Judaism and Kingston Liberal Synagogue) with the support of Sydney Assor (Chairman of Three Faiths Forum Surrey and Advisory Board Member of the National Three Faiths Forum) and Sidney Shipton OBE (Co-ordinator, The Three Faiths Forum). Further information from sidney@sternberg-foundation.co.uk

West Midlands

The West Midlands Faith Forum held its first conference on 16 March at Aston University. Further information from emmap@rawm.co.uk

Birmingham. Birmingham Council of Faiths (BCF) celebrated its 30th anniversary on 5 December at Birmingham City Council House. Speakers included Brian Cooper, Ramona Kauth, Nila Parmar, and Jalal Uddin of BCF; the Lord Mayor of Birmingham, Cllr Michael Nangle; Councillor Alan Rudge; Rt Rev John Austin, Chair of the Church of England Synod's Inter Faith Consultative Group; and Dr Harriet Crabtree of the Inter Faith Network.

Stoke-on-Trent. The North Staffordshire Forum of Faiths was launched at Victoria Hall Hanley on 3 February. Over 450 people were present, representing faith groups across the city and North Staffordshire. The theme was Peace and Harmony. Presentations were made by five of the major faiths in North Staffordshire. Mohamed Tufail, director of North Staffordshire Race Equality Council, spoke of the need for the forum and its ability to represent faith groups across the area. The Chairman of the Forum, Mgr Patrick McKinnney, gave a short address and then a letter was read from the Mayor, who had been the instigator of the event but had sadly fallen ill and could not be present, formally launching the Forum. Further information from NSFF Coordinator, Keith Perrin, keith@kperrin.freemove.co.uk

Wolverhampton. Wolverhampton Inter Faith Group celebrated its 30th anniversary with an event, “Wolverhampton Alive”, at the City of Wolverhampton College on 27 November. This was attended by the Major, MP’s, local dignitaries, faith communities and members of the public.

On 5 March a memorial service was held for Ivy Gutridge, a WIFG founder member and a former Vice Chair of the Inter Faith Network (see obituary in issue 25 of Inter Faith Update).

South West

Bristol. A civic inter faith celebration, ‘Faith in the Future’ took place at the Council House on 18 March, by invitation of the Lord Mayor of Bristol, Cllr Simon Cook. An evening of readings, prayers, music and sacred songs was followed by an informal meal over a light buffet. The occasion was planned by Bristol Inter Faith Group in partnership with Bristol’s faith communities and the Lord Mayor’s secretary.

Truro. A madrassa or ‘Sunday school’, as local Muslim leaders call it, for Truro’s dozen young Muslims aged 5-14 has been opened in an office at Truro Cathedral. The Acting Dean, Canon Perran Gay, told the Church Times that the cathedral had offered one of its offices after some locals had objected to the school being held in the Imam’s house. Muslim worship is not held at the cathedral but will take place at a new multifaith facility at Truro College.

Yorkshire and Humber

Bradford. On 1 December the new Bradford District Faiths Forum was launched at the Conference Suite of Bradford City AFC. The day was given the theme ‘Faith in Citizenship’ and it was chaired by Sharmila Gandhi, Chief Executive of Bradford Vision. Speakers included Fiona Mactaggart MP, Parliamentary Secretary for Race Equality, Community Policy and Civil Renewal, the Lord Mayor of Bradford, Cllr Irene Ellison Wood, members of the Faith Forum Advisory Development Group, the Forum’s Development Worker, Cath Bromwich, Rt Rev David James, Anglican Bishop of Bradford, Sher Azam, Bradford Council of Mosques, Rajinder Singh, Sikh community, Rajendra Pal Johar, Hindu Cultural Society, and Brian Pearce of the Inter Faith Network. There were also contributions from local children, music and dance.

Leeds. Leeds Concord Inter Faith Fellowship held a meeting ‘Should they go or should they stay’ on 9 March at Thomas Danby College to look at asylum issues. The speaker was Gill Gibbons of Leeds Asylum Seekers Support Network. She talked about refugees and asylum seekers and some of the challenges they face. The multi faith meeting participants discussed ways that they might help, perhaps as volunteer hosts who can put people up for a few nights in crisis situations or by donating to the LASSN hardship fund.

Sheffield. An event was held on 21 November at Cutlers Hall in Sheffield by the Open Forum for Economic Regeneration (O.F.F.E.R.) to celebrate, inform and provide opportunity for networking between the various groups which have been working in the city to promote harmony and to support disadvantaged and socially excluded people. Agnostics, Christians, Muslims and Pagans were among those involved. Presentations were given by faith based groups and inter cultural organisations about their work.

The London bombings

On Thursday 7 July suicide bombers struck three tube trains and a bus in central London, killing 56 people and injuring 700. Four further bomb attacks took place on 21 July but no one was injured as the devices failed to explode.

Condemnation of the bombings has come from all quarters, including leaders of the UK's faith communities.

On the day of the bombings, Churches Together in Britain and Ireland and the Muslim Council of Britain issued a joint statement expressing sympathy at the death and suffering caused by the attacks; condemning these criminal acts; and noting that the scriptures and the traditions of both the Muslim and Christian communities repudiate the use of such violence.

“.....These attacks strengthen our determination to live together in peace, and to grow together in mutual understanding. This crime must inspire us to work unceasingly together in pursuit of peace, justice and respect for difference.” Churches Together in Britain and Ireland and the Muslim Council of Britain, 7 July.

Government consultations

On 8 July Home Secretary Charles Clarke held a meeting with Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh faith leaders to reassure them of the Government's commitment to allaying any fears felt by the faith communities and encouraging them to work together in the aftermath of the tragedy.

On 19 July, Prime Minister Tony Blair and the leaders of the Conservative and Liberal Democrat parties, Michael Howard and Charles Kennedy, met with Muslim leaders at Downing Street to discuss response to the recent bombings and, more generally, tackling extremism and the practical steps which can be taken.

On 20 July Charles Clarke, with Home Office Ministers Paul Goggins and Hazel Blears, held a meeting attended by a wide range of faith and community group representatives to discuss how to prevent young people being drawn into extremism. It was agreed, following this meeting, to set up a number of working groups, led by community members, to focus on: engaging with young people; tackling extremism and radicalisation; supporting regional and local initiatives and community actions;

NETWORK NEWS

Network's 2005 AGM

The Network's 2005 AGM was held in Coventry on 27 June in conjunction with its National Meeting.

Rt Rev Dr Tom Butler and Jagjiwan Singh were re-elected as Co-Chairs, and Dr Manazir Ahsan as a Vice-Chair, for the coming year. Hon Barnabas Leith and Dr V P Narayan Rao were elected as a Vice-Chairs in succession to Jehangir Sarosh and Om Parkash Sharma.

Others who stood down from the Executive Committee included Archbishop Kevin McDonald and Abdul Rauf Mirza, as well as Sister Isabel Smyth who had served on the Committee since 1997. Ann Noonan, Gul Muhammad and Pramila Kaur were elected in their place. Ven Tawalama Bandula (replacing Ven Pandit Wilamajothi); Rev Daniel Otieno-Ndale (filling the vacancy left last year by Rev Simon Reynolds); and Rev Guy Wilkinson (replacing Ven Michael Ipgrave, who resigned as a Committee member following his appointment as Archdeacon of Southwark) were all co-opted to the Committee in the course of 2004-05. They were elected at the AGM to serve on the Committee for the coming year, along with Dina Gold who filled the place left vacant by Rosalind Preston.

Seven organisations were accepted into membership of the Network: Minorities of Europe Inter Faith Action Programme; Altrincham Inter Faith Group; Coventry Multi Faith Forum; Hounslow Friends of Faith; Newham Faith Sector Forum; Telford and Wrekin Interfaith Group; and Warrington Council of Faiths. This brings the total number of Network member bodies at the present time to 112.

Network thanks Rosalind Preston

Rosalind Preston stepped down at the AGM not only as a Vice-Chair, in which post she has been succeeded by Neville Nagler, but also from membership of the Executive Committee, on which she had served from 1993. During this time she served once as a Co-Chair and twice as a Vice-Chair. A presentation was made by Bishop Tom Butler and Jagjiwan Singh to Mrs Preston on behalf of all the members of the Network to mark her very significant contribution to the life of the Network over these years.

The Inter Faith Network

The Inter Faith Network was founded in 1987. It works with its member bodies to promote good relations between the faith communities in the UK, to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make the UK a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions where all can practise their faith with integrity. The Network:

- provides information on faith and inter faith issues;
- advises on multi faith projects and inter faith issues;
- publishes materials to aid work in the religious and inter faith sectors;
- fosters inter faith co-operation on social issues;
- holds regular meetings where social and religious questions of concern to the different faith communities can be examined together;
- links 112 member organisations including: representative bodies from the different faith communities; inter faith organisations; local inter faith groups; and educational and academic bodies

Inter Faith Update

Inter Faith Update is the newsletter of the Inter Faith Network for the UK. It keeps a wide range of organisations and individuals interested in developing good inter faith relations in the UK in touch with UK events and projects with a significant inter faith component.

Please send any items and diary dates for consideration for inclusion in the next issue by 30 September to: The Newsletter Editor, Inter Faith Network, 8A Lower Grosvenor Place, London SW1W 0EN or email to harriet.crabtree@interfaith.org marking your email 'newsletter'.

NATIONAL UPDATE

At a meeting on 15 July at the Regent's Park Islamic Cultural Centre, London, over forty leading imams, muftis and ulama (Islamic scholars) representing a wide range of strands within the Muslim community in Britain made a public statement on the events of 7 July and responded to questions from the media. Their statement, read out by Maulana Shahid Raza of the World Islamic Mission, noted that "There can never be any excuse for taking an innocent life. The Qur'an clearly declares that killing an innocent person is tantamount to killing all mankind and likewise saving a single life is as if one had saved the life of all mankind....this is both a principle and a command. We are firmly of the view that these killings had absolutely no sanction in Islam, nor is there any justification whatsoever in our noble religion for such evil actions. It is our understanding that those who carried out the bombings in London should in no sense be regarded as martyrs". The full text and list of signatories can be found at www.mcb.org.uk/Signed\_Ulama\_statement.pdf Further responses from faith communities can be found below on pages 7–8.

engaging with women; imam training and accreditation and the role of mosques as a resource for the whole community; providing a full range of education services, in the UK, that meet the needs of the Muslim community; security – Islamophobia, protecting Muslims from extremism, and community confidence in policing. These working groups will be supported by the Home Office and will draw up proposals for discussion at a follow up meeting in September.

In the coming weeks, Home Office Ministers Hazel Blears and Paul Goggins are holding a number of meetings across the country to meet members of the Muslim community in different areas. The police, local authorities, members of other faith communities and local MPs will also be involved in this programme of meetings and the outcome of them will be fed into the working groups being set up following the Home Secretary's meeting on 20 July.

The aftermath – community relations

The Metropolitan Police held a joint communication and consultation event, Communities Together, on 11 July to engage and reassure communities about police response. It was attended by 300 community and faith representatives from all over the capital. Following the shooting of an innocent man in error at London's Stockwell tube station, further efforts have been made to reassure those who are anxious about the implications of the 'shoot to kill to protect' policy which is currently in operation as a last resort for responding to suspected suicide bombers.

Following the bombings there have been reports of a number of attacks on places of worship and on individuals. The Metropolitan police have recorded a sharp rise in hate crimes following the London attacks, including attacks on mosques, physical attacks on individuals and verbal abuse. Metropolitan Police figures released on 2 August show that there were 269 religious hate crimes in the three weeks after 7 July compared with 40 in the same period of 2004. Metropolitan Police Assistant Commissioner Tarique Ghaffur said "There is no doubt that incidents impacting on the Muslim community have increased."

Immediately after the bombings the Commission for Racial Equality, through its Safe Communities Initiative, set up an 'observatory' to monitor any possible community tensions that might arise as a result of them. This is still operating and community conflict incidents, including attacks on places of worship, can be reported to the observatory. Contact Alexander Goldberg on 020 7939 0178 or agoldberg@cre.gov.uk.

On 8 July, the Inter Faith Network for the UK issued a document, Looking After One Another: The Safety and Security of Our Faith Communities. This gives practical guidelines for faith communities to respond jointly to such problems as attacks on their places of worship and encourages building strong and effective inter faith links at local level. The document was sent to all Network member bodies and went early the following week, with a covering press release, to local authority officers with responsibility for faith and inter faith issues; Race Equality Councils; and key faith community contacts, it has been circulated more widely by these contacts. The text of the document and of the accompanying press release can be downloaded from www.interfaith.org.uk

The document had been under development since last year in consultation with the Commission for Racial Equality, the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Chief Fire Officers' Association, as well as Network member bodies. The Crown Prosecution Service advised separately on aspects of the text. The document was finalised rapidly given the possible repercussions for community relations of the terrorist attacks in London last Thursday.

The preparation of guidelines of this kind was suggested at a meeting of representatives of faith communities and other organisations convened some time ago by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Rowan Williams.

To download Looking After One Another: The Safety and Security of Our Faith Communities go to www.interfaith.org.uk

The Local Government Association issued 'Alerts' for local authorities on 13 July and 20 July, and a letter was sent by its Chairman, Sir Sandy Bruce-Lockhart on 25 July. All drew attention to community cohesion resources which can be of use in the current context. A press release issued on 13 July also highlighted some immediate actions local authorities may wish to take.

Vigils, prayers and observances

Around the UK, vigils, special prayers and observances have been taking place since the bombings and more are planned. Some examples of these follow.

On 8 July, during the jumu'ah prayers, Muslims throughout the UK offered prayers for the victims and families of the bombings.

Also on 8 July leaders of various faith groups, trade union members, school children and representatives of community organisations formed a group of over 200 people who held a silent vigil outside Aldgate station in sympathy for the victims of the explosions across London. Setting out after Friday prayers at the East London Mosque in Whitechapel, the group walked to the edge of the cordoned off area in Aldgate. Speaking on behalf of the group, the Bishop of Stepney, Rt Rev Stephen Oliver, said: "We are here as an act of solidarity, remembering those who have died, the injured, and the grieving."

On 10 July a service for those affected by the terrorist attacks was held at the London Buddhist Vihara in Chiswick.

On 14 July, one week after the bombings, a two minute silence was observed at noon through the UK as well as in many other places around Europe. Train stations and airports fell quiet, buses and cabs pulled into the kerb, and busy streets became still, as people stopped what they were doing to observe the silence. Short observances were held at this time by people in many different parts of the country. In Wolverhampton, for example, a fifteen minute event with contributions from all the faith communities, organised by Wolverhampton Inter Faith Group, preceded the silence.

In London, thousands gathered later that day in Trafalgar Square to remember those who died, to thank the heroes of the transport and emergency services who saved so many lives on 7 July and to hear speakers including the Mayor of London, Ken Livingstone. Ben Okri opened the vigil with a poem for London and Lord Coe, Chairman of the London 2012 bid, Tessa Jowell, the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, Brendan Barber from the Trades Union Congress and faith leaders from the Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh communities were amongst others who read poems, prayers and shared their thoughts.

Other events, linked to the midday silence, took place across the UK on 14 July. In Luton, for example, where unused bombs had been found in an abandoned car after the 7 July bombings, hundreds of shoppers and office workers gathered outside the Town Hall for the two minutes silence and also to hear words from civic leaders, including Luton's Mayor Haji Abid, and faith leaders.

On 17 July, during a young people's Jewish-Muslim football day, children and their parents and members of the organisers, Maimonides Foundation and Arsenal FC, remembered the victims of the 7 July terrorist acts in London by observing a one minute silence. The adults signed a letter of condolence to be sent to Ken Livingstone, Mayor of London, for inclusion in the London's Book of Condolence.

On 19 July a Hindu memorial service took place at Victoria Embankment Gardens in London. It was organised by the Hindu Forum with the Metropolitan Police Hindu Association. According to Hindu tradition, the period of mourning after such tragedies is 12 days and a special prayer is usually held on the last day. The service was attended by faith leaders from Jewish, Muslim Council of Britain, Hindu, Sikh and Christian organisations, Sir Ian Blair, Commissioner of Metropolitan Police; Lord Mayor of Westminster, Cllr Tim Joiner; and Home Office Ministers, Hazel Blears and Tony McNulty.

On 21 July, a memorial service was held at the British Medical Association where doctors at the Tavistock Square building had worked with ambulance crews to help the injured after a bomb exploded on the number 30 bus outside. The Bishop of Edmonton, Rt Rev Peter Wheatley, led the multi faith service and leaders of other faiths were also present. Lesley Garrett sang at the memorial in the courtyard which was attended by many members of the emergency services. Security workers who helped after the attacks were also present. Messages of support from doctors around the world were read.

On 21 July the Three Faiths Forum, Central London Mosque and Islamic Centre and the St John's Wood Liberal Jewish Synagogue held a multi faith service of remembrance and hope at the synagogue. The service was led by Rabbi Alexandra Wright, Senior Rabbi at the Liberal Jewish Synagogue, the Revd Dr Anders Bergquist, Vicar of St John's Wood Church, and Sheikh Salah al-Ansari of the Central London Mosque.

A number of other services and commemorations are planned, including an Inter Faith Commemoration Ceremony at the Al Khoei Islamic Centre, London on 6 August and a Jain Prayer for Peace in Harrow on 7 August.

Acts and messages of solidarity

There have also been many acts and messages of solidarity in the weeks following the bombings. Three local examples are:

On 14 July people of all faiths gathered at Gulshane Mosque in Bedford to remember in silence the victims of the London bomb blasts. The members of All Saints Parish Church presented to the mosque a book of condolence and solidarity, inscribed thus: "We, the people of Queen's Park in Bedford, are united in prayer for the victims of the London bombings, in sympathy for those who suffer and grieve, in anger that innocent people have been killed in God's name, in friendship as neighbours of different faiths, in hope that peace and goodwill will continue in Queen's Park and beyond". The book is being passed between the two mosques, the two churches and the gurdwara in Queen's Park for people to express their sympathy for the bomb victims and their solidarity as neighbours of different faiths.

On 16 July, the Cambridge Inter Faith Group led a multi faith visit of solidarity to the Cambridge Mosque.

In Oldham, 'Standing Together', an event organised by the Council and Oldham Inter Faith Forum, brought the communities there together in Alexandra Park on 22 July to remember the victims of the London bombings to show support for the emergency services, and to commit themselves to work together, across the communities of Oldham, to build respect and understanding and overcome the divisions and hatred which lead to such atrocities. Speakers included representatives of the Christian, Hindu, Jewish, and Muslim faiths and the Leader of the Council, Cllr David Jones.

Altrincham Unitarians sent a message of support to the Altrincham Islamic Cultural Centre: "In the wake of the recent London bombings and certain hostile responses towards Muslims and their property, we send you our support and good wishes – and our pledge to work for a community free from fear, prejudice and violence."

Other events linked to the bombings

On 12 July St Ethelburga's Centre for Reconciliation and Peace held a commemoration for those who died in the bombings. Contributions in personal statements, reflections, poetry and music made up a reflective inter faith occasion where participants also discussed how people of faith can respond to terror in London.

On 19 July, the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police Service, Sir Ian Blair, addressed the Advisory Board of the Three Faiths Forum. The Commissioner spoke about the need for dialogue between different faith communities at this critical time and the role of the Muslim community in helping tackle terrorism. He said that it is essential to identify the preachers of hate: such people can no longer be ignored in view of their clear influence on the young. He also stressed that it is essential for the Metropolitan Police Service to become far more representative of minority communities, particularly the Muslim, Hindu, Sikh and Jewish communities.

On 23 July, a conference, entitled 'A Call for Unity and Understanding', involving Muslims and those of other communities as well as local MPs, took place at the Hanfia Institute in Bentley Street, Lockwood, Huddersfield. Participants examined how to move forward from the attacks in London on 7 July.

On 24 July, community leaders and local people from Stockwell, South London, met to reflect on recent disturbing events in the area, including the shooting of Jean Charles de Menezes. Speakers from the local churches, Stockwell Green Mosque, the Latin American community and the police spoke of their sorrow at his death. The room was packed as speakers from the many ethnic and religious groups in Stockwell appealed to the community to hold together during this difficult time and not to allow this tragic event to divide them.

Within a few days it became known that the four bombers who committed the 7 July murders were British born and from Leeds and Dewsbury and there has been particular concern for community relations there since this discovery. Faith leaders, police and others in these areas have worked hard to help hold communities together.

On 14 July an Act of Remembrance was held in Millennium Square in Leeds. Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh leaders spoke alongside the Leader of the Council, Cllr Mark Harris. Afterwards some fifty faith leaders met with civic leaders. Those of other faiths asked to be present at Friday prayers in the city's mosques and were warmly welcomed there. On Friday, many attended the prayers and some civic and faith leaders were asked to speak alongside the imams. On 21 July, Cllr Harris again asked faith and black and minority ethnic community leaders to meet with him and together they began to look at ways of bringing faith communities closer together for the good of all and of helping young people to understand the faiths of those who are not part of their own religious community.

In response to the police raids in Beeston and Holbeck on 12 July, and the Government's call for a two minute silence to be observed on 14 July to remember the victims of the London bombings, Muslim, Sikh and Christian community leaders invited members of all the communities in Beeston and Beeston Hill to come together at the Hamara Centre as a visible sign of their shared resolution to oppose the use of terrorism and of their refusal to be divided by it and as a symbol of strength in light of recent difficulties the community has faced.

There was also a march organised by the 'Together in Leeds 11' organisation. The Leeds Evening Post reported "Several hundred friends of the Beeston community in Leeds filled the streets for a three-mile peace march into the city centre on Saturday. A colourful display of unity was created by demonstrators as they set off from the Hamara Healthy Living Centre on Tempest Road, Beeston, Leeds, on their way to Millennium Square in the city centre..... They had one collective purpose: to show a sense of harmony following the disturbing revelation that two of the suicide bombers responsible for the merciless attacks on London that claimed more than 50 lives a fortnight ago once lived among them..."

Faiths unite to condemn the actions of the bombers and call for continued good community relations

Statements on the bombings came from many faith linked organisations in the UK and beyond. Here are excerpts from just a few of these:

“...The Lancashire Council of Mosques and Churches Together in Lancashire...utterly condemn without reservation this act of terror. We hope that the Prime Minister will take steps to ensure that those responsible are swiftly brought to justice. We also hope that the Prime Minister will take steps to avoid any unwarranted backlash against vulnerable sections of the community.”
LCM/CTL, 7 July

“...Together, as citizens of the global village, we need to redouble our efforts in the struggle for peace, dialogue and understanding, to prevent such carnage occurring again.”
International Association for Religious Freedom, 7 July

“Sussex Muslims utterly condemn the cowardly attacks and explosions on the London Transport system...May Allah bring comfort to those who have suffered. Inna lillahi wa inna ilayhi raji'un (We belong to Allah and we will return to Him). This is a very serious attack on our country's soil which every British citizen has a duty to protect.”
Council of Imams and Muslim Leaders (London and Southern Counties), 7 July

“Britain is a good example of a multicultural society where all faiths have been living together peacefully. It is now more important than ever to ensure that we do not succumb to terrorism by allowing ourselves to become divided.” Hindu Forum of Britain, 7 July

“We are united in our shared concern for the people of London following the terrorist bombings on 7 July....Our faith communities are supporting them in prayer. Members of the faith communities of Kirklees..are united to a common commitment to peace and rejection of the ways of violence...” Faith leaders and Mayor of Kirklees, 8 July

“...Clearly this was not a religious act, whatever those who were responsible thought. It is condemned by true Muslims, here in Birmingham as elsewhere, as an insult and injury to their faith. We stand united with them and refuse to let men of evil infect us with the disease of their hatred.”
Birmingham Council of Faiths, 8 July

“People of faith must support each other in such difficult times. Many people blame religion for spawning such atrocities, but it is not true religion that causes such evil, but the misuse...for twisted and perverted purposes.” World Congress of Faiths, 8 July

“..The scriptures and teachings of all our faiths – Baha’i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh – denounce the use of all indiscriminate violence. To justify such actions in the name of any religion is totally contrary to our values and practice...” Religious Leaders of Scotland, 8 July

“Whilst we abhor any action which causes the destruction of life, we also call for compassion and understanding to be extended to the perpetrators of these acts. Their minds are filled with hatred and non-understanding. We should try to help them to realise that violence is not the answer to their grievances and that all mankind must strive to develop better tolerance and understanding, and mutual respect for the one life we share.” Sri Lankan Sangha Sabha UK (Buddhist), 8 July

“...As we unite to resist terrorism, we must also address forms of injustice that afflict so many in the world and are misused by some to justify and foment terror...” Dr William Vendley, International Secretary General, Religions for Peace, 8 July

“As religious leaders from several different faiths we came together this morning to pay tribute to the courage, commitment and sacrifice by which the evil of Nazism was resisted and ultimately overcome sixty years ago. We stand together now for a further purpose: to express our shared commitment to resisting and overcoming the evil of terrorism, which the events of recent days here in London have brought home to us afresh and with such devastating clarity. It is an evil that cannot be justified and that we utterly condemn and reject.....We want to signal the common ground on which we stand as faith leaders, and to reaffirm the values we uphold at this time of sorrow and pain. It is vital, when many will be feeling anger, bewilderment and loss, to strengthen those things we hold in common and to resist all that seeks to drive us apart. Central to what we share as people of faith is a belief in God's compassionate love for us. It is a love that compels us to cherish, not to disfigure, our common humanity. We commend and embrace the continuing efforts to build a Britain in which different communities-including faith communities-can flourish side by side on the basis of mutual respect and understanding.....” Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Rowan Williams, the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster, Cardinal Cormac Murphy-O’Connor, the Free Churches Moderator, Dr David Coffey, the Chief Rabbi of the United Hebrew Congregations of the Commonwealth, Sir Jonathan Sacks, and the Chair of the Imams and Mosques Council, Sheikh Dr Zaki Badawi, 10 July

“... We are glad that there are warm and cordial relations between people of different faiths in our region, and we, as Muslim and Christian leaders, refuse to be diverted by acts of terrorism from continuing to work together to acknowledge our diversity, to affirm our common humanity, and to seek ways to share life together... We encourage all people of faith and goodwill in our region to continue to work together unceasingly in pursuit of values which build up our common life.” Regional leaders of the Christian and Muslim communities in Surrey and North East Hampshire, 11 July

“We, members of the Hounslow Friends of Faith, people from different faith communities in the [London] Borough of Hounslow, have met to respond to the terrorist attack in several parts of London... Our hearts go out to the innocent victims, ordinary people travelling by public transport, young and old, of different religious and ethnic backgrounds or visitors to London. We express our deep sorrow and convey our condolences to the bereaved families. We pray for the speedy recovery of those injured.” Hounslow Friends of Faith, 12 July

“... There can be no justification for deaths and injuries to civilians – whether those deaths are in London or Baghdad, Kabul or New York, Falluja or Madrid... It is important that we stand together and do not let people use terrorism to divide our communities and foster suspicion at the normal daily activities of some within the minority communities in this country.....” Faith leaders of Waltham Forest, 12 July

“We... condemn in no uncertain terms the terrorist actions of last Thursday which by no means can be justified. We express deepest condolences to all those who have been affected by this tragedy – Muslims, Jews, Christians, Hindus and Sikhs – all of whom have been targeted. We would also like to reiterate Londoners’ heartfelt gratitude for the amazing and courageous work carried out by our emergency services, a sentiment that can never be overstated..... It is our firm belief that Islam is a religion of peace and justice and that attacks such as those carried out on Thursday have no place in Islam or amongst Muslims..... As the leaders of tomorrow we find hope in the resilience and unity exemplified by Londoners. We will not be defeated in our quest to maintain London as a beacon of freedom, diversity and tolerance. We shall continue in our efforts to eradicate terrorism, racism and war – through education and understanding; for only through these methods can we truly claim to have mutual understanding and respect for one another.” National Union of Students; Federation of Student Islamic Societies; British Organisation of Sikh Students National Hindu Students Forum; and the Union of Jewish Students, 13 July

“.... We praise the prompt actions of the national police in searching for the truth, and, at a local level, the high level of consultation that we have received from local police leaders. We pledge our full support to them in ensuring community harmony in these coming days when all need to remain calm and focused in maintaining Leicester’s reputation for good relations. As after 9/11, we affirm our declaration that faith leaders will consider any attack or act of vandalism against any religious building or individual connected with that community, as an attack on all of us.” Leicester Council of Faiths, 13 July

“The perpetrators of this outrage had one purpose and that was to divide us [but] our strength is in unity.... In Luton, as a representative of the Council of Faiths, I am proud to be a Lutonian because over the past seven days I have received a tremendous amount of friendship and support from colleagues and that is our strength.” Zafar Khan, Chair, Luton Council of Faiths, 14 July.

“We are united in deploring the use of murderous violence to achieve political or religious ends. We are most strongly distressed when perpetrators of violence claim they are serving God in this way. Such actions are no part of an honest observance of any of our faiths...” Merseyside Council of Faiths, 13 July.

“... As we pray for peace and justice and remember the sorrow of the recently bereaved, we wish it to be known that any harm to, or provocation of, one faith community will be received as though it was intended for us all.” Lancashire Forum of Faiths, 18 July.

Reflection by the Network's Officers

In place of the usual Inter Faith Profile interview, this issue includes the following short reflection offered by Co-Chairs and Vice Chairs of the Inter Faith Network after their meeting together in July:

We continue to remember the pain and grief of those whose loved ones have died or been injured in the criminal terrorist attacks which have taken place in London. Our prayers are with them.

All our faith communities have condemned unequivocally the attacks and have stood together in solidarity with one another in recent days. Vigils, services of remembrance, and acts of witness in towns and cities across the UK have borne witness to a powerful desire to remember the dead and injured and to oppose the violence used by the terrorists.

Bonds of respect and trust between people in Britain's different communities have been formed patiently and steadily over recent decades. These close relationships have become part of the fabric of our society at national, local and neighbourhood level. We can now see how strongly this fabric has been woven. It is resisting the attempts of those who wish to tear our society apart.

The Muslim community has condemned the terrorists for their criminal acts and for the twisted interpretation of Islam which they have used to support these. We welcome the widespread public recognition that this evil ideology is far removed from the character of the faith held by the vast majority of Muslims in this country. We express our solidarity with Muslim organisations and individuals as they work to tackle the challenges which face them.

From time to time, in the course of history, faith traditions have been betrayed and perverted by some who claim – wrongly – to be their genuine followers. Hatred and violence have often been the bitter harvest.

The fruits of true faith are the pursuit of justice, wisdom and peace and acts of care and compassion. When we celebrated the new Millennium some five years ago, representatives of the UK's different faith communities came together to express their commitment to work together with one another, based on these values we hold in common. Now, more than ever, we need to redouble our efforts to build, together, a society where there is mutual respect, cooperation for the common good and commitment to a shared and positive future.

The death of Pope John Paul II

On 2 April Pope John Paul II, born Karol Józef Wojtyła in 1920, died. He had been Pope for nearly 27 years. Nearly 4 million people came into Rome in the days between his death and funeral mass.

Pope John Paul II's death was marked across the world. Over 2000 people attended the Vespers of the Dead at Westminster Cathedral to give thanks for his life. The Vespers were led by Cardinal Cormac Murphy-O'Connor. The Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Rowan Williams, gave a scripture reading and the Prayers of Intercession were read by leaders of other Christian denominations. Representatives of the UK's other major faiths were also present at the Vespers.

UN Secretary General Kofi Annan said of the late

Pope "Quite apart from his role as a spiritual guide to more than a billion men, women and children, he was a tireless advocate of peace, a true pioneer in inter faith dialogue....." Tributes were offered to him not just by fellow Catholics and other Christians, but by people of many faiths.

During his papacy, John Paul II had made strenuous efforts to improve relations with people of other faiths. He visited the Rome synagogue in 1986 and made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land in 2000 which helped deepen relations between the Catholic Church and Jews, as did the fact that during his papacy the Catholic church issued the document, "We Remember: A Reflection on the Shoah," which criticised historic Christian anti-Semitism and challenged Holocaust denial. He also made attempts to deepen links with Muslims, for example, through his visit to Egypt where he initiated dialogue between the Vatican and Al-Azhar. A number of Azhar-Vatican meetings subsequently took place. In 2001, in Damascus, Syria, he became the first pontiff to visit a mosque. In 1986, for the World Day of Prayer for Peace, he brought leaders of all the main world faiths together for prayer and conversation. A number of religious leaders, such as the Dalai Lama, developed close links with the Pope, visiting him on many occasions.

“There are some who claim that religion is part of the problem, blocking humanity’s way to true peace and prosperity. ...[But] religion and peace go together; to wage war in the name of religion is a blatant contradiction. The task before us, therefore, is to promote a culture of dialogue. I have always believed that religious leaders have a vital role to play in nurturing that hope of justice and peace without which there will be no future worthy of humanity.” John Paul II, Closing Ceremony of Interreligious Assembly, Rome November 1999

Pope Benedict XVI

On 19 April, Cardinal Ratzinger was elected as the new Pope and, as Pope Benedict XVI, was enthroned on 7 May. The name ‘Benedict’ comes from the Latin for ‘blessed’. Cardinal Cormac Murphy O’Connor noted that, in choosing the name of Benedict, the new Pope had had in mind Benedict XV, a dedicated reconciler and peacemaker, and had told the cardinals that he intended his name to signify peace and reconciliation. Many world and religious leaders were present in Rome for the occasion of Pope Benedict XVI’s enthronement and he met shortly thereafter those leaders who had attended. Included in his first message as Pope Benedict XVI was a call for dialogue with other religions.

Tsunami victims remembered

On 11 May a national service of remembrance was held at St Paul’s for victims of last December’s Asian tsunami. The Queen, the Duke of Edinburgh, the Prime Minister and Cabinet colleagues and leaders of the opposition parties joined 1,800 mourners in the Cathedral to remember those who perished in the Boxing Day disaster. Among the congregation were members of 126 bereaved families, 73 survivors and aid workers, as well as representatives from the 12 affected countries. The sermon was given by Dr Rowan Williams, the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Remembering those who served in World War II

Between 4 and 10 of July the nation celebrated sixty years of the end of World War 2, with the main events taking place in London. Thousands turned out on National Commemoration Day to commemorate the 60th Anniversary of the End of Second World War in London on 10 July.

G8 summit

The G8 summit was held from 6 to 8 July at the Gleneagles Hotel in Perthshire in Scotland. It was hosted by British Prime Minister Tony Blair as the UK has held the presidency of the G8 since January this year. Poverty in Africa was one of the key issues discussed at the summit.

The G8 summit has been pivotal in the campaign of Make Poverty History, a British and Irish coalition of charities, religious groups, trade unions, campaigning groups and celebrities, which has been working to increase awareness of poverty and to pressure governments to alleviate this. In the run up to the G8, the Make Poverty History campaign, and other movements campaigning for trade justice and third world debt relief and increased and appropriate international aid, held numerous events to highlight these themes. A series of concerts called Live 8 took place before the G8 summit to encourage activism and debate within the G8’s member countries, with the aim of increasing political pressure on the leaders and around 225,000 people came to Edinburgh on 2 July to demonstrate and make their demands to the G8.

London wins Olympic bid

On 6 July, International Olympic Committee President Jacques Rogge announced that the Games of the 30th Olympiad in 2012 had been awarded to London. A key aspect of the bid had been the argument that London is a diverse world in miniature – many faiths, races, and cultures in one city. Faith groups in London had been actively involved in supporting the bid, with support from the London Civic Forum which had arranged a number of events to help brief and involve them.

Update on new legislation

The last issue of Inter Faith Update reported on the position which had been reached on the Government's legislation on religious discrimination and on incitement to religious hatred.

Prior to the dissolution of Parliament in April the Equality Bill received an unopposed Second Reading in the House of Commons. Following the General Election it was reintroduced (in slightly amended form) in the House of Lords and received a Second Reading there on 15 June. Since then, the Committee stage in the Lords has been completed and the Report and Third Reading stages will follow after the summer recess.

The Equality Bill has three parts: Part I covers the setting up of the proposed new Commission for Equality and Human Rights; Part II covers discrimination on grounds of religion and belief in the provision of goods, services and premises; and Part III places a new duty on public authorities to promote equality of opportunity in terms of gender. The changes from the Bill introduced into Parliament in the previous session are mostly minor and technical, but the exemptions in Part II on the application of the discrimination provisions to religion or belief organisations were widened.

The attempt by the Government in the last Parliamentary session, using the vehicle of the Serious Organised Crime and Police Bill, to create a new offence of incitement to religious hatred failed, as had its earlier attempt to introduce this legislation through the Anti-Terrorism Bill debated in Parliament in the autumn of 2001. On that occasion the relevant provisions were dropped in order to secure the Bill's enactment following opposition in the House of Lords. The Government dropped the provisions from the Serious Organised Crime and Police Bill in order to secure the passage of that legislation, after the General Election had been announced, before Parliament was dissolved. Following the election, legislation dealing only with this incitement issue was introduced into the House of Commons on 9 June and the Racial and Religious Hatred Bill has since then passed through all its stages there. The Bill was introduced into the House of Lords on 12 July and will be considered by it after the recess. The Bill's provisions reproduce those included in the Government's previous attempts to legislate on this issue.

The Government has also reintroduced its Charities Bill in the House of Lords where it has reached the Report and Third Reading stage which will follow after the recess. As before, it includes important provisions about the position of new and existing charities, including religious organisations. The Bill sets out the activities which would qualify an organisation to be given charitable status. The categories of these are not being changed significantly by it and include the advancement of religion and the promotion of religious or racial harmony. The Bill also requires that the purpose for which a body is established is carried out for the "public benefit". In this regard, its provisions change the present position substantially, since it abolishes the previous presumption that religious bodies (and certain other categories or organisations) are operating for the public benefit and instead places an onus on all charitable organisations to demonstrate that this is so. The Bill requires the Charities Commission, in due course, to produce guidance on how they propose to assess "public benefit". Before this guidance is finalised, there will be a consultative process to which faith communities, along with others, will be able to contribute.

Data on religious identity in the 2011 census and of school pupils

The Office for National Statistics has been carrying out a consultation on arrangements for the 2011 Census. The consultation, which closes on 5 August, is linked to the publication of a number of documents by the ONS, which can be found on its website at www.statistics.gov.uk/about/consultations/2011Census.asp. The consultation material makes it clear that the present intention is to collect data in the 2011 Census on religious identity, as was done in the 2001 Census. Therefore discussion is likely to focus on this occasion on the form which the relevant question should take and on the categories of religious identity which should appear on the Census form, rather than on the issue of principle itself.

The Department for Education and Skills is conducting a consultation on its guidance for local authorities on their collection of "Inclusion, Equality and Diversity Data". At present, schools in England do not report data on pupils' faith to the DfES, although many schools collect this data for practical and pastoral reasons. The Department is now considering collecting this data, along with data on disability, first language and traveller status. The DfES believes that it will be a helpful addition to the data already collected on the ethnic background of school pupils.

No final decision has been made on whether faith data will be collected and DfES Ministers will be considering, among other factors, the additional burden on schools which this additional data collection will involve. Information about this consultation, which closes on 9 August, can be found at www.dfes.gov.uk/consultations.

The Network office drew the attention of all its member bodies in June to both the ONS and DfES consultations.

Listed Places of Worship Grant Scheme extended

In the 2005 budget, the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced that the Listed Places of Worship Grant Scheme would be extended until 2008. The scheme, set up in 2001, returns to faith groups the equivalent of the VAT paid on eligible repairs and maintenance to their listed buildings. The scheme is open to applications from any formally constituted faith group, and successful applications have been made by most of the major faiths in the UK.

Around £28 million has been paid out since the scheme began. The scope of the scheme is restricted to repairs or maintenance to the fabric of a listed building, and alterations to buildings, and works to fixtures and fittings, including plumbing and wiring, are ineligible. The scheme covers works to a building that is used solely or primarily for worship, and in which at least six religious meetings are held each year. It does not cover work to ancillary buildings.

Further information on the scheme is available from www.lpwscheme.org.uk or nptcallcentreuk@liberata.com or 0845 601 5945

Connecting for the future: young people and inter faith relations in Britain.

The Inter Faith Network held its national meeting in Coventry on 27 June on the theme "Connecting for the Future: Young People and Inter Faith Relations in Britain."

As the UK becomes increasingly religiously diverse, it becomes ever more important for young people to become involved in inter faith projects and initiatives and to build bridges of friendship and understanding. In the last few years, an increasing number of inter faith youth projects have been taking place in many parts of the UK. The meeting was a chance to reflect on the challenges of this vital area of work and to hear from, and talk with, some of the UK's younger contributors to building good inter faith relations.

Gaurav Prinja, Hindu participant in the Golden Jubilee Youth Forum and advisory board member for the Connect Guide, offered opening reflections on the vital importance of young people who are active and involved members of the distinct faith communities engaging in work to promote inter faith understanding and cooperation.

Dr Harriet Crabtree, Deputy Director of the Inter Faith Network gave an opening taster of the range of different kinds of youth inter activities happening in the UK and Sue Houlton of the National Youth Agency discussed how faith and inter faith issues fitted into the NYA's work. In a later workshop, Maxine Green talked about the NYA's new resource, A Sense of Respect: Inter

Faith Activities for Groups of Young People.

Further information on this can be found on NYA's website: www.nya.org.uk

Jagtar Singh, Sikh member of the Scottish Inter Faith Youth Council, and Dr Maureen Sier of the Scottish Inter Faith Council told the story of the second Scottish inter faith youth conference, which was held in Glasgow in November and attended by over 150 young people from all over Scotland. During a workshop later in the day, SIFC Youth Council colleagues, Haroon and Fariha Ahmed shared their experiences of taking part in the conference.

Rebecca Niknam of the Maimonides Foundation gave an insight into how the Foundation helps develop good relations between young people through football and art, as well as more traditional modes of dialogue.

Sofia Maskin from the Muslim tradition and Rachael Gilbert from the Catholic Christian tradition talked about their involvement in the Intercultural Leadership School in Bradford and Leicester respectively and the impact taking part has had on their lives.

Graham Langtree, RE Adviser at the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority, looked at the contribution which RE can make to promoting understanding and respect for different faiths and beliefs. He explained how the first non-statutory National Framework for RE in England, recently published by the QCA, flags up the importance of pupils studying not just different religions but also how people of different faiths and beliefs relate to each other.

In a closing panel, reflections on the way forward were offered by Preet Majithia, President, Cambridge University Hindu Cultural Society, a member of Leicester Youth Inter Faith Group; Rowena Loverance, Commission for Inter Faith Relations of Churches Together in Britain and Ireland and member of the Society of Friends; Rauf Bashir, Building Bridges Project and Nelson Muslim community; and Rosalind Preston OBE, Vice-Chair Inter Faith Network.

Workshop topics included: youth inter faith forums and conferences; inter faith dialogue across the generations; youth organisations and inter faith activity; developing inter faith understanding and cooperation on campus; educating for inter faith awareness; and Europe, the Commonwealth, the world (the wider picture for youth inter faith work).

- Dr Sarah Smalley and youth contributors including Lisa Elliott, Raihanna Hirji and Rebecca Owen, discussed the experience of involvement in successful SACRE youth faith forums in Cambridgeshire and Peterborough;
- Malcolm Stonestreet, Chief Executive of United Religions Initiative (UK), described its Spiritual Elders and Emerging Visionaries (SEEV) programme which brings older members and young people of faith traditions together to talk, and Musarrat Tariq, Clare North and John Murray talked about the SEEV event run recently by Nottingham Inter Faith Council.
- Maxine Green, consultant to the National Youth Agency and co-author with Carmel Heaney of the recently published NYA book, Interfaith Action: A Resource Pack for Use with Young People, discussed this new resource.
- Mark Waghorn, Scout Association Programme and Development Adviser, Faiths, Beliefs and BME communities and Daljit Singh, Sikh representative on the Scout Association Faiths and Beliefs Team and member Minority Support Team and Group Scout Leader, 13th Southall discussed Scouting and inter faith activity.
- Louise Mitchell, Council of Christians and Jews' Youth Officer, talked about CCJ's work on campus and Pritesh Karia, student member of Warwick Inter-Religious Roundtable for Dialogue discussed the Roundtable's role and activities.
- Becky Hatch and Imogen Gregg from the Diversity and Dialogue Project talked about its work to get young people of different faiths to come together and find out about global issues and work together constructively for a better world.
- Rauf Bashir, Project Manager, Building Bridges Pendle, Community Inter Faith Project described the Project's work with local schools. Ramona Kauth, Rev Jo Mason and Yvonne Stollard described the Ladywood Interfaith Education Project, Birmingham jointly run by volunteers from different faith communities, which brings primary school students to visit the local places of worship.

- Susanna Darch, of the Royal Commonwealth Society talked about the “Youth CHOGM” project, together with Clare Linton and Niamh Quille, youth presenters from the recent Coventry Youth CHOGM.
- Preet Majithia and J R (Adseina) Alli from the multi faith youth team who went with Minorities of Europe to the Council for a Parliament of World Religions in Barcelona last year spoke of their experiences.

A strong team of volunteer facilitators and note takers and very good support from the conference team helped ensure a most successful and worthwhile day. A full report on the meeting will be available in the Autumn from the Network office.

Meeting of national inter faith bodies of Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales

A meeting for the national inter faith bodies of Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales was held by the Inter Faith Network for the UK at St Mungo’s Museum, 2 Castle Street, Glasgow on 21 June. It was hosted by the Scottish Inter Faith Council and chaired by SIFC’s Convenor, Diana Wolfson. Topics of discussion included: how information can best be shared between the different national bodies and the UK Network so as to learn from each other’s experiences; involving faith communities effectively; how to make bodies ‘representative’ of the faiths; working with Government and other agencies; funding and staffing questions; and work on diversity training and equal opportunities. There were reports on the recent work of all the bodies represented, as well as a chance to hear about how they came into being and the ways they work.

Scotland

The Scottish Inter Faith Council held their annual inter faith event for women on 26 July. This year the event took place in the Scottish Parliament and women from diverse faiths and from the different geographical regions of Scotland came together to enjoy a day of activities including a tour of the Parliament building, workshops on contemplation and presentations from Parliamentary Departments, including a welcome from Shona Baird MSP and former Religious Reporter to Parliament.

The third local inter faith group networking conference took place in Dundee on 15 May. Members of Scottish groups convened to discuss how to sustain and develop their activities.

An East Renfrewshire Faith Forum has recently been formed, with participation from eight faiths and from East Renfrewshire local authorities. Members travelled together on 10 April to attend the annual Vaisakhi celebrations in Glasgow, to join in holy day celebrations of two of the Forum’s members. A new inter faith group has also recently been formed in Fife. Further information about the new bodies from sifc@interfaithscotland.org Tel 0141 429 4012.

Wales

Schools from across Wrexham County Borough came together from 11–16 July to celebrate the fourth biennial ‘Tapestry of Life and Faith’ festival. Events and workshops helped Wrexham’s school children to explore their own as well as different cultures and traditions. Alan Schwartz of the Inter Faith Council for Wales was the keynote speaker at the festival’s launch and talked about the importance of good inter faith relations.

Alif-Aleph report

A new report from Alif-Aleph UK – A Mapping Report of Positive Contact between British Muslims and British Jews – was launched at Westminster Central Hall on 5 July 2005. Home Office Minister Paul Goggins, Secretary General of the Muslim Council of Britain, Sir Iqbal Sacranie, and the President of the Board of Deputies of British Jews, Henry Grunwald QC spoke at the launch.

The report reveals positive relations between Jews and Muslims in the UK and explodes the commonly held assumption that Muslims and Jews have no contact with each other, know little about each other and fear or even hate each other. It also underlines the common experience of discrimination that both communities face in the form of Islamophobia and anti-semitism. Among the report's findings are that dialogue and inter faith activity can be at its strongest where there is tension between Jews and Muslims or discrimination from others outside of either community and that many Muslims and Jews recognise the benefit of addressing Islamophobia and Anti-semitism together. The report issues recommendations in the area of education, creative activities, 'safe space', the role of leaders and facilitating better relations on campus. For further information about the report, contact Alif-Aleph at 020 7472 6061 or download the report from the 'downloads page' at www.aauk.org

Wyndham Place Charlemagne Trust discusses Anti-Semitism and Islamophobia

The Wyndham Place Charlemagne Trust held a lunchtime discussion, "Anti-Semitism and Islamophobia: Two Sides of the Same Coin?" on 7 April with presenters Imam Dr Abduljalil Sajid and Sidney Shipton of the Three Faiths Forum and discussant Dr Edie Friedman of the Jewish Council for Racial Equality. The meeting took place at St Ethelburga's Centre for Reconciliation and Peace, in London, whose Director Simon Keyes was in the chair.

Maimonides

Around 90 participants from the Abrahamic faiths took part in a one-day seminar at the Gustave Tuck Lecture Theatre, University College London on 19 June. The seminar commemorated the 800th anniversary of Maimonides' death and celebrated his legacy to the Jewish and Muslim world. It was arranged by the Maimonides Foundation in association with the Assembly of Masorti Synagogues and called "Moses Maimonides: Bridging the Divide". Jewish and Muslim scholars (religious and secular) presented papers on Maimonides' contribution to, and influence on, the development of philosophy and theology in both Judaism and Islam. Further information can be found at www.maimonides-foundation.org.

Religions for Peace – from dialogue to action

Religions for Peace (UK) held an inter faith workshop on 5 June on the theme 'Moving from dialogue to action for justice and peace'. The workshop was developed out of inter faith dialogue for peace and reconciliation in West Africa. Further information about the workshop and about Religions for Peace's work is available from hopeis@btinternet.com.

Mystic India

The Royal World Charity Premiere of a new film, Mystic India, was held at the Imax Cinema of The Science Museum, London in the presence of their Royal Highnesses The Prince of Wales and The Duchess of Cornwall on the evening of 7 June. The event was co-hosted by the Mayor of London, Ken Livingstone, and BAPS Care International. The gates of the museum were draped with flowers and the royal party were garlanded and had customary threads of friendship tied to their wrists. The Science Museum was transformed into an exhibition of Indian culture and art with various artefacts, dances, musicians and craftsmen creating an authentic atmosphere. Over 50 young children from different nations across the globe assembled together waving flags from their respective countries and were dressed in their national attire as a symbol of such unity. The guests of many faiths were guided through the presentations and were offered a selection of Indian sweets and snacks after the film to complement their cultural experience.

Europe's local and regional authorities encourage inter faith engagement

The Congress of Local and Regional Authorities (CLRAE) met in Strasbourg between 31 May and 2 June. Its 12th Plenary Session considered a Resolution and a Recommendation on 'Intercultural and inter-faith dialogue: initiatives and responsibilities of local authorities'. These were presented for adoption by Cllr Mary Hunt of Waverley District Council. The tabled report contained a separate annex reviewing inter faith activity in the UK and the support given to this by central and local government here.

CLRAE's 2/2005 Bulletin reports: "Local and regional executives are in a key position to work together towards better cohesion of their communities, which are increasingly diverse in religious and cultural terms. ... The [Congress] Rapporteurs list a whole host of possible initiatives, ranging from efforts to combat exclusion through the teaching of tolerance and respect to young people to the setting up of local inter faith councils".

In its Recommendation, the Congress asks all relevant Council of Europe bodies to organise jointly a major conference in 2006 to promote greater public recognition in Europe of the cultural and religious diversity that enriches the continent.

For further information see www.coe.int/t/e/CLRAE/. The website includes the report presented to this spring's conference and the full text of the Resolution and Recommendation adopted at it.

Toc H 'Tea and Cake' project

The charity Toc H is launching a nation-wide 'Tea and Cake' Campaign which will run from 11 September to 11 November. The campaign encourages people to invite members of another religious or minority group for refreshments as a way of building friendship and community. A copy of the leaflet about the campaign, including guidance on holding a 'Tea and Cake' event can be found at www.toch.org.uk/documents/teaandcakeleaflet.doc or Madeleine Fone, tel 01296 642020 email info@toch.org.uk, can provide further information.

BBC Charter Review

The House of Lords Select Committee on the BBC Charter Review is extending its inquiry into the BBC. Among other issues, it is asking for views on Religious Broadcasting, and, in particular, the questions: "Do different faiths (including no faith beliefs) figure sufficiently in BBC programmes and services? How should faiths be represented in BBC programmes, services and governance?"

The deadline for submitting written evidence is 10 October. Submissions should be sent to : Rita Logan, Select Committee on the BBC Review, House of Lords, London SW1A 0PW Tel 020 7219 5765 Fax 020 7219 4931 and preferably also as an email attachment to loganr@parliament.uk

The Committee's first report on the Government's Green Paper "Review of the BBC's Royal Charter: A strong BBC, independent of Government" will be published in late October. Alongside new evidence submitted in the context of this extension of the inquiry, any relevant written evidence already submitted to the current inquiry into the Green Paper will be considered and there is no need to resubmit it for this purpose.

British delegation to Bali inter faith dialogue

Foreign and Commonwealth Office Minister, Kim Howells and the Indonesian Foreign Minister, Hassan Wirayuda co-chaired an Interfaith Dialogue with the 38 Asia Europe Meeting (ASEM) countries on 21 July in Bali. Dr Howells delivered a keynote speech highlighting the shared responsibility to encourage inter faith dialogue to counter rising extremism. Sir Iqbal Sacranie, Secretary General of the Muslim Council of Britain, Dilwar Hussain of the Islamic Foundation and Rt Rev David Gillett, the Bishop of Bolton, accompanied Kim Howells. The dialogue concluded with an agreed Bali Declaration on 22 July. This included an expression of sympathy for the victims of the London bombings and stressed the need to stand united against those who misused religion to further their aims. The Bali declaration can be found at www.fco.gov.uk/Files/KFile/BALI%20DECLARATION%20ASEM220705.pdf

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Two leaders of the UK's Jewish and Muslim communities knighted

Dr Jonathan Sacks, the Chief Rabbi, and Iqbal Sacranie, Secretary General of the Muslim Council of Britain, were knighted in the Queen's Birthday Honours in June. Chief Rabbi Sir Jonathan Sacks has led the United Hebrew Congregations of the Commonwealth since 1991 and Sir Iqbal Sacranie has played a key role in the Muslim community, including helping establish and leading the Muslim Council of Britain. The Chief Rabbi was knighted for his services to the community and to inter faith relations and Sir Iqbal for his services to the community, charity and community relations.

New Archbishop of York appointed

The current Bishop of Birmingham, Rt Rev Dr John Sentamu, has been appointed as the next Archbishop of York, with responsibility for fourteen dioceses from Carlisle to the Midlands.

Dr Sentamu was born and brought up in Uganda. He practised law there and became a high court judge before having to flee to Britain in 1974 following persecution by the Idi Amin regime. He studied for his doctorate in theology at Cambridge University and was ordained in 1979. He went on to become Bishop of Stepney in 1996 and, while there, was an adviser to the Stephen Lawrence judicial inquiry and became chairman of the Damilola Taylor review in 2002. In 2002 he became Bishop of Birmingham. He has been involved in a number of inter faith initiatives.

Guy Wilkinson

Rev Guy Wilkinson has been appointed as the Church of England's National Inter Faith Relations Adviser and Secretary for Inter Faith Relations to the Archbishop of Canterbury. This new post combines the staff responsibilities of the national inter faith work of the Church of England with support for Archbishop's work in this area.

Sternberg Interfaith Award

On 31 May, the presentation of the 26th Annual Sternberg Interfaith Award took place at the National Portrait Gallery in London. The two recipients were George Mallinckrodt KBE (a Patron of the Three Faiths Forum) and Dr Khalid Hameed CBE. The award is given as a mark of recognition and encouragement to an individual who has made a contribution to furthering Christian- Jewish-Muslim relations.

Rabbi Tann's inter faith work recognised

Rabbi Leonard Tann was awarded a Doctor of Letters (DLitt) on 13 July by Aston University in recognition of his inter faith work in Birmingham. For almost 19 years Rabbi Leonard Tann has held the position of Chief Minister at the Singers Hill Synagogue in Birmingham. During this time the Rabbi has been involved with many church groups and faith leaders within the City to pursue his passion for inter faith work.

REGIONAL AND LOCAL UPDATE

East of England

On 21 July the East of England Faiths Council (EEFC) held a launch, at the Cheneygates Room in Westminster Abbey, of a report 'Faith in the East of England'. The report is a study of faith based activity in the region. The day was chaired by Rev Erial Kirby, faiths representative on the East of England Regional Assembly (EERA). Speakers and panellists included Lord Ahmed of Rotherham; Rt Rev Christopher Herbert, Bishop of St Albans; Rt Rev Dr John Inge, Bishop of Huntingdon; Lord Janner of Braunstone; Zafar Khan, EEFC Co-Chair; Andrew Lansley, MP for South Cambridgeshire; Dr Roland Lovatt, University of Cambridge; David Rayner of the Neighbourhood Renewal Unit of the ODPM and Secretary to the Inner Cities Religious Council; Ellis Weinberger, EEFC Co-Chair; and Chris White, Deputy Chair of EERA.

The study was funded by the East of England Development Agency and the research was undertaken by the East of England Faiths Council and the University of Cambridge. It estimates that there are over 630,000 active members of worshipping communities in the region, which has a population of 5,388,000. The report reveals that faith communities in that one region alone are contributing over £30 million in volunteer time every year. An enormous range of activities supported by worshipping communities are taking place every day, from the 'traditional' such as visiting the sick (80% of faith groups do this) and running lunch clubs (36%) to the more innovative such as IT training (7%) and environmental groups (11%). Reaching beyond the worshipping community is important. For example, the report found that 20% of respondents work with homeless people, 32% undertake food distribution, and there is also assistance provided to those abusing alcohol (16%) and drugs (11%). 26% of faith groups are involved in community liaison of various types: for example, 18% have anti-racist projects; 12% have crime prevention projects, and 14% are part of emergency planning programmes. The report draws attention to the way that all faiths can speak with one voice on the value of human life, and that almost every section of society benefits from the presence and work of faith groups.

Bedford

Bedford Council of Faiths' annual pilgrimage took place on 13 April. It visited the Jame Mosque, the Roman Catholic church of St Francesca Cabrini, and Sri Guru Ravidass Bhawan.

Bury St Edmunds

On four evenings in April and May, St Edmundsbury Cathedral hosted a series of Christian/Muslim dialogues organised by Suffolk Inter-Faith Resource and the Lay Education Adviser for the Anglican Diocese, in conjunction with Churches Together in Bury St Edmunds. These looked at: Globalisation and Consumerism; Governance and Democratic Society; Human Rights; and Justice and the Rule of Law. Discussions on these themes are being held in 80 venues around the world and the results are to form the basis of a report to the Archbishop of Canterbury's Observer at the United Nations on whether there is evidence for a so-called "clash of civilizations" between Islam and the West.

Over 100 people from different Christian and Muslim backgrounds and from other faiths, took part in the seminars in Bury St Edmunds. Each evening consisted of introductory talks by a representative of each of the two faiths, followed by a discussion with an invited panel and then with the audience. It was emphasised by all the speakers that both Christians and Muslims are taught the importance of living in peace and harmony with their neighbours, whatever their faith. A report of the discussions can be found on www.sifre.org.uk and copies can be obtained by emailing mcdm@sifre.org.uk. Follow up meetings are now being planned.

East Midlands of England

Local artists contributed paintings, photographs and other forms of visual art to an exhibition entitled 'Flowerings of Belief', arranged by Nottingham Inter Faith Council and held at Bluecoat School from 6 June to 10 July and subsequently at Nottingham Central Library until 13 August. The purpose of the exhibition is to reflect people's artistic responses to what they believe, how their beliefs affect their life and how they have sought to communicate their feelings to others through the visual arts.

Camden and Islington

Westminster Interfaith's annual pilgrimage took place in North London on 4 June, wending its way through Camden and Islington. The pilgrimage set off from Friends House, Euston Road, and took in a mosque in Crowndale Road; the Greek Orthodox Cathedral in Kentish Town Road; Our Lady Help of Christians Roman Catholic Church in Kentish Town (where a sandwich lunch was served by members of the Sachkhand Nanak Dham International who had brought this down specially from Birmingham); the Shaolin (Chinese Buddhist) Temple in Junction Road; the Murugan (Saivite Hindu) Temple in Archway Road; and St Mellitus Roman Catholic Church, Tollington Park where a meal had been prepared by their Justice and Peace group.

Islington

During June–July, 20 Muslim and Jewish 9–12 year old boys and girls played football in mixed faith teams for three Sundays at Arsenal FC. This was organised by the Maimonides Foundation with coaching support from Arsenal in the Community. The programme was initiated by the Maimonides Foundation over five years ago. The children are recommended by Muslim, Jewish and secular schools, mosques, synagogues and faith-based community centres. This year, ten Muslim organisations and schools across greater London, and Jewish children from Orthodox, Reform and Liberal congregations participated in the programme.

Kensington and Chelsea

A group of women from St Pius X Roman Catholic Church in the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea (RBKC) recently visited the Muslim Cultural Heritage Centre and a meeting was arranged between them and some Muslim women who work at the Centre. The women found they had a lot in common to talk about and felt that anything that helps them to learn about each other's faiths will bring women of all faiths together to work for the common good of the whole community. Forum of Faiths Kensington and Chelsea has decided that across the coming year arrangements will be made to give women of all faiths linked to the Forum a chance to meet and talk. The process will be serviced by the Community Relations Section of RBKC.

South London

In April, South London Inter Faith Group and Wimbledon Inter Faith Group were invited by the Sikh Khalsa Centre in Tooting to join in their Vaisakhi celebrations.

In July, members of South London Inter Faith Group took part in its annual inter faith walk which this year took place in Lambeth, beginning at the Caribbean Hindu Temple and finishing at Jamyang Buddhist Centre.

Tower Hamlets

The Diversity and Dialogue project is running an inter faith project in Island House community centre in the Isle of Dogs. The centre has a Christian basis but is also used as a Mosque and for Qu'ran classes by the Muslim community. During the project Diversity and Dialogue is working with a Muslim and a Christian group of young people. They are discussing their own faiths and learning about the symbols and art of the two religions. This will lead to the creation of a welcome sign, combining the two artistic traditions, which will be displayed in the entrance to the centre, after touring around different venues on the island. Further information from Becky Hatch, r.hatch@savethechildren.org.uk or on 020 7012 6438.

North West England

In May about forty members of Churches Together in Cumbria with their chair Rt Rev James Newcome, Bishop of Penrith, visited Preston for a “Meet your Neighbour” event. They visited the Gujarat Hindu Society Temple and heard about the Hindu community and the Hindu religion from the GHS president Ishwer Tailor. Lunch was South Asian food in a community centre with members of Preston Faith Forum. Father Michael Murphy spoke about inter faith practice in the city. The event ended in the Clarendon Street mosque with an explanation of Islam and an opportunity for questions with the imam Maulana Said Ahmed. This is the third year such a visit has been arranged.

Rev Malcolm Stonestreet, chair of the North West Multi Faith Tourist Association, organised a visit to Cumbria for Churches Together in Cumbria on 30 April for nearly 50 faith leaders and family groups from Accrington, Blackburn, and Nelson to visit Muncaster Castle and St Catherine’s Church in Eskdale. At the church the vicar gave a brief presentation about the Eucharist. At the end of the day there was a meeting to discuss possible future events and projects. Ideas included a possible inter faith festival in Cumbria (which is now being planned for next July at Rydal Hall); a mixed faith outward bound week; and tourist information leaflets in Asian languages.

South East England

Crawley

The launch of Crawley Interfaith Network took place on 25 June. The keynote speaker was Dr Indarjit Singh of the Network of Sikh Organisations and Thought for the Day. Further information from fatima.mirza@crawley.gov.uk

South West England

Bristol

Bristol Inter Faith Group’s annual Inter Faith Walk took place on 9 July. One of the places its visited was the Shah Jalal mosque where, sadly, they were still clearing up broken glass after windows were smashed on the night of 8 July.

West Midlands of England

Bishop’s Tachbrook

The Anglican Diocese of Coventry reports on a recent story of Sikh-Christian friendship and goodwill. Manjit Singh, the proprietor of the local village stores in Bishop’s Tachbrook, presented Rev Mervyn Roberts, Vicar of St Chad’s, Bishop’s Tachbrook with cash collected in his shop for £222.67 matched with a cheque for the same amount. The friendship between the shop owners and the church has grown over the years. The presentation to the church was made at the Village Fete. Rev Roberts said, “We are very fortunate to have a local shop and a village church both alive and active. It is particularly good to have developed a link that means we can respect, support and learn from each other’s faiths as well as work for the material and spiritual needs of our community.”

Yorkshire and Humber

Bradford

On 19 May, the Bradford Concord Inter Faith Society Pauline Stefanuti memorial lecture was given by Adeeba Malik on the topic of ‘Turning Challenges into Opportunities’. She addressed the challenges of living in a multi faith society – particularly Bradford – and looked at how these can be turned into opportunities for change and development in the community.

On 24 June, Bradford Concord held its annual Multi Faith Walk for Friendship, visiting places of worship and meeting people of different faiths. This year it visited the Brahma Kumaris Centre, the Hussainia Islamic Mission, St Joseph’s Roman Catholic church, and Guru Nanak Gurdwara.

Kirklees

On 6 July ‘Interfaith Kirklees’ was launched at Huddersfield Town Hall. This unique educational project involves the development of seven ‘faith centres’ where school children will actively engage with the faith of the community at that place of worship. The seven centres are: the Minster Church of All Saints, Dewsbury; Huddersfield Parish Church; the Hindu Society of Kirklees and Calderdale, Huddersfield;

Masjid-e-Noor, Batley; Nafial Institute, Huddersfield; Vajrapani Buddhist Centre, Huddersfield; and a Sikh faith centre involving the Shri Guru Singh Sabha Temple and Guru Nanak Sikh Sangat Temple in Huddersfield.

At each centre, students find artefacts, displays and on-line facilities. Trained guides from the faith community are there to welcome pupils and support them through an interactive experience using packages designed by practising teachers and other professionals within the community. The project is not just for students – the centres are places for Kirklees residents to find out more about the faith of their neighbours.

The project is funded from the Home Office's 'Connecting Communities Fund' and is overseen by Kirklees Racial Equality Council, with project partners Kirklees SACRE, North Kirklees Interfaith Council, Huddersfield Interfaith Council, faith communities across Kirklees, Kirklees Metropolitan Council and the Government Office for Yorkshire and Humber. Further information from Terry Murnane, Project Manager, tel 01484 540225 or www.interfaithkirklees.org.uk

North Lincolnshire Council

Multi Faith Partnership members from different religions, in a first for North Lincolnshire Council, gathered to say prayers at the annual meeting of the council on Wednesday 11 May at Pittwood House in Scunthorpe, when the new Mayor and Deputy Mayor was elected. The council invited the public to attend. The Mayor elect Cllr William Eckhardt, at all future full council meetings, will take prayers from a wide range of religious beliefs.

Sheffield

Sheffield Interfaith held their AGM on 8 May at the Quaker Meeting House. It featured storytelling, poetry and music from members of different faiths and cultures, including the poet Debjani Chatterjee.

CSV Make a Difference Day – 29 October

CSV (Community Service Volunteers) Make a Difference Day is the UK's biggest day of hands-on volunteering and takes place on 29 October 2005.

Everyone has skills and experiences that others would benefit from. As an individual, you could join a local group that needs volunteers for their CSV Make a Difference Day activity, or organise your own. You can get involved in a whole range of projects, from teaching young people the basics of web design to building a sensory garden for the disabled.

You can search the online Activity Locator service for opportunities taking place in your area. As an organisation or group, arranging your own activity for the day gives you a great opportunity to attract new volunteers; build good relations in your local community; bring people together to meet a particular local need; and raise awareness of a particular campaign issue. For more information, activity ideas and to register, log onto www.csv.org.uk/difference or call the CSV Make a Difference Day freephone on 0800 284 533.

Funds boost faith based work for cohesion

In February, the Home Office announced that the Faith Community Capacity Building Fund has enabled a range of grants from £5,000 to £50,000 to be made to 578 organisations for faith community capacity building to increase community cohesion and inter faith activity across England and Wales. The funding will give much needed support to an area of work which has not been well funded to date and will make possible many new inter faith projects as well as the strengthening of existing ones. The Community Development Foundation were commissioned by the Home Office to run the Fund and are also taking forward the second round, details of which are due to be announced this summer. An interview with CDF's Director of Projects, Debbie Ladds, responsible for CDF's work on the Fund appears on page 18.

CDF are also responsible for administering the new Connecting Communities Plus - Communities Grants programme for small locally managed organisations running local projects. One of the themes of this programme is 'bringing together communities from different races and faiths and promoting a shared sense of belonging (community cohesion)'.

Further information can be found at www.cdf.org.uk The closing date for applications is 5 July.

Equality Act reaches the statute book

The Equality Act received the Royal Assent on 16 February. The enactment of this important piece of legislation is the culmination of a lengthy process which goes back to the adoption, at the end of 2000, by the European Council of Ministers of a Directive dealing with discrimination in the employment field relating to the six 'strands' of disability, gender, race, religion and belief, sexual orientation and age. This led to Government consultations on the best way to provide institutional support on discrimination in these fields, given that the Disability Rights Commission, the Equal Opportunities Commission and the Commission for Racial Equality were already in place. The question was whether to set up a new body to cover the remaining strands of religion and belief, age and sexual orientation; to set up three separate bodies covering each of these strands; or to create a new body bringing together the existing Commissions and covering the new strands as well. It was this final option which emerged as the preferred way forward and the Equality Act makes provision for the setting up of a single Commission for Equality and Human Rights. Successive stages on the path to this point have been charted in previous issues of Inter Faith Update.

New resources from the Inter Faith Network

In March, the Network published a third edition of Inter Faith Organisations in the UK: A Directory. The new edition contains contact details and short descriptions of the work and structure of over 250 organisations working to promote good inter faith relations at UK-wide, national, regional and local level, 42 of which are new listings. ISBN 1 902906 24 1 Available from the Inter Faith Network at £7.50 (including £1.55 postage and packing). A sample page from the directory showing a local inter faith group entry can be found at www.interfaith.org.uk/orderdirectory.htm

To produce the directory, every entry was checked with bodies listed. Regional inter faith bodies were asked to let the Network know of any new local bodies which had emerged since the last issue and in Scotland the Scottish Inter Faith Council ensured that new initiatives could be approached for inclusion. The decision has been made to make the directory available only in hard copy at this stage but e-mail contact addresses for all regional and local inter faith groups willing to have these listed on the internet have been added to the Network's website at www.interfaith.org.uk/local/directory.htm

Looking After One Another: The Safety and Security of Our Faith Communities

As reported in the last issue of Inter Faith Update, the Network produced, shortly after the bombings of 7 July, in consultation with the Commission for Racial Equality, the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Chief Fire Officers' Association, guidelines for faith community organisations working together to respond to inter-community tensions and to attacks, or the threat of attacks, on places of worship or other faith community property. These guidelines had been developed following a meeting convened by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Rowan Williams, at Lambeth Palace some months earlier. The guidelines were widely distributed by e-mail but following requests for hard copy, they have been produced, with assistance from a Home Office project grant, as an A4 leaflet. The pdf can be downloaded free from the Network's website www.interfaith.org.uk or single copies are free with an A4 sized SAE from the Network office. Bulk copies can be ordered. To enquire e-mail gaylina.nguyen@interfaith.org.uk

New 'local inter faith zone' for the Network's website

During the last six months, the Network's website has received a major facelift and has had a new section added: 'The Local Inter Faith Zone'. This links to the recently published second edition of The Local Inter Faith Guide (published by the Network in association with the Inner Cities Religious Council, 2005 ISBN 1 902906 1 95. Price £6.95 plus £1.75 postage and packing from the Network office). Work on the website has been carried out for the Inter Faith Network by Bhupinder Singh, its former Information Officer.

Inter Faith Update

Inter Faith Update is the newsletter of the Inter Faith Network for the UK. It keeps a wide range of organisations and individuals interested in developing good inter faith relations in the UK in touch with UK events and projects with a significant inter faith component.

Please send any items and diary dates for consideration for inclusion in the next issue by 5 September to: The Newsletter Editor, Inter Faith Network, 8A Lower Grosvenor Place, London SW1W 0EN or e-mail to harriet.crabtree@interfaith.org marking your e-mail 'newsletter'.

NETWORK NEWS

Faith communities discuss faith and citizenship

As part of the Inter Faith Network's 'Faith and Citizenship' project a special meeting of the Network's Faith Communities Consultative Forum was held in London on 6 December. Brian Pearce, the Network's Director, introduced the project and set the scene for the day's discussions. He was followed by Judith Lempriere, Head of the Home Office's Cohesion and Faiths Unit, offering a Government perspective, and there were also presentations from Dr Manazir Ahsan, Director General of the Islamic Foundation and a Network Vice-Chair, and Sister Isabel Smyth, former Chief Executive of the Scottish Inter Faith Council and Secretary of the Churches Agency for Inter Faith Relations of Action of Churches Together in Scotland.

There were four contributions from different faith communities reflecting on aspects of inter faith relations and engagement with wider society to work together, as citizens, for the common good. These were from Miriam Kaye, Interfaith Officer of the Board of Deputies of British Jews; Barnabas Leith, Secretary for External Affairs of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the UK and a Network Vice-Chair; and Anil Bhanot, General Secretary of the Hindu Council (UK).

Anne Breivik, the Network's 'Faith and Citizenship' Project Officer, spoke about the importance of faith communities helping with materials for schools on faith and citizenship and about the forthcoming February seminar on the educational dimensions of the Network's project.

Throughout the day there were lively plenary sessions with a wide range of contributions from those attending the meeting.

From the day's proceedings there emerged a shared recognition of the need for members of faith communities to make a positive contribution to the development of British society; a positive approach to civic identity even if the legal connotations of citizenship can be more problematic; and a need for a nuanced and inclusive understanding of 'British' identity.

Educating for Shared Citizenship

On 7 February the Inter Faith Network, in association with the Citizenship Foundation, organised a seminar on 'Faith, Identity and Belonging; Educating for Shared Citizenship' to explore how schools can best help in preparing young people for life in multi-faith and multicultural society and how teachers tackle issues related to faith and citizenship in the classroom and to discuss such key issues as:

- How do faith identities affect understanding of British citizenship?
- How do we handle our multiple identities and loyalties?
- How does our UK citizenship interrelate with our international links and our responsibilities as global citizens?
- What does it mean to educate for shared citizenship within this complex of identities?

The event brought together over seventy invited specialists in Religious Education and Citizenship Education and members of faith communities. There were presentations from key people within RE and Citizenship Education, reflections from the classroom and young people's perspectives. Substantial time was set aside for plenary discussion since one of the overall aims of the day was to establish contact and dialogue between the different communities represented at the seminar. The working group session in the afternoon allowed participants to delve deeper into some more specific aspects of the day's focus.

The day was jointly chaired by Brian Pearce, the Network's Director, and Don Rowe, Director of Curriculum Resources, the Citizenship Foundation. Speakers included Tony Breslin, Chief Executive, Citizenship Foundation; John Keast, Consultant to the DfES on Religious Education and Intercultural Education; Balbir Sohal, Advisory Teacher for Citizenship, PSHE and Equalities, Coventry Local Authority; Rauf Bashir, Projects Manager, Building Bridges Pendle; Clare Giles, Citizenship Coordinator, Whitstable Community College, Kent; Deepa Mashru, Leicester Inter Faith Youth Group; and Sophia Ashraf, Bradford Student Shadow SACRE.

Coming out of the day was the acknowledgement that schools and teachers were facing substantial challenges within the field of faith and citizenship. The need for more resources and teacher training was highlighted, as was the need for schools to establish closer links with the community. Despite the room for improvement, there were examples of several projects that have very successfully addressed faith and citizenship. A lot of the debate in the plenary sessions revolved around issues of identity and belonging.

A report on the day's proceedings will be available from the Network's office in early May, cost £4.50 including postage and packaging.

Faith Communities Consultative Forum

The Faith Communities Consultative Forum of the Inter Faith Network met on 27 October and discussed the Home Office's consultation document, Preventing Extremism Together: Places of Worship and the Government's Terrorism Bill, as well as noting the position reached by then on the Racial and Religious Hatred Bill and the Equality Bill and on preparations for setting up the new Commission for Equality and Human Rights.

Meeting of national inter faith organisations

A meeting of representatives of national inter faith organisations was held by the Inter Faith Network in London on 24 November. There was a useful exchange of news and plans and also discussion on issues connected with the Network's current membership review.

Local inter faith link meetings in the North West and South West

The Inter Faith Network held regional meetings for local inter faith organisers in the North West in Bolton on 13 December and South West in Bristol on 28 March. These were a chance for sharing of news and discussion of their work.

Network newsletter

The current issue of Inter Faith Issue is a double one. The Autumn/Winter issue was delayed and the Network Office apologises to readers for this.

NATIONAL UPDATE

The CEHR is due to become operational in October 2007 when it will take on the work of the Equal Opportunities and Disability Rights Commissions, together with responsibilities in the field of age, religion and belief and sexual orientation. Responsibility for race matters will be transferred to the CEHR from the Commission for Racial Equality in 2009. The Commission will cover England, Scotland and Wales. In Scotland and Wales there will be statutory committees responsible for the work of the CEHR. In addition to its work in the area of discrimination, the CEHR will be charged with the promotion and protection of human rights, providing institutional support for the Human Rights Act and the promotion of good relations between members of different groups, and between members of those groups and others.

The CEHR will have a duty to consult with stakeholders to ensure that all groups have an opportunity to participate and engage in its work and a duty to monitor progress on equality, human rights and good relations between communities through publishing a regular 'state of the nation' report on these matters.

In February the Commission for Racial Equality launched a proposal that a new non-governmental body should be set up, alongside the CEHR, to guide, advise and mediate on community relations, civic engagement and citizenship, arguing that this would complement the work of the CEHR by focusing on the distinct challenges presented by community relations work. The CRE's proposal can be found at www.cre.gov.uk/newbody.

Secondary legislation enacted at the end of 2003 under the European Communities Act 1972 gave effect to the 2000 European Directive in the employment field in relation to religion or belief and to sexual orientation. Regulations, relating to discrimination in employment on the grounds of age, were recently approved by Parliament and are due to come into force in October.

Part II of the Equality Act makes unlawful discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief in the provision of goods, facilities, services, premises, education and the exercise of public functions. It also provides powers to outlaw, by secondary legislation, discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation in the provision of goods, facilities, services, premises, education and the exercise of public functions. The Department of Trade and Industry is at present consulting on a draft of these regulations (see page 6). It is intended to bring into effect in October of this year both the powers in the Equality Act in relation to religion or belief and the secondary legislation in relation to sexual orientation. The Equality Act also creates a new duty on public authorities to promote equality of opportunity between men and women and to prohibit sex discrimination in the exercise of public functions.

The Religion and Belief Consultative Group on Equality, Diversity and Human Rights brings together representatives of faith community organisations and also of the British Humanist Association and the National Secular Society to monitor and discuss developments in the equality and diversity field. It is chaired by Barnabas Leith of the Baha'i community, a Vice-Chair of the Inter Faith Network. It keeps in close touch with the work of the Government's Steering Group which is preparing the way for the setting up of the Commission for Equality and Human Rights and also with progress on the Equalities Review and Discrimination Law Review.

The Equalities Review issued its interim report on 21 March (see page 6). The parallel Discrimination Law Review is examining the effectiveness of current anti-discrimination legislation and identifying gaps in protection for some groups. It is intended that the work of the two reviews should lead to a new Single Equality Act bringing together legislation on discrimination into one legal framework and the Government has committed itself to enacting this during the lifetime of the present Parliament.

Further Government measures on sexual orientation and discrimination

On 13 March the Department of Trade and Industry published a consultation paper outlining the Government's intention to introduce regulations in October 2006 to be made under the Equality Act 2006 to prohibit sexual discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation in the provision of goods, facilities and services, the use of premises, education and the exercise of public functions. In December 2003, sexual orientation discrimination was made unlawful in the workplace and in the provision of occupational training, but there were specific exemptions for religious organisations.

The new draft regulations prohibit direct and indirect discrimination and victimisation, but not harassment. The Government's consultation paper recognises that "there may be circumstances where the new regulations could impact on aspects of religious activity or practice in the light of the doctrines of some faiths concerning sexual orientation and the beliefs of their followers" and views are invited on the impact that the regulations may have in these areas. The document says that "any exceptions would need to be clearly defined", and, it suggests, "limited to activities closely linked to religious observance or practices that arise from the basic doctrines of a faith". The document does not envisage any exemptions from the general prohibition on sexual orientation discrimination in contexts where a religious organisation provides a wider service to the community with a social or welfare aspect; where a religious organisation is contracted by a public authority to deliver a service on its behalf; or where a service is provided on a commercial basis.

Responses to the consultation are required by 5 June. The consultation document is also available from DTI publications ADMAIL 528, London, SW1W 8YT. It can be downloaded from www.dti.gov.uk/consultations/files/publication-1606.pdf

Interim report of equalities review

The current Equalities Review, chaired by Trevor Philips, Chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality, is looking at the root causes of inequality and how these can be tackled. It issued its interim report on 21 March. This has been published in order to provide a basis for the wider public debate which it hopes will inform its final report.

The Review has been invited by the Prime Minister to consider especially those areas of inequality which are not the result of pure economic disadvantage. The interim report suggests that it would be unrealistic to think that socio-economic disadvantages are not an important part of the background to the review but suggests that some kinds of inequalities can be identified which are partly or wholly separate from those caused by socio-economic factors. The Review believes that many of these are not wholly due to the effects of individual prejudice or discrimination or purely the result of cultural situations or choice, but arise from the failures of systems, policies or institutions. The interim report aims to set out the degree to which other kinds of differences or 'domains' besides the ones traditionally called 'class' may lead to individuals or groups of individuals suffering unjust inequalities. It focuses particularly on those inequalities which appear to have persisted over more than one generation and which seem impervious to the efforts to tackle them of Government, civil society or of individuals themselves.

The interim report makes only brief references to religion or belief as a factor in equality. It says that there is very little data available about the impact of this factor on life chances and describes this as being one of the 'data deserts'. Further analysis is being undertaken for the Review which will use data from 1971 onwards from the Office of National Statistics' Longitudinal Study to show how far members of each social group tend to be found to have a similar labour market status at distinct points across their lives. It is hoped that this analysis will also provide more information about the impact of religion or belief on labour market activity.

The interim report is available at www.theequalitiesreview.org.uk

Racial and Religious Hatred Act 2006

The progress through its different Parliamentary stages of the Government's Religious and Racial Hatred Bill was dogged by controversy but there is now an Act on the statute book which received the Royal Assent on 16 February. It applies only to England and Wales. Its provisions will not come into force until the Home Secretary makes an order to this effect.

Following the general election in May last year the Government introduced a Bill which incorporated the provisions which it had dropped in past attempts to enact them, first in the autumn of 2004 when they formed part of the Anti-Terrorism Bill of 2001 and then when they were included in the Serious Organised Crime and Police Bill introduced into Parliament at the end of 2004. In each case the provisions on religious hatred were dropped, in the face of opposition to them in the House of Lords, in order to facilitate the enactment of the main parts of the legislation.

The short new Bill dealing just with incitement to religious hatred, with, as before, provisions parallel to those covering the existing offence of incitement to racial hatred, again provoked demands both inside and outside Parliament for greater safeguards for freedom of speech and expression.

Last autumn the Bill was effectively rewritten as a result of the amendments made to it by the House of Lords despite the Government's opposition to these. They provided that for an offence of stirring up religious hatred to be committed there must have been a clear intention to do so, in addition to words or behaviour having been threatening in character. The amendments also introduced additional safeguards for freedom of expression by providing in the legislation that it does not "prohibit or restrict discussion, criticism or expressions of antipathy, dislike, ridicule, insult or abuse of particular religions or the beliefs or practices of their adherents, or of any other belief system or the beliefs or practices of its adherents, or proselytising or urging adherents of a different religion or belief system to cease practising their religion or belief system".

It seemed at one stage that it might be possible to achieve some form of political compromise but when the Government brought forward its own counter amendments to the Bill on its return, after some delay, to the House of Commons in February of this year, the House rejected these amendments and thereby preserved the amendments which had been made in the House of Lords.

The new Act's provisions, as in the Government's original Bill, deal with the stirring up of hatred against people defined by their religious belief or their lack of religious belief. The Act leaves it to the courts to decide whether any particular belief is a 'religious belief'. The Act also retains the requirement for the Attorney General's agreement to be given before any prosecution can be brought under it.

The debates on this legislation made clear the lack of any broad agreement on the appropriate balance to be struck between freedom of expression and the protection of people against the stirring up of hatred against them on grounds of their religious identity and the extent to which the law should intervene in this.

Tackling extremism: working group reports

Following the London bombings last July, the Home Secretary set up seven working groups of Muslim representatives. The groups focused on the following topics: tackling extremism and radicalisation; engaging with young people; supporting regional and local initiatives and community actions; engaging with women; imam training and accreditation and the role of mosques as a resource for the whole community; providing a full range of education services in the UK, that meet the needs of the Muslim community; and security for the community, including tackling Islamophobia, protecting Muslims from extremism, and building community confidence in policing.

The reports of these working groups were published on 22 September and can be found at communities.homeoffice.gov.uk/raceandfaith/reports\_pubs/publications/race\_faith/255560

Preventing extremism together: places of worship

Following the London bombings last July the Government brought forward a number of measures to deal with terrorism, some of which are contained in the Terrorism Act 2006 which reached the statute book in early April.

In early October last year the Home Office published a consultation document, Preventing Extremism Together: Places of Worship. This proposed that power should be taken whereby those controlling a place of worship could be required by an order of the court to take steps to stop certain extremist behaviour occurring in a place of worship. It was clear that there was considerable concern among faith communities about these proposals. The responses received by the Government queried whether there was sufficient evidence to demonstrate that a power of this kind was required in relation to places of worship and also questioned whether such a power, if taken, should apply only to places of worship and not to other premises where extremism was arguably more likely to arise.

The Government announced on 15 December that it had decided not to proceed with this proposal in the light of the strong support which had been expressed by respondents for joint working and information sharing as the most effective way of stopping any abuse of places of worship by extremists.

Commission on Integration and Cohesion

In September last year the Home Secretary announced that he had written to faith leaders inviting their views on the Government's proposal for a Commission on Integration and Cohesion, an advisory body to be set up on a fixed term basis to identify and tackle ways to overcome barriers to integration. The proposal for this Commission had earlier been announced on 5 August by the Prime Minister as part of a package of responses to the July bombings in London. Since then, discussions about the shape and work of the Commission have been continuing, but it is understood that an announcement is likely to be made soon about the Commission's terms of reference and its membership.

New Faith Communities Consultative Council

Following a number of consultative meetings, the Government is in the process of forming a Faith Communities Consultative Council which will bring together the work of the Inner Cities Religious Council in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister (which was set up in 1992) and of the Steering Group of the Home Office's Working Together review (which reported early in 2004). The new body will be co-chaired by Home Office and ODPM Ministers and it is expected that its first meeting will take place shortly.

Entry into the UK of 'ministers of religion'

A new distinction has been introduced between pastoral and non-pastoral religious workers in terms of the requirements for their entry to the UK. Issue 25 of Inter Faith Update reported in the summer of 2004 on the introduction of new pre-entry requirements for overseas 'ministers of religion' coming to the UK, including having a basic grasp of English. Issue 27 reported in the spring of 2005 that the Hindu and Sikh communities were in discussion with the Home Office about difficulties which they were experiencing as a result of the effects of these entry restrictions.

In December 2005, following the conclusion of further consultation with faith communities, the Home Office announced that it would be introducing a new immigration category for religious workers from abroad. This allows religious workers in non-pastoral roles to come to the UK to work for up to two years and covers workers whose duties include performing religious rites - such as reading the scriptures aloud or tending to the deities - but not preaching to a congregation. Unlike 'ministers of religion', they will not have to speak English, and will not be eligible to settle in the UK. A religious worker in a non-pastoral role will also be prohibited from acting as a 'minister of religion', missionary or member of a religious order, in order to avoid this new category being used to circumvent existing rules.

A further proposal contained in the Government's original consultation - for a post-entry civic knowledge test for 'ministers of religion' - is not now being pursued.

2011 census

Between May and August 2005 ONS ran a public consultation on the content of the 2011 Census questionnaire for England and Wales. The consultation exercise supported the need for almost all the information collected in the 2001 Census including a question on religious identity. Strong cases were also made for some new questions, especially language, sexual orientation, income and second residences.

A programme of question development and testing is underway. The emerging results of this testing will determine the choice of questions to be included in the 2007 Census Test. The Test questionnaires will be finalised in September 2006. The aim of ONS is to finalise the 2011 Census questionnaire by September 2008, for use in the 2009 Census rehearsal. The final questionnaire for 2011 will then be decided by Parliament.

A full report on the response to the consultation was published on 8 March and is available on the National Statistics website at:

www.statistics.gov.uk/about/consultations/2011Census\_response.asp

Department for Constitutional Affairs

The first Faith Forum in Whitehall was launched by the Department for Constitutional Affairs on 21 February. It includes members of staff and members of the judiciary. The objective of the Forum is to develop a better, shared understanding of how faith relates to daily life, particularly in the workplace. Faiths represented include Christians, Hindus, Jews, Muslims, Sikhs and other faith communities. It is also open to those belonging to no faith but are interested in faith issues.

The content of civil marriage ceremonies

In November 2005 the General Register Office (GRO) published a report on the consultation exercise which it had carried out earlier in the year on the content of civil marriage ceremonies in England and Wales.

Civil marriage ceremonies were introduced in 1837, with ceremonies taking place in register offices. Since the Marriage Act 1994, such ceremonies can also take place in “approved premises”, such as hotels, and the option of using alternative venues has proved to be very popular. It has been a fundamental principle since the introduction of civil marriage that it should be clearly separated from religious marriage and the Marriage Act 1949 states that “no religious service shall be used at any marriage solemnised in the office of a superintendent registrar”. Civil marriages carried out on ‘approved premises’ are subject to a provision in the regulations governing these which states that “any readings, music, words or performances which form part of a ceremony of marriage celebrated on the premises must be secular in nature [and] ... a reading which refers to a god or deity, prayer or worship, or church or temple would not be secular.”

An earlier review by the GRO found that there has been inconsistency in the ways in which these requirements have been interpreted. On the basis of last year’s consultation, it is now proposed to establish a single set of criteria on the religious content of ceremonies applying to civil weddings in both register offices and ‘approved premises’. It is also proposed to allow ‘incidental’ references to a god or deity in a song or reading in an essentially non-religious context, but readings from sacred texts such as the Bible, the Qu’ran or the Torah will be excluded, as will hymns or religious chants. It is also proposed to apply the same guidance in respect of interpreting the provisions of the Civil Partnership Act 2004 which applies to same sex partnerships.

In addition to making the consequential changes to existing legislation, the GRO intends to issue guidance to registration offices. This will indicate, for example, that classical music of religious origin, such as Ave Maria, Pie Jesu and Zadok the Priest, would be acceptable as background at a civil ceremony and the lyrics may be included as long as these contain no more than an incidental reference to a god or deity. The guidance will also say that popular love songs containing lyrics with religious references would be acceptable, as would be readings from poetry and plays or novels.

A copy of the report on the consultation, together with information about the representations which were received in the course of it can be found at: www.gro.gov.uk/Images/consultationdocument\_civilmarriagecontent2\_tcm69-21282.pdf

Religious Education in faith schools

On 22 February a joint statement was issued from the Department for Education and Skills and Faith Communities on the importance of religious education. This reiterated the support of the signatory organisations for the non-statutory national framework for religious education published in 2004 and the principles underlying this.

The joint statement says that religious education enables pupils to “combat prejudice” and “to develop respect for and sensitivity to others, in particular those whose faith and beliefs are different from their own;” “encourages pupils to develop their sense of identity and belonging;” and enables them to “flourish individually within their communities and as citizens in a pluralistic society and global community.” The statement says that the signatory organisations “believe that schools with a religious designation should teach not only their own faith but also an awareness of the tenets of other faiths and are fully committed to using the framework and developing the religious education curriculum for [their] schools and colleges.” Many faith based schools already teach about faiths other than their own but there is no legal requirement for them to do so.

The statement was signed on behalf of the Catholic Church, the Church of England, the Board of Deputies of British Jews, the Buddhist Society, the Free Churches Association, the Hindu Council of the UK, the Methodist Church, the Muslim Council of Britain and the Network of Sikh organisations. The full text can be found at www.cofe.anglican.org/news/pr2106b.html

First state-funded Hindu school in UK

The Department for Education and Skills has approved a state funded Hindu school in Harrow, London following a bid from the I-Foundation/ISKON group. Nitesh Gor, from the I-Foundation said: “We are clearly delighted by this news. This paves the way for the first Hindu faith school in the UK. Our intent is to ensure that the school is fully integrated and working in synergy with the local community and schools. To this end, over the coming months we will be working closely with Harrow Council to begin a rigorous programme of community and local school consultation to enable us to make this project successful. We are also developing strong relationships with education experts from other faith communities to ensure that pupils will have a strong sense of appreciation for other world faiths.” Harrow has a significantly large Hindu population. 20 per cent of Harrow residents are Hindu, the highest percentage for any local authority in the country.

Armed Forces appoints new chaplains

The Armed Forces have appointed Buddhist, Hindu, Muslim and Sikh Chaplains. They were welcomed to their role by Secretary of State for Defence, John Reid, on 15 November. Dr Sunil Kariyakarawan (Buddhist chaplain), Krishan Attri (Hindu chaplain); Imam Asim Hafiz (Muslim chaplain); and Mandeep Kaur (Sikh chaplain) are all civilians with cross-service responsibilities. They were recruited following an external recruitment campaign. The chaplains are fully integrated members of the Armed Forces chaplaincy services and will provide spiritual, moral and pastoral support to service personnel and their dependents. They will also support the Ministry of Defence and the Armed Forces by providing advice on faith specific issues.

Chaplaincy in Further Education colleges

The Government’s White Paper on the future development of further education published in March, invites FE colleges to consider how their “pastoral arrangements can best reflect the characteristics of their student body, including faith, for example through multi faith chaplaincy arrangements”. The Faiths in Further Education Forum, which has multi faith membership, has been working to promote the development of multi faith chaplaincy in FE, where it is currently less developed than in institutions of Higher Education.

The Faiths in FE Forum can be contacted at info@neafe.org or by writing to Mannie Stewart, c/o Education Division, Church House, Great Smith Street, London SW1P 3NZ.

The BBC and religion

On 14 March the Government issued a White Paper with its conclusions on the review of the BBC charter. In this the proposed new 10 year charter and continued license fee funding are linked to six new 'public purposes' which the BBC must serve, including 'sustaining citizenship in civil society'.

The House of Lords Select Committee which considered the issue of charter review recently produced a report covering an additional enquiry covering those issues which it was not able to investigate in sufficient detail ahead of its initial report. This additional enquiry included a focus on religious broadcasting. The Select Committee argues in favour of "a wide definition of broadcasting about religion and other beliefs" which "encourages all broadcasters, including the BBC, to find new, innovative and informative ways of tackling issues of religion, spirituality, ethics and values through all the different programming genres." The Select Committee says that the evidence which it received "shows that by approaching religion in this way viewers and listeners engage with it." It also says that the BBC "must provide its viewers and listeners with the background knowledge they require to understand the context of [a news] story. This is as true for stories related to religion and other belief systems as it is for any other subject area." The Select Committee recommends that "the BBC should be given a duty... to make sure viewers and listeners have a better understanding of the different religions and other belief systems through the objective portrayal of their different beliefs, practices and forms of worship." The full text of the Committee's report can be found at www.bbccharterreview.org.uk

It has been announced recently that Alan Bookbinder will be leaving the BBC this summer after almost five years in charge of the BBC's Religion and Ethics Department.

Holocaust Memorial Day

The UK's Holocaust Memorial Day commemorations began with a concert in Cardiff attended by around 100 genocide survivors and rescuers. It took place on Thursday 26 January to take account of the Jewish Sabbath, as this year's Holocaust Memorial Day fell on a the Friday, the first time since the event was instituted.

It was the first time that Wales had led the national commemoration. Eva Clarke, who was born at Mauthausen camp in Austria, in April 1945, introduced the concert with a tribute to survivors like her mother, Anna Bergman, 88, as well as the rescuers who "threw a lifeline to humanity" with life-saving acts of bravery. Among those honoured was American Charles Fawcett for his work in Marseille with Varian Fry during World War II. Former UN general Romeo Dallaire, spoke about his mission in Rwanda. Welsh First Minister Rhodri Morgan and Cardiff Council leader Rodney Berman told the audience that, earlier on Thursday, every school child in Wales had taken a pledge to "make a difference". The pledge was in the form of repeating a specially commissioned poem written by Gwyneth Lewis, Wales' national poet. The concert ended with the lighting of the memorial flame by seven-year-old Samuel Pfister, the great-grandson of Belgian woman Claire Keen-Thyrin, who was a teenager when she helped hide Jewish children on the run from the Nazis.

HMD projects and events also took place around the UK at local level. Many had an inter faith dimension. The Borough of Telford and Wrekin held an exhibition, with invited speakers, at the Civic Offices to commemorate the day, remembering those who suffered and the allied forces who strove to save them. An evening service of faith readings organised by Telford and Wrekin Inter Faith Group followed the daytime exhibition and focused on readings and reflections by young people of different faiths through poems and short stories. In the Royal Borough of Kingston on Thames, the local authority and the Kingston Inter Faith Forum commemorated National Holocaust Memorial Day in a morning programme of remembrance. This included a tree planting and dedication and a talk from Marcel Ladenheim, a Holocaust survivor. The Interfaith Forum also gave a presentation of photographs taken by their members who visited Auschwitz in July 2005. The Mayor, Councillor Yogan Yoganathan opened the ceremony remembering the persecution of the Jews and others during World War 2 and those still targeted today because of a difference in culture and faith.

For the sixth year Leicester Council of Faiths was one of the main organisers of the Leicester Holocaust Memorial Day. This was in partnership with the School Development Support Agency, the Stanley Burton Centre for Holocaust Studies and Leicester City Council and was held in the St Philip's Centre. In London, the City Circle (an organisation of young Muslim professionals) held an early HMD event with the Holocaust Educational Trust at which they were addressed by Lodz ghetto survivor Roman Halter. City Circle's chair, Asim Siddiqui, said it 'Let us young Muslims and Jews stand united in our collective resolve to work together to learn the lessons and prevent a repeat of Europe's shameful past.'

Until January 2005, responsibility for delivering HMD lay with the Home Office. An independent body, the Holocaust Memorial Day Trust, has now taken over responsibility. In November 2005, the eleven members and Chair of the new HMD Trust were announced.

Newcastle will host the 2007 Holocaust Memorial Day national event when the theme will be 'The Dignity of Difference'. On 30 March the Trust held a conference in London for local activity organisers from across the country to come together with academics and survivors of the Holocaust, and Bosnian and Rwandan genocides to discuss the theme for HMD 2007. HMT also arranged a trip in early March for hundreds of sixth formers and teachers to visit Auschwitz. Joining the groups were Home Office Minister Paul Goggins, a number of MPs, a contingent of police officers involved in race relations, and also the Secretary General of the Hindu Forum, Ramesh Kallidai and the Inter Faith Adviser to the Archbishop of Canterbury, Rev Guy Wilkinson.

The United Nations General Assembly passed an official resolution on 1 November 2005 to designate January 27 as an annual international day of remembrance, urging every member nation to honour the memory of Holocaust victims, and encouraging the development of educational programs about Holocaust history as part of the resolve to help prevent future acts of genocide. The UN resolution rejects denial of the Holocaust, and condemns discrimination and violence based on religion or ethnicity.

Controversy over cartoons of the Prophet Muhammad

Following the publication in the Danish right wing newspaper, Jyllands-Posten, of cartoons of the Prophet Muhammad, there were angry protests by Muslims in many countries in which some protesters were killed. The vehemence of reactions to the cartoons not only reflected reactions to the nature of the caricatures of the Prophet but the fact that any depiction of him is not permitted within Islam. Some demonstrators in central London who carried placards apparently inciting the murder of those responsible for the cartoons have had criminal charges brought against them. Their cases have yet to come to trial.

Statements by the Muslim Council of Britain, while strongly deploring the publication of the cartoons, condemned the violence, and threats of violence, which had taken place and made it clear that protests over the cartoons needed to be peaceful and called on Muslims to resist provocation by extremist elements.

The cartoons were originally published in Denmark last September, but the international campaigning against them had not spread widely to other countries until the early weeks of this year. Partly because of the heightened controversy over them the cartoons were reprinted in twenty other countries and on the web. However, the British press chose not to reproduce the cartoons. A number of British newspapers (and other commentators) argued that while they had the right to publish the cartoons if they chose to do so, freedom of expression needed to be exercised responsibly.

Jack Straw, the Foreign Secretary, commented: "There is freedom of speech, we all respect that, but there is not an obligation to insult or to be gratuitously inflammatory, and I believe that the re-publication of these cartoons has been unnecessary, it has been insensitive, it has been disrespectful and it has been wrong. And if I may say so, I place on record my regard for the British media who have shown considerable responsibility and sensitivity in this regard."

Hindu protests over stamps

The Hindu Forum of Britain complained to the Royal Mail about one of the stamps issued last Christmas which reproduced a series of nativity paintings from different cultures. This was the 68p stamp, used when mailing letters to India. The complaint related to the fact that the illustration of Mary, the mother of Jesus, had a kumkum in the centre of her forehead and that one of the shepherds, a Vaishnavite tilak, judged by some to be specifically Hindu marks. It was argued that it was insensitive to produce such a stamp at a time when the issue of conversions in India from Hinduism to Christianity has been the subject of heated debate. As a result of the complaint, the Royal Mail decided to not to print further supplies of the stamp.

Institute of Community Cohesion

The Institute of Community Cohesion, set up by Ted Cante, Associate Director of the Improvement and Development Agency (IDeA), was established on 27 March at De Montfort University. The new institute is intended to become a key international authority on cohesion work, based on a partnership of academic, statutory and non-governmental bodies, as well as public, private and voluntary sector agencies. It will bring together the expertise of the city councils and universities in Leicester and Coventry and will focus on professional evaluation of best practice, disseminating cohesion ideas that have been shown to have an impact on communities.

The first phase of the project involves the development of tool-kits, and leadership training and development schemes for elected members. Discussions with the Vice Chancellors of both Leicester's universities, and those of Coventry and Warwick, resulted in a decision that different aspects of the Institute's work will be hosted by each university. Overall, eight different departments will be involved across the four universities. National partners include IDeA, the Commission for Racial Equality, the National Health Service, the Housing Corporation, and several Government departments.

Under the auspices of the Institute, the School Development and Support Agency has been conducting a survey of inter faith activity particularly linked to the engagement of young people with a view to identifying useful models for this. Further information from

Earthquake in Pakistan

On 8 October a major earthquake hit northern Pakistan, sending shockwaves across an area of 30,000 square kilometres. It killed 73,000 and injured another 70,000 people, making 2.5 million people homeless and 2.3 million people without a secure food supply. It destroyed Muzaffarabad - the centre of the earthquake - damaging the towns of Bagh and Rawalakot and affecting 15,000 villages in the region. Alongside the major aid agencies, including the faith based relief organisations, many Muslim and Hindu groups and members of other faiths in the UK joined in the fund raising and aid effort.

It has also been a time for expression of support across communities. In Guildford, for example, the Bishop of Guildford, Rt Rev Christopher Hill, visited the Shah Jahan Mosque in Woking on 14 October to express solidarity with worshippers in the aftermath of the Pakistan earthquake. The mosque serves a largely Pakistani community and the Bishop addressed a significant number of people gathered for prayer. 'We are profoundly concerned for all who have died or been made homeless by the earthquake,' he said. 'We want to express our solidarity with all those seeking to alleviate the suffering of the survivors of this terrible natural disaster.' In some areas inter faith observances were held, as in Bedford where at the Jamia Gulshani Mosque there was a reading from the Qur'an, a period of silent shared prayer and brief addresses by faith leaders as part of a service, "United in Prayer: Remembering the Victims of the Kashmiri Earthquake."

Faiths have also responded together to other overseas tragedies. In September, the Bishop of Glasgow and Galloway, Rt Rev Idris Jones, and Imam Habib Rauf from the Glasgow Central Mosque made a joint donation to the Niger Crisis Appeal. Imam Habib said "Whatever our religion, we are neighbours, whether here in Scotland or across the world. The Prophet Muhammad (peace be upon him) said, 'Whoever sleeps on a full stomach while his neighbour goes hungry is not one of us'. It is not an option but an obligation to help the poor and needy in the Third World."

Launch of Christian-Muslim Forum

More than 100 guests attended the launch of the new Christian-Muslim Forum at Lambeth Palace on 24 January. The Forum will offer practical ways of bringing Christians and Muslims together. It is chaired by the Anglican Bishop of Bolton, the Rt Revd David Gillett and the Vice-Chairman is Dr Atallah Siddiqui of the Islamic Foundation in Leicester, both of whom spoke at the launch, as did the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Rowan Williams, and Prime Minister Tony Blair. Members of the 20-strong Forum include four Muslim presidents, four Christian presidents and six pairs of Christian and Muslim specialists. Its first appointed co-director is Julian Bond. During the course of 2006 the Forum plans to hold two residential meetings, as well as several day meetings.

Imams and Rabbis Conference

The first one day Conference of Imams and Rabbis in Britain took place on 30 March. Its topic was 'Working Together: A Jewish-Muslim Dialogue'. 100 Muslim and Jewish religious leaders, religious educators and community leaders, including women and young people, were invited from both communities. Delegates included members of the Sunni and Shi'a Muslim communities and the Orthodox, Reform, Sephardic, Liberal and Masorti Jewish communities. The conference was co-organised by the Imams and Rabbis Steering Group and by the Maimonides Foundation and Alif Aleph which are represented on the group.

Chief Rabbi calls US ministers to work for good relations

In February Chief Rabbi Sir Jonathan Sacks addressed the Rabbinical Council of the United Synagogue conference in Bournemouth. He called on ministers to take a more active role in promoting inter faith relations, saying "We must work constantly for the sake of good community relations at the grassroot level and it is there that we have a significant contribution to make".

Commission on British Muslims and Islamophobia

The Commission on British Muslims and Islamophobia hosted a meeting at the Cathedral Westminster Cathedral Hall, London on 9 February to facilitate discussion within, and across, Muslim communities following events such as the London bombings, riots in Birmingham and unrest following publication of inflammatory cartoons in Denmark. The purpose of the meeting was to explore the possible need for an independent group of Muslims and non-

Muslims to facilitate coordinated Muslim responses to these sorts of issues. It was also to exchange information on current activities and initiatives, and to foster alliances between Muslim groups between Muslim groups and non-Muslim groups. It is likely that, in the light of the discussion at the meeting, an Institute of Muslim Affairs will be established "to promote informed dialogue and debate within the Muslim community of Britain and to promote a Muslim perspective on public policy to Parliament, government, the media, and business." ## 40 years of Nostra Aetate

October 2005 marked the 40th anniversary of the proclamation, in the course of the Second Vatican Council, of Nostra Aetate, which deals with the relationship between the Catholic Church and people of other faiths, and was seen at the time to be a ground-breaking document.

A variety of events were held to mark this anniversary including a two-day conference held in London at Heythrop College and Westminster Cathedral Hall. It was organised jointly by Heythrop College and two committees of the Catholic Bishops' Conference of England and Wales: the Committee for Other Faiths and the Committee for Catholic-Jewish Relations. In his remarks to the conference Archbishop Kevin McDonald emphasised the Catholic Church's commitment to inter faith dialogue and talked about the way in which this has developed over the years since the publication of Nostra Aetate, which provided a theological basis for it.

Plans for new national RE centre

The Church Times reports that plans are being made to establish a national centre for Religious Education in a redundant Wren Church, St Nicholas Cole Abbey, in Queen Victoria Street in the City of London. The interior is to be redesigned to include a multi-purpose hall, office and meeting space, a café-bar, display and resource areas and an open cloister area. It is planned that the building will house some physical resources and also be the home of the virtual resource centre REonline. The plans for the new centre are being developed by the Culham Institute, a Church of England educational body that promotes and develops RE in all types of school. One-off capital funds of around £4 million will have to be raised in order to convert and equip the building to fulfil its new purpose, while preserving its character as a heritage building.

Centre for the study of Islam in the UK opens in Cardiff

A new Centre for the Study of Islam in the UK at Cardiff University was officially opened by Yusuf Islam on 20 September 2005. The opening was attended by over 400 guests including academics, local civic and political leaders, local and national faith community representatives, local inter faith associations and children from local schools. The Centre, which will be based in the School of Religious and Theological Studies, aims to promote scholarly and public understanding of Islam and the life of Muslim communities in Britain. As well as offering masters, diploma and other postgraduate qualifications the Centre will also host a public lecture series and international conferences. The Centre's Director, Dr Sophie Gilliat-Ray, said at the launch that Cardiff was an ideal location for the Centre as it was home to one of the oldest Muslim communities in Britain and the first mosque in the UK had been established in Cardiff in 1860.

Women meet to discuss combating prejudice and bigotry

The Women's Interfaith Network held a one day seminar in London on 7 March entitled "The Power of One". This was used to facilitate discussion on how each one of us can make a difference in combating prejudice and bigotry. The seminar was opened by Lady Gilda Levy and during the day there were presentations by Sara Bernstein, Hanadi Younan, Makaram Award and Rose Fitzpatrick. Further information on the work of the Women's Interfaith Network can be found at www.wominet.co.uk.

Faith representation on Local Strategic Partnerships

The Church Urban Fund and the Faith Based Regeneration Network are currently undertaking a study looking at the involvement of faith representatives on Local Strategic Partnerships and other public partnerships. If you are such a representative or can put the project in touch with such representatives in your area, please contact Billy Dann at billy.dann@cuf.org.uk or tel 020 7450 9071.

Maimonides Foundation

During November the Maimonides Foundation organised a lecture series entitled "Loyalties: Personal and Communal. An exploration of religious loyalties in a civil society". Throughout the month four lectures were held, each one addressed by both a Jewish and a Muslim speaker, allowing them to discuss the same topic from their own personal perspective. The lectures, organised in association with the Leo Baeck College Centre for Jewish Education and the London Middle Eastern Institute, SOAS, covered topics including political leadership, academic debate, youth and young adults and religious leadership.

The Maimonides Foundation held a seminar on 1 February for undergraduate students on the topic of "Marriage in the 21st Century". The seminar, arranged in association with the Chaplaincy at Royal Holloway, was addressed by Jewish and Muslim speakers who discussed the religious regulations of marriage, differences between cultural and religious practices and current issues relating to marriage for young Jews and Muslims in Britain.

Celebration of Mahatma Gandhi's birthday

People of different faiths gathered on 1 October in Birmingham for a celebration co-sponsored by the World Congress of Faiths and the International Association for Religious Freedom. There were contributions from Dr Daryl Balla, General Secretary of IARF, Richard Boeke and Vinod Kapashi of WCF, Om Parkash Sharma, President of the National Council of Hindu Temples, Dr Joy Barrow of the International Interfaith Centre, and others.

YOUTH INTER FAITH ACTIVITY

This issue contains a special report on this growing area

Over the last three to four years there has been a marked increase in inter faith activity involving young people. The Inter Faith Network has helped contribute to this with the publication in 2004, with the National Youth Agency and TimeBank, of the youth inter faith action guide Connect: Different Faiths Shared Values, and its special focus 2005 National Meeting, 'Connecting for the Future: Young People and Inter Faith Relations in Britain' (Connect and the National Meeting Report can both be downloaded free at www.interfaith.org.uk/publications/index.htm) The National Youth Agency's publication, A Sense of Respect: Inter Faith Activities for Young People, by Carmel Heaney and Maxine Green (NYA, 2005) is helping youth groups begin to work more confidently in this area.

National inter faith body initiatives

A number of the national inter faith organisations in the UK, such as Alif Aleph, Council of Christians and Jews Youth Section, the Maimonides Foundation, Minorities of Europe, and United Religions Initiative UK run active young inter faith programmes (contact details for these bodies can be found on the Network's website www.interfaith.org.uk). In Scotland, the Scottish Inter Faith Council has made youth inter faith activity one of its key strands of work.

Local inter faith bodies

An increasing number of local inter faith bodies are beginning to develop work in this area. For example, this year's Annual Lecture of the Forum of Faiths, Kensington and Chelsea, held on 22 March in association with the Community Relations Section of the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea, was on the theme of 'Faith and Young People'. The opening address for the afternoon's event was given by Councillor Paul Warrick, Cabinet Member for Service Improvement and External Relations. This was followed by a lecture by Dr Peter Vardy, Vice Principal of Heythrop College, a talk by Rev Dr

Alan Race, curator of 'The Global Ethic Exhibition', and a multi faith panel discussion on "Young People and the Common Good".

Some local inter faith bodies are working directly with schools. For example, Torbay Inter Faith Forum carried out a project in five local secondary schools in collaboration with RE teachers to discover teenagers' opinions on religions and school religious education because RE is so critical to living together harmoniously in a multi faith society. Four children of different ages were selected from each of the five schools and responded to a series of questions about their thoughts on religious education in schools which are now broadly based on the world religions.

Inter faith groups even in relatively un-diverse areas are working to increase engagement with young people. West Somerset Inter Faith Group, for example, has developed good relations with the local Community College and has an annual competition for Year 10 children to produce art (poems, pictures and so on) about religious tolerance. They also help with Christian Aid and Muslim Aid days at the school.

Some local projects have had a youth focus from the outset. Notable among these is Building Bridges Pendle. They recently held two events to bring together families and young children from the diverse communities of Pendle. The Festive Celebration for Young Children, held at the Brierfield Community Centre, was attended by 65 children who enjoyed an afternoon of activities including limbo dancing, musical chairs, quizzes and making posters. The children were also given the opportunity to ask questions and encouraged to share in the diversity of their culture and customs. The Festive Family Celebration, saw over 100 guests of all ages spending an enjoyable day together including a sit down two-course meal, several musical acts from different cultures, a magician and various competitions.

Building Bridges Burnley (more recently established) has developed an important programme of work with young people called 'The Bridge'. This brings young people in a number of local primary and junior schools together and gives them opportunities to understand the different cultures, religions, and backgrounds within our society today.

THE DIVERSITY AND DIALOGUE PROJECT

Diversity and Dialogue is an youth inter faith project set up to create better understanding between young people of different faiths and backgrounds. It is led by Save the Children in partnership with Islamic Relief, Muslim Aid, JCORE, World Jewish Aid, CAFOD, Christian Aid and the Citizenship Foundation and has been running since 2002. The project has organised a series of events in Bradford, Leeds, London, and Manchester to encourage young people to share their beliefs and values over the last two years. It was involved in developing a youth faith trail at the British Museum that was launched in October 2005. The trail is currently accessible on the British Museum's website, in the Compass section where it is listed as 'Faith Tour' under Tours (www.britishmuseum.ac.uk). The project has also assisted with the set up of a Bradford Youth Inter Faith Forum which was launched on 4 March 2006.

Diversity and Dialogue's website contains many interesting examples of youth inter faith projects (www.savethechildren.org.uk/diversityanddialogue/). It is also working on a range of educational resources for schools on 'growing up in a multi faith society'. These are due to go live on the website www.diversityanddialogue.org.uk in mid July and will be available free.

In preparation for the resource, 13 young people of different faiths from the London area will be working with the film production company Mouth That Roars (www.mouththatroars.com) to produce a video that will be used as a stimulus to classroom based discussion. The young people involved will be producing the film that has three sections of approximately five minutes each. The video will provide a snapshot of life in a multi faith society and will address issues such as friendship in a multi faith community, personal beliefs and values and the impact of global issues on local communities. It will be accompanied by a set of teachers' notes that will include questions aimed at facilitating discussion in the classroom and suggestions about role plays that can highlight specific issues raised in the video. The educational resources will also includes tips on how to set up a youth inter faith group focusing on social and global issues.

Diversity and Dialogue is nearing the end of its current two year funding but is likely to continue under the auspices of Save the Children. If you have any questions or queries regarding Diversity and Dialogue please contact Becky Hatch, Project Coordinator, on 020 7012 6438 or r.hatch@savethechildren.org.uk

SACREs lead way on youth forums

The National Association of SACREs is just completing its second round of grants to local SACREs to encourage projects which will promote dialogue between young people of different faiths and achieve community benefit in their areas. Two of those funded on the first round were Portsmouth SACRE which has established a Portsmouth Youth Interfaith Forum (PYIFF) and Bristol SACRE which held a youth inter faith conference on 28 March.

Interaction in learning

Religious Education and Citizenship Education are providing important contexts for the development of learning about inter faith issues in schools around the country. The Inter Faith Network's 7 February seminar, in association with the Citizenship Foundation, on 'Faith, Identity and Belonging: Educating for Shared Citizenship' enabled reflection by educators and faith community members on ways that this may be developed. The seminar also looked at a range of other relevant issues such as joint work between faith schools of different traditions and extra-curricular projects. See page 3 for further information about the seminar.

Liberal Judaism magazine reports that Southgate Progressive Synagogue, in London, has joined forces with the Islamic Cultural Centre of Wembley to run a Religious Studies A Level class on Judaism and Islam with the teaching shared by Rabbi Stephen Howard and Imam Nyron Hassan Ali Gonzalez. 25 Jewish and Muslim students aged 17-86 are meeting for weekly classes at the Progressive Synagogue. Rabbi Southgate said, "This is excellent for inter faith relations and where the two religions differ, everyone has been very eager to learn about the other's point of view." Imam Gonzalez remarked "I am honoured to have this opportunity to help build bridges between the two communities and foster togetherness in society."

Campus inter faith forums

Within institutions of higher education, inter faith issues are also coming to the fore. A Cambridge University Faith Forum has joined other forums at Universities such as Warwick. CUFF began in early 2005 with informal gatherings between representatives of different faith societies and has now taken steps to become officially registered. It is currently co-convened by Preet Majithia and Pooja Jain and has a committee which is working on planning a programme of activity. New initiatives are also under development at a number of universities, such as Queen Mary's College, University of London (with the encouragement of Inter-Act and Three Faiths Forum).

One of the priorities for funding of the Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund (see the interview on this page) has been 'young people' and a number of initiatives have been funded to help this area inter faith work. For example, the Three Faiths Forum has received a £50,000 grant to appoint an inter faith education worker to work with schools and colleges and Minorities of Europe has received funding towards community work aimed at bringing youngsters of different faiths together. This is the Interfaith Champions project, which will involve sixth formers in schools across Coventry and elsewhere. Mark Gifford, Interfaith Director at MoE will be helping teenagers work in their own schools to promote understanding between people from different religions and cultures. Alif Aleph has received a grant which will enable it, among other things, to make its resources better known to young people and encourage their involvement. A special section of their website is being developed as part of this.

An international angle

Although this newsletter does not usually cover international events, it is interesting to note the attention focused on inter faith working for young people in a number of other countries. This is very much the focus of the US based Interfaith Youth Corp (www.ifyc.org).

On 22 March, 2006 the 'International Conference on Faith and Service' gathered more than 500 leaders from the fields of religion, community service, academia, and public service at the Omni Shoreham Hotel in Washington, D.C. The conference theme of 'Building Bridges Through

INTERVIEW

The Government announced last September the details of the Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund. It is the first Government grant scheme specifically to support faith based and inter faith activity. In this interview, we speak with Debbie Ladds, the Director of Projects at the Community Development Foundation (CDF) which is administering the Fund for the Home Office.

Q Can you tell us about the purpose of the Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund?

The Fund is sponsored by the Cohesion and Faiths Unit at the Home Office and has two key aims, both of which are at the heart of the Home Office's work with faith communities and community cohesion. The first aim is to support capacity building which can strengthen groups' organisational capabilities to enable them to sustain themselves in order to play a fuller part in civil society and community cohesion, and engage more effectively with public authorities. The second aim is to support inter faith activity which brings people of different faiths together to promote mutual understanding, respect and co-operation.

Q Why do you see the Fund as particularly important?

In a very practical way it gives faith and inter faith organisations the money and therefore the opportunity to contribute to community cohesion, in ways that the faith or inter faith organisation believes will make a difference. The Government has not directly funded the sector in this way before and I think it opens up many opportunities for all of us to make an even greater contribution to our communities.

Q What is the role of CDF?

CDF is a non-departmental public body supported by the Active Communities Directorate of the Home Office, and a registered charity. CDF aims to help communities achieve greater control over the conditions and decisions affecting their lives. We do this in many ways, for example by advising Government and other bodies on measures to build strong, active communities and promote community development and involvement. We support community work through networks, links with practitioners, collaborative work with partner organisations and management of local projects. We also carry out research, evaluation and policy analysis to identify good practice in community development and involvement, and spread the lessons through training, conferences, publications and consultancy. We have also managed grant programmes before and will apply many of these activities to the Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund which is very much in keeping with these aims.

WITH DEBBIE LADDS OF CDF

Q Has CDF worked in the past on faith based and inter faith projects?

This is quite a new area of work for us so as well as drawing on our own experience in the more general area of community development we have been drawing on the expertise of individuals from different faith communities and from a range of bodies with specialist knowledge of these areas, such as the Faith Based Regeneration Network and the Inter Faith Network for the UK. We have also appointed a FCCBF adviser for this area of our work, Osman Sheikh, and are extending our network of consultants with particular expertise in it.

Q Some people say that the Government should not fund 'religious activity'. Does the Fund support this kind of activity?

The guidance for the Fund made it clear that no grants would be given for any work which was of a potentially proselytising nature or which was to support the devotional or congregational life of particular faith communities. It would indeed be inappropriate for the Government to fund activities of this kind.

Q How many applications came in and how many grants were given?

We received a very large number of applications for both the capacity building and inter faith strands. We ran a high profile campaign to let faith and inter faith bodies know about the Fund. In total, 2,128 organisations applied to the Fund seeking funding of £52.5m. 578 grants were offered with funding of approximately £7.5million.

The amount made available in this first round of funding was significantly more than had originally been anticipated. Even so, the number of potentially fundable applications far outweighed the number which could be supported and the particular priorities of the fund, including those such as work with women and young people and work in particular geographical localities, helped shape the final pattern of grants awarded. We opted to fund as many strong applications as we could.

Q What impressions did you gain from the applications which came in?

I was impressed with the number of good quality applications and range of activities that organisations were proposing. I have also been impressed with the enthusiasm of those I have met and their commitment to making a difference where it matters. There are some excellent practical and relevant projects that we will be funding and I look forward to working with these organisations over coming months.

Q Is there going to be a further round of funding?

The fund will open for a second round in June this year and the dates for this will be announced in due course. We are reviewing the first round to learn from what we have already done and the criteria, priorities and paperwork might be amended or refocused as a result of this.

Q Is there any particular advice CDF would like to give to those putting in applications for the next round?

Obviously, read the guidance notes and do your best to match what you are asking for to the criteria and priorities of the fund. If you want help in completing the application form then ring us and ask. We can comment on draft forms for you. If you are applying for inter faith activity, make sure that you have consulted with, and got clear plans to involve, people from the relevant faith communities – not just your own – from an early stage. Lastly, we have 'building' in the title of the fund. Ironically one thing that the Fund does not support is physical building work so people should not to apply for this!

CDF's website is at www.cdf.org.uk

Interreligious Dialogue and Youth Civic Engagement' promoted collaboration among Christian, Jewish, Muslim, and other faiths, emphasizing common purposes shared by diverse religions and the vital role that religious dialogue and youth service can play in reducing conflict throughout the world. The conference was co-convened by the Congressional Education Foundation and the National Conference on Citizenship (chartered by Congress), in partnership with Civic Enterprises, the Case Foundation, United Nations Foundation, MCJ Foundation, Universal Peace Federation, Points of Light Foundation, and many of the US's leading national youth service organizations.

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Appointments

New Ambassador to the Vatican

In December, Francis Campbell was appointed as Her Majesty's Ambassador to the Holy See. He is Britain's first Catholic Ambassador to the Holy See since the Reformation. In his official address to Pope Benedict XVI, he said "The UK is a strong supporter of furthering dialogue among people, in particular with the Christian family and with other faiths" and he identified inter-religious dialogue as one of three main themes for his Ambassadorship.

CTBI

Churches Together in Britain and Ireland (CBTI) has announced that Revd Canon Bob Fyffe will become its new General Secretary in May. He is an Anglican priest from the Scottish Episcopal Church. He succeeds Dr David Goodbourn in this post. Baroness Rev Kathleen Richardson has recently stepped down as Moderator of CTBI's Commission for Inter Faith Relations. She is succeeded by Bishop Angaelos of the Coptic Orthodox Church.

Faith community inter faith officers

The Board of Deputies appointed in the Autumn its first Interfaith Officer, Miriam Kaye. Mrs Kaye is a recent graduate in theology from Cambridge University, where she set up a dialogue group for female Jewish and Muslim students. Her student internships included periods working at the Home Office and with the Inter Faith Network.

The Churches Agency for Inter Faith Relations Scotland, of Action of Churches Together in Scotland, has recently appointed a part-time Inter Faith Education Officer, Andrew Sarle, to encourage Christian churches and their members to engage in dialogue with members of other faith communities.

Honours and awards

Bishop John Austin and Sister Isabel Smyth

In the New Year's Honours list, OBEs for services to inter faith relations were awarded to Rt Revd John Austin, former Bishop of Aston and Chair of the Church of England's Inter Faith Consultative Group and to Sister Isabel Smyth, the first Chief Executive of the Scottish Inter Faith Council who is Secretary of the Churches Agency for Inter Faith Relations of Action of Churches Together in Scotland.

Cynthia Capey

In March, Cynthia Capey was given a Muslim News Awards for Excellence in the Championing a Muslim Cause category for her many years promoting understanding between Muslims, Christians and Jews in Suffolk, most recently through Suffolk Inter-Faith Resource and the East of England Faiths Agency.

David Cowling

In January, David Cowling of Grassroots in Luton was presented with the Mayor's Award for Citizenship 2005 for his work, including pioneering inter faith work in the town.

Sir Anthony Figgis and Clifford Longley

Sir Anthony Figgis, Marshall of the Diplomatic Corps, was presented with the Interfaith Gold Medallion of the Three Faiths Forum at a ceremony in the OBE chapel in St Paul's Cathedral on 3 February. On 8 February, Clifford Longley was presented with the Interfaith Gold Medallion in recognition of outstanding contributions to inter faith dialogue, particularly through his radio broadcasts.

Louise Mitchell

In December, the Council of Christians and Jews' Youth Officer, Louise Mitchell, was named 'Young Educational Thinker of the Year' by the Young United Kingdom Programme.

Rev Alan Race

Rev Alan Race was awarded the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws by the University of Leicester in January.

Hari Shukla

Hari Shukla OBE has been given the Freedom of the City of Newcastle in recognition of his many years of work to develop good community relations in the city.

Sir Sigmund Sternberg

In November, Sir Sigmund Sternberg was awarded an Italian knighthood for his inter faith work with Jews and Roman Catholics from the time of the Second Vatican Council.

Obituaries

Sheikh Dr Zaki Badawi KBE

The news of the passing of Sheikh Dr Zaki Badawi in January was received with sadness and a sense of great loss. He was a prominent Islamic scholar, community activist and pioneer of inter faith dialogue. Dr Badawi was awarded an honorary OBE in 1998 and an honorary KBE in 2003.

In 1986, Dr Badawi established the Muslim College in London, a postgraduate school for the training of imams and Muslim teachers in the West, incorporating the study of both Islam and Western society and emphasizing inter faith dialogue. The college was established under the aegis of the World Islamic Call Society. At the time of his death he was its Principal and also Chairman of the linked Imams and Mosques Council, a position he held from 1984.

Dr Badawi played a key role in numerous inter faith initiatives. He was Vice Chairman of the World Congress of Faiths and helped to co-found, with Sir Sigmund Sternberg and Rev Marcus Braybrooke, the Three Faiths Forum. His widow, Lady Maryam Badawi, will be continuing his work as a member of the Three Faiths Forum's Board.

Among his many other contributions and achievements, the Egyptian-born Dr Badawi had been Director of the Islamic Cultural Centre and Chief Imam of the London Central Mosque in Regent's Park. He was Chair of the Arabic Forum and of the Forum Against Islamophobia and Racism (FAIR).

Dr Badawi's funeral took place at the Central Mosque, Regent's Park on 27 January. On 27 February, a meeting for condolence (Dua Maghfirat) took place at the London Muslim Centre, hosted jointly by the Muslim Council of Britain and the Three Faiths Forum. A memorial service took place on 26 March at the School of African and Oriental Studies, arranged by the Muslim College and the World Islamic Call Society. Individuals of many faiths were present on all three occasions, and, among others attending the event on 26 March, were Prince Charles, the Home Secretary, the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Chief Rabbi, reflecting Dr Badawi's great contribution to inter faith dialogue in the UK and beyond.

John Finel

John Finel died in January after a long illness. He was a founder member of the Shap Working Party of World Religions.

Bishop Charles Henderson

Bishop Emeritus Charles Joseph Henderson KCHS died peacefully on 10 April in Blackheath, London, aged 81 following diagnosis with cancer in January.

Bishop Charles was born and grew up in Waterford, Ireland. He was ordained priest in 1948 and titular Bishop of Tricala and auxiliary bishop in Southwark in 1972. Although Pope John Paul II accepted his resignation in January 2001, Bishop Charles retained many continuing commitments.

In 1976 he was appointed to the Ecumenical Commission for England and Wales and remained strongly committed to the process of Christian ecumenism. In the succeeding years he also became involved in the work of taking forward the work of deepening Catholic engagement with other faiths. In 1984 he established the Committee for Other Faiths of the Bishops' Conference of England and Wales. In 1990, Pope John Paul II appointed him to the Pontifical Council for Inter-Religious Dialogue. Bishop Charles was a member of the Churches Commission for Inter Faith Relations from 1994 to 2002 and also chairman of the Bishops' Committee for Catholic-Jewish Relations from 1992 to 2001, and a vice-chairman of the Council for Christians and Jews for many years. In 2001, he was awarded the Sternberg Interfaith Gold Medallion.

Bishop Charles was a key figure in the preliminary conversations leading up to the establishment of the Inter Faith Network and served as a member of its Executive Committee from its formation in 1987 until 2003. On a number of Network occasions he spoke movingly about the way in which his engagement with people of other faiths in the course of his inter faith work had broadened his own horizons and enriched him. He will be remembered by Network colleagues with deep affection as a person of enormous kindness in matters large and small: patient, encouraging and supportive. He will also be remembered as a man of great vision but one who also took care that whatever project or meeting he and others were involved in was conducted with courtesy and care for good process.

Rev Sidney Hinkes

Sidney Hinkes served as a paratrooper in the Second World War, and was ordained into the Church of England in 1954. He was active in the peace movement for 50 years. During the first Aldermaston march in 1958, which led to the birth of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, he provided accommodation for the peace marchers. He was a key figure in the Anglican Pacifist Fellowship. He helped establish the Week of Prayer for World Peace, was active in the World Congress of Religions for Peace and was the Secretary of Religions for Peace.

Joan MacMillan

Joan MacMillan of Gateshead died on 29 December after a two year battle with cancer. She worked tirelessly in the field of inter faith and inter cultural understanding. Her friends in Gateshead comment with appreciation on how her warm, intelligent and approachable manner drew great respect from all quarters during her more than 30 years work in Gateshead. She was working right up until her last days and left her hospital bed at the end of November to receive the Mayor of Gateshead's Award in recognition of her work.

NORTHERN IRELAND

The Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum (NIFF) met on 29 March at Stranmillis College, Belfast. The meeting began with the Forum's AGM and there was then a talk by Rev Tim Kinahan, a founder member of the Forum. NIFF has recently started an electronic newsletter. For further information about the Forum or to request to be on the newsletter distribution list email N.Richardson@Stran.acuk

SCOTLAND

Scotland's religious leaders meet

Scotland's religious leaders met on 28 March in Aberdeen at the Catholic Chaplaincy Centre of Aberdeen University. The event was supported by the Scottish Inter Faith Council, hosted by the Primus of the Scottish Episcopal Church, Most Rev Bruce Cameron, and attended by representatives of the Baha'i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh communities. Convener of the Scottish Inter Faith Council, Dianna Wolfson, who co-chaired the meeting, said: "There are many issues which all faith communities in Scotland have to deal with and by creating a united approach we can show that it is possible to hold true to your own faith whilst respecting other people's."

Scottish Inter Faith Week

The second annual Scottish Inter Faith Week took place between 27 November – 4 December. Inter Faith Week is an initiative of SIFC and is supported by local inter faith groups and faith communities from around Scotland.

The Week sets out to further promote dialogue, understanding and cooperation between Scotland's diverse religious communities. The Scottish Executive showed support for the Inter Faith Week and their commitment to the One Scotland Many Cultures campaign by hosting a celebratory reception at which a multi faith choir featuring representatives from five major faith communities sang. There was a 5-day Scottish Inter Faith Council exhibition in the Scottish Parliament. and on St Andrew's day meditations led from various faith perspectives were held at the Parliament. To mark the Week, Allan Forsyth (Chair of the Baha'i Council for Scotland) on behalf of Scotland's religious leaders presented a specially commissioned piece of artwork to the Parliament. The featured quotes and religious symbols in the artwork had been chosen by the leaders to focus on the values inscribed on Scotland's Mace: Integrity, Wisdom, Justice and Compassion. During the week, seven visits to places of worship by religious leaders and MSPS took place in Edinburgh, Aberdeen and Glasgow.

Inter Faith Week events took place locally across Scotland: in Dumfries, Dundee, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Paisley, Perth, Shetland and Skye. In Edinburgh, for example, a 'three faiths forum' was held, along with the second gathering of Edinburgh's religious leaders, educational events in schools and a women's inter faith gathering. In East Renfrewshire, forty members of the Jewish community and forty members of the Muslim community met to share food during the week and women from the two communities came together to prepare food acceptable to everyone. Glasgow Sharing of Faiths hosted an evening of celebration and entertainment, compered by Ravinder Kaur Nijjar. The same note of celebration was reflected by an inter faith ceilidh in Skye.

The final event of the week was the third Scottish Inter Faith Youth Conference, entitled 'Walking Together Beyond Tolerance' to which young people travelled from across Scotland to attend. It was held in Dundee and included workshops, discussions, exhibitions and music and dance. Religious leaders from all the faith communities joined the young people during the workshops.

This report draws on the extensive coverage of the Week which can be found in issue 9 of the newsletter of the Scottish Inter Faith Council available at www.interfaithscotland.org

Edinburgh Festival of Middle Eastern Spirituality and Peace

The third Edinburgh Festival of Middle Eastern Spirituality and Peace took place from 8-12 March. It included spiritual retreats, workshops and conferences; a wide range of education events, including Persian and Arabic Calligraphy, and printmaking and sculpture workshops; spiritual and peace concerts; Middle Eastern percussion events; film series on Music of the Middle East and peace films; events on spiritual movement and dance; photography and visual arts exhibitions; poetry and theatre events on spiritual themes of the Middle East; Mesopotamian storytelling; all women spiritual and cultural events and workshops; and community-led cultural events which celebrated Middle Eastern diversity within the wider context of diversity in Scotland. Professor Tariq Ramadan lectured on 'Islam and the West in a Quest for a Just and Peaceful World,' and Bishop Kallistos Ware lectured on 'Acquiring Inner Peace.' A further Festival of Middle Eastern Spirituality and Peace is planned for next year To find out more www.mesp.org.uk

Visit of the Dalai Lama

During November, the Edinburgh Inter-Faith Association hosted and coordinated the visit to Edinburgh of His Holiness the Dalai Lama. This included putting on a conference on 'Positive Education' at Edinburgh University and an event at Usher Hall on 'Ethics for the New Millennium'. ## WALES

Swansea's Interfaith Forum, Face 2 Faith, has now been up and running since the beginning of August last year and has over 40 members from eight different faith communities. The launch at an event in Brangwyn Hall on 11 September 2005 focused on remembering victims of terror, regardless of faith and nationality. It was attended by over 500 people and featured key speakers from Swansea's major faith communities. The group now meets once every six weeks with different faith communities taking it in turns to 'chair' and host the meetings at their places of worship.

REGIONAL AND LOCAL

Focus on the English Regions

England has eight 'Regions' and Greater London operates in effect as a ninth, but with an elected Mayor and Assembly. The English regions are increasingly important because it is at that level that decisions about transport and planning are taken. Also, every region has a Regional Economic Strategy which is drawn up by Regional Development Agencies in consultation with unelected Regional Assemblies and other partners and stakeholders. Over the last ten years, regional faith forums have come into existence in the East (2001/02), the East Midlands (2004), the South East (2001), the South West (1997) and the West Midlands (2003) to enable faith groups to contribute to these processes. In some cases the regional faith forums also include promotion of good inter faith relations within their purposes.

The past six months have seen the launch of two new regional faith forums in Yorkshire and Humber and in the North West, a stepping up of programme activity by the West Midlands Faiths Forum and the new South West body faithnetsouthwest, and consultations on a possible faith forum for Greater London. This issue of Inter Faith Update looks at these developments. A focus on work within other regional forums is planned for future issues. Details about the work of all the different regional faith forums can be found in the new edition of Inter Faith Organisations in the UK: A Directory (Inter Faith Network, 2006) and e-mail contact addresses for them can also be found on the Network's website www.interfaith.org.uk

At the end of November 2004 the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, the Home Office and the Inter Faith Network held a meeting for representatives of the emerging regional faith forums. On 22 November 2005 a second meeting of representatives of these bodies was held in Coventry at the initiative of the West Midlands Faiths Forum with the assistance of the Faith-based Regeneration Network. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Inter Faith Network were represented at this. The meeting enabled an exchange of views and experience between the different regional initiatives and it was agreed that it would be helpful to have similar meetings for this purpose from time to time.

The Inter Faith Network holds regional meetings in England for organisers of local inter faith bodies and regional inter faith initiatives to share news and ideas for programme development. Where regional forums are already existing, these meetings are planned in consultation with them. Well attended meetings, with participation from local inter faith groups from around the North West and the South West regions were held in Bolton on 13 December and in Bristol on 28 March respectively. The next, held in association with the South East of England Faiths Forum, is in Guildford on 23 May. For further information, contact the Inter Faith Network office.

Yorkshire and Humber Faiths Forum

The new Yorkshire and Humber Faiths Forum was launched on 8 December at Leeds Town Hall. The keynote speech was given by Dr John Sentamu, the new Archbishop of York, and other presentations were made by John Battle MP, Prime Minister's Faith Envoy and MP for Leeds West, Professor Kim Knott of the University of Leeds, speakers from a number of the region's faith communities and the Forum's Director, Inderjit Bhogal.

The launch was the culmination of a long consultative process. This included a research report carried out by the Community Religions Project at the University of Leeds, under the supervision of Professor Kim Knott, which looked into whether people thought that a regional faiths forum was a good idea, what its role would be, who would be involved and what faith communities would contribute to the regional agenda.

For a copy of this report, e-mail mail@yhassembly.gov.uk or call 01924 331580.

There were also ten events round the region asking faith communities what they thought about the idea. The Yorkshire and Humber Assembly, Churches Regional Commission for Yorkshire and Humber and a Multi Faith Steering Group worked closely together to develop the Forum.

The result is a Forum open to all people, organisations and faith communities which will bring people together by e-mail, newsletters and events and will endeavour to ensure that the voices of faith communities are included in relevant regional policies. It will also develop the capacity of faith communities to contribute to the life of the region and to work in partnership to the benefit of local communities.

A council of 21 members has been set up which will include members of the Baha'i, Buddhist, Christian, Jain, Jewish, Hindu, Muslim, Sikh and Zoroastrian faiths and which will be responsible for driving the Forum. Posts were filled following public advertisement. For further information about the Forum, contact its Director at inderjit.bhogal@yorkshireandhumberfaiths.org.uk or tel 0113 380 4861.

Northwest Faiths Forum

The formal launch of the Northwest Faiths Forum took place on 20 January at St Augustine's New Avenham Centre in Preston. Paul Goggins MP, Parliamentary Under Secretary for State for Crime, Security and Communities, gave the keynote address. Among the contributors, Monsignor John Devine, Churches Officer for the North West, who has been involved since the outset in the work to develop the Forum, talked about the significance of the contribution of faith communities to the life of the North West region and outlined the role of the new Forum.

The Forum exists to relate to, and help shape, public policy, contributing positive insights from the several faith communities on the basis of theological perspectives and spiritual values. Its aim will be to ensure that, alongside other stakeholders, faith communities have a regional voice. It will enable government and other statutory bodies to consult with faith communities and ensure that faith communities can respond effectively to regional initiatives. It will meet three times a year in different parts of the region and have 24 individuals representing 9 major world faiths from every part of the region, with representation weighted on the basis of the 2001 Census. It is supported by the three instruments of regional governance: the North West Development Agency, the North West Regional Assembly and the Government Office for the North West. Its full terms of reference can be found at: www.faithnorthwest.org.uk/resources/186733/Terms\_of\_Reference\_Nov05.doc

Although the Northwest Faiths Forum is new, it is building on work across several years. This has included the development of a detailed website, www.faithnorthwest.org.uk, and two key reports, Faith in England's Northwest: The Contribution of Faith Communities to Civil Society (November 2003), based on a survey of every place of worship of all faiths in the North West; and Faith in England's Northwest: Economic Impact Assessment (February 2005) commissioned from DTZ Pieda Consulting by the Northwest Development Agency and the Churches Officer for the North West. Based on the findings of the report of November 2003, it demonstrated the value of the faith communities' contribution to life in the region in economic terms. The reports can be downloaded from www.faithnorthwest.org.uk/publications

faithnetsouthwest

In the South West region, 2005 saw the emergence, with funding from the ChangeUp programme, of a new regional body, faithnetsouthwest. The background to its coming into being can be found in Daily Service: How Faith Communities Contribute to Neighbourhood Renewal and Regeneration in the South West, a report commissioned two years ago from Marion Jackson and Richard Kimberle of the University of the West of England, by the South West Council of Faiths and the Government Office for the South West. This can be downloaded from the faithnetsouthwest website.

faithnetsouthwest is an initiative of the Churches' Council for Industry and Social Responsibility (ISR); the Exeter Diocesan Council for Church and Society; the South West Council of Faiths; and the South West Churches' Regional Forum. It is a regional partnership supporting faith groups engaging in social or community activity in the South West region. It is currently mapping the activities of worshipping communities in the region, with a view to discovering the full scope of their presence and their work. faithnetsouthwest is also currently working on a regional faith conference for the South West, due to take place in Taunton on 22 June. For further information about the conference or the work of faithnetsouthwest, contact Rev Heather Pencavel at heather@faithnetsouthwest.org or visit the faithnetsouthwest website at www.faithnetsouthwest.org.uk

West Midlands Faiths Forum

The West Midlands Faiths Forum has been running since 2003. It is an independent body aiming to enable the voices of the diversity of faith groups in the region to be heard and gathered in a structured manner by regional bodies, including the Regional Assembly. Its other aims are to promote the recognition that spiritual values are indispensable to the maintenance of an inclusive and cohesive society; to advocate on behalf of concerned faith communities at the regional level; to support diversity and foster harmony between different communities by increasing knowledge and understanding of each other's ideals; and to create opportunities for inter faith encounter and education. It has an Executive Committee reflecting the major faiths within the Region and a series of Sub-Groups.

The West Midlands Faiths Forum held a conference in September 2005, 'Light and Shade' to explore issues of faith and race and, in particular, to address the need for greater spiritual, social and economic cohesiveness. This was particularly timely in the light of the bombings in London which had happened in July and their impact on people's reflections on identity, cohesion and personal and community safety. Speakers included Trudi Elliot, the Chief Executive of the West Midlands Regional Assembly; Maqsood Ahmed of the Home Office Cohesion and Faiths Unit; Dr Doreen Finneron of the Faith-based Regeneration Network; and Bishop Joe Aldred of the Council of Black Led Churches.

The Forum has recently received a project grant for the period up until March 2007 under the Home Office Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund programme. On the horizon is development of its website at www.wmfaithforum.org.uk and a second conference with a community cohesion link, 'Faith and Community: Cohesion or Fragmentation?' on 27 April at the Gurudwara Nishkam Sewak Jatha in Birmingham which will include reports from local inter faith and multi faith groups in the West Midlands region. ## Soundings on a way ahead for linking faiths in London

The London Civic Forum (LCF) is conducting a feasibility study to look at a possible faiths forum for London. At a working lunch on 6 April at Bloomsbury Baptist Church, there were presentations from Inderjit Bhogal, Director of the new Yorkshire and Humber Faiths Forum and from Fr Stephen Saxby of the London Boroughs Faiths Network who discussed the possible roles and purposes of a faiths forum for London. As an ongoing part of the feasibility study, LCF is contacting a wide range of stakeholders through focus groups, interviews and an on-line survey. The survey will be available on www.lcf.org.uk from 20 April and London faith groups and interested individuals from the faith communities are encouraged to take part in this.

Snapshots from around the regions

East

Luton

Luton Council of Faiths and Grassroots held a special conference, 'Plural Britain: Challenges and Prospects' at Luton Town Hall on 21 November. Among the speakers were John Battle MP and Brian Pearce, Director of the Inter Faith Network.

Peterborough

Peterborough Inter Faith Council held an event 'People for Peace' involving children of the major faiths in the city. It included prayers for peace and short presentations by the children. There was also a collection for the earthquake appeal.

East Midlands

Derby

The Multi-Faith Centre at the University of Derby was officially opened by the Duke of Gloucester on 19 October. Although the Centre had been open for business for several months, the project was not finally completed until the end of the summer. Around 100 people were present to hear many messages of congratulations and encouragement preceded by a presentation outlining the history of the project over the 14 years from when the idea was first conceived until the building was completed. The Centre has been funded by the Millennium Commission, matched by donations from individuals, religious and non-religious organisations, the City and the University of Derby. Further information can be found at www.multifaithnet.org

Leicester

The Leicester Mercury reports: Muslim and Christian leaders have been showing off their skills on the football pitch to show how communities can work together. Members of the clergy took on a team of imams at Judgemeanow Community College in January. The charity match was organised by the Muslim and Christian Dialogue Group, an organisation set up to develop links of friendship between the two communities. To ensure fair play, the game was refereed by a member of Leicester's Orthodox Jewish community. Imam Ibrahim Mogra who took part in the match said: "If families can see how two sets of people, who are as different as chalk and cheese, can come together and have fun, then it will go a long way to educate future generations."

Rev Javaid Iqbal, of St Denys Church, in Evington, who helped to organise the event, said: "Football is a universal game and this match shows how closely our communities are working together."

The Bishop of Leicester, the Right Reverend Tim Stevens, was on the touchline. He said: "This event shows that Muslim and Christian communities are once again finding new ways of relating to each other and getting to know each other." The match finished 5-0 to the imams. All proceeds from the match went towards the Lord Mayor's better health appeal and two development projects in Malawi.

Greater London

Barking and Dagenham

The Barking and Dagenham Faith Forum was launched at a day conference, 'Faith Builds Community' on 17 November after many months of planning by the faith communities. Speakers from different faith groups, plus workshops, lunch and a live band kept people from across the Borough interested and entertained with a varied, day-long programme of events. The Bishop of Barking, the Rt Rev David Hawkins, Muslim scholar Muhammed Sharif Baqa, Jay Lakhani from the Hindu Council, and MPs Margaret Hodge and Jon Cruddas, gave keynote speeches. Forum planning group chairman and organiser Revd Jon Evens outlined the aims and objectives of the group. Barking and Dagenham Council Chief Executive Rob Whiteman, who chaired the afternoon panel, said: "Faith helps to build communities. This ties in with the Council's aim that together we will build communities and transform lives, with cohesion as a positive force for good in the whole community." A special ceremony during the launch involved Jo Richardson Community School pupils and representatives from the Muslim, Hindu, Sikh, Christian, Jewish and Baha'i faiths.

Ealing

At the induction of Rabbi Janet Burden at Ealing Liberal Synagogue this autumn, leaders of Ealing's Christian, Sikh and Muslim communities and civic representatives were present as honoured guests, marking the importance for the Synagogue and its congregation of cross-faith understanding and relations.

Tower Hamlets

Residents from all different faiths who live or work on the Canary Wharf estate can now attend services and meetings at the borough's newest prayer room. The Prayer Room is in the Mall in Churchill Place, close to the new Canary Wharf Idea Store and other local amenities. It has also been designed to ensure the needs of disabled people are met and has extra wide doors for wheelchair users. The new room has been donated rent free by the Canary Wharf Group.

The opening ceremony was held on 30 March on the new premises and was attended by representatives of local religious groups and community members. The ceremony included prayers said by representatives of different faiths. Representatives from faith and community groups and organisations spoke on behalf of their groups, on behalf of Christians the Bishop of Stepney – Bishop Stephen Oliver; on behalf of Muslims Hizar Alikhan; on behalf of Buddhists Frederick Payan; and Henk Bourma who is the Chair of the Canary Wharf Prayer Room Steering Committee.

North East

Middlesbrough

A new Council of Faiths has been launched in Middlesbrough. It had its first formal meeting on February 23 at the Jamia Mosque in Waterloo Road. The Council came about after a long process of consultation initiated by the Middlesbrough Community Network, designed to create a Faith Communities Network. The new Council of Faiths will coordinate the activities of a wider Faith Network and enable faith representation on some of the working groups of the Middlesbrough Partnership, to contribute to planning, regeneration and neighbourhood renewal. Plans are also being made to establish an inter faith centre in central Middlesbrough and to develop inter faith work with younger as well as older people. ## Newcastle

Newcastle Council of Faiths was formally launched on 22 October in the presence of some 170 people and is now successfully established. The City Council has provided funds to enable the appointment of a co-ordinator and a programme of activity is under way. The Council of Faiths builds on the earlier work of the Tyne and Wear Racial Equality Council Inter Faith Panel and complements the work of the Newcastle Faith Leaders' Group. Further information from Hari Shukla tel 0191 243 3620.

North West

A regional link meeting for local inter faith organisers was held by the Inter Faith Network in Bolton on 13 December, with participation from groups from Blackburn with Darwen, Blackpool, Bolton, Burnley, Greater Manchester, Liverpool, Oldham, Pendle, Preston, Rossendale, Wigan and from regional and subregional bodies including Lancashire Forum of Faiths, Merseyside Council of Faiths and from the Churches Officer for the North West.

Blackpool

Blackpool Faith Forum and SELNET held a conference on 'Growing Spiritual Social Enterprises' in Blackpool on 30 March to look at social enterprise opportunities in Blackpool for faith groups. Examples of faith based social enterprises were showcased during the day.

The Forum, with support from the local authority, has recently undertaken a survey of local faith communities, looking at membership, involvement in community and social action work and use of faith community buildings, and funding issues. The survey also looked at local faith groups' involvement in inter faith work (31% were currently involved). Next steps are to prepare and publish a new faith directory, Belief in Blackpool and to work on a draft inter faith plan, 'Faith in the Future'. Further information from Andy Divall, Inter Faith Development Manager at Blackpool City Council: andy.divall@blackpool.gov.uk

Greater Manchester

In Manchester, members of the Muslim Jewish Forum of Greater Manchester (MJFGM) have been exchanging visits. An Eid party was held in a Muslim preparatory school and a Chanukah party at the Menorah Synagogue in Sharton. The MJFGM is co-chaired by Henry Guterman and Manchester's Lord Mayor, Mohammed Afzal Khan.

Nelson

There are two interesting example of 'twinning' projects between places of worship of different faiths in Nelson which may encourage others around the country to initiate similar partnerships.

On Shrove Tuesday (28 February) a group from the Muhammadi mosque visited the Nelson United Reformed Church (and Catholic friends), with which it is now 'twinned'. The Christians and Muslims met for prayers, each in their own buildings, then came together for four brief speeches from Ayesha Jones, Imam Habibur Rheman Chaudhary (from the Mosque), Rev Dale Barton (from Lancashire Churches Together) and Elspeth Smith (from the URC Church) who spoke of the issues of fair trade and presented the mosque with a gift of two hampers of fairly traded goods. All then joined in a meal of meat and potato pie and salads with lime pickle available for those challenged by the bland flavours. This was followed by pancakes (eaten by Christians on Shrove Tuesday when eggs and fat are traditionally used up before the period of Lent).

There is a long standing inter faith project in Nelson called Building Bridges and the evening came about through the building of trusting long term relationships between local faith leaders. This was the second such event in the twinning partnership between the Muhammadi Mosque and the URC church. The first was at the mosque. Both events benefited from a Community Cohesion Grant from Pendle Partnership.

Nelson has a further 'twinning' arrangement between the Central Jamia Ghousia Mosque and Christ Church, Nelson (a church of Methodists and Catholics in partnership) and visits and meetings have taken place across the last year.

South East

Elmbridge

Elmbridge Multifaitth Forum have been arranging a series of events revolving around visits to places of worship. February's event took the participants to St Andrew's Church, Cobham where there were presentations on the history of the bible and on Christian beliefs from Rev William Allberry and a guide to the church building by Rev Robert Jenkins.

Brighton and Hove

Brighton and Hove Inter-Faith Contact Group held its 9th AGM on 19 February at the Brighthelm Church and Community Centre, Brighton. Abbot Christopher Jamison of Worth Abbey was the guest speaker on the theme "Offering Sanctuary: The Role of Religion in Britain Today."

Gravesend

Thames Gateway Women's Multifaith Forum held a sell-out social evening in the Miskin Hall in November. 90 members from different faiths, organisations and inter faith groups working in Kent joined in a celebration of festivals of light and hard about the history and traditions of these faith festivals, were entertained by Asian dancing and the music of the Chalk Handbell ringers, and enjoyed a vegetarian supper.

South West

A regional link meeting for local inter faith organisers was held by the Inter Faith Network in Bristol on 28 March. Groups attended from Bath, Beaminster, Bristol, Plymouth, Torbay, Totnes and District, West Somerset and West Wiltshire. There was also participation from the South West Council of Faiths and faithnetsouthwest.

Bristol

Bristol Inter Faith Group has received a grant from the Home Office's Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund which will allow the appointment of a part time worker to develop the Group's programme and its faith community links. This post is currently being advertised and they are also looking to rent an office from which the appointed person can work.

West Wiltshire

A new local inter faith body has come into being in West Wiltshire. West Wiltshire Interfaith Group has been going a little over a year and has over twenty members who meet once a month. They have held an event on values which the three Abrahamic faiths hold in common and hosted a variety of talks on themes of conflict and pacifism, spirituality, religions and martyrdom, and on the Buddhist, Sikh, and Baha'i faiths. The Group has also arranged a women's meeting and hope to do so every month because many Muslim women do not find it appropriate to mix socially with men. They also hope to organise a women-only swimming session with female lifeguards of the kind organised by the Bath Racial Equality Council and Bath and Somerset Council. The Group has agreed to assist Wiltshire Constabulary with their Initial Police Learning and Development programme for new recruits to inform them about faith matters and practices and has organised a two day workshop commencing 2 May. The Group has recently received a grant from the Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund which they hope will help their development.

West Midlands

Sandwell multi faith conference

A free one day conference held by the Sandwell Multi-Faith Network on Saturday 18 March, "Faith, Health and Well-being", focused on how faith communities can contribute to the healthcare debate. Guest speakers included representatives from the Department of Health, Primary Care Trust and local faith communities and participants were given an opportunity to consult on the 2010 Health Care Agenda.

Yorkshire and Humber

Calderdale

Calderdale Interfaith Council have published a directory of the faiths and their organisations in Calderdale. Further information from sail.suleman@calderdale.gov.uk

Leeds

Leeds Faiths Forum was relaunched under its new name (it was previously called the Leeds Faith Communities Liaison Forum) at a special event on 5 March at the Leeds Islamic Centre. At the event, Leeds West MP John Battle highlighted the past achievements of the Forum and stressed how important it was for the group to grow and to engage even more deeply with the City's neighbourhoods. A grant from the Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund will be helping the Forum do this across the coming year. The Forum is looking for a Development Worker. Post currently for one year. Salary NJC Scale SO1 – SO1 £23,175 - £25,437. Closing date for applications 19 April. ## RESOURCES

Faiths and Further Education, A Handbook Towards a Whole-College Approach to Chaplaincy for a Pluralist Society

Written and compiled by Helen Thompson

In November 2005 the Learning and Skills Council, in partnership with the National Ecumenical Agency in Further Education, under whose auspices the Faiths in Further Education Forum was established, published this handbook which explores the role and rationale for chaplaincy in an FE context and offers models for organising, funding and managing chaplaincy. It provides a guide through the key areas of chaplaincy activity, including multi faith working. It also offers a basis for a partnership or formal agreement on chaplaincy provision. The publication is available to download from the Learning and Skills Council website: www.lsc.gov.uk or can be obtained from LSC publication enquires at 0870 900 6800. The publication reference is LSC-P-NAT-050589.

Faith as Social Capital: Connecting or Dividing?

Robert Furbey, Adam Dinham, Richard Farnell, Doreen Finneron, Guy Wilkinson with Catherine Howarth, Dilwar Hussain and Sharon Palmer, Joseph Rowntree Foundation, Policy Press, 2006.

The UK government has identified faith communities as important sources of 'social capital' in community development and regeneration. But religion is also associated with conflict and division. How far is this faith in 'faith' justified? And how far should faith communities comply? The report assesses the debate and the evidence and summarises the controversies surrounding the idea of 'social capital' and the place of 'faith' in community policy; assesses the contribution of faith communities to social capital that extends beyond bonding to build bridges and links with others in civil society; and identifies policy and practice implications for secular and faith organisations and networks. The research in the report encompasses five major faith traditions across four English regions. It explores the nature and the quality of social capital stemming from faith buildings, association; engagement with governance, and participation in the wider public domain.

Faith, Hope and Clarity: Developing a model of faith group involvement in civil renewal

Vivien Loundes and Rachael Chapman, Local Governance Research Unit, De Montfort University, Leicester.

This report, published in November 2005, was funded by the Home Office under its Civil Renewal Research Programme. It sets out “to uncover the often implicit – and sometimes competing – rationales for faith group involvement in civil renewal”. The review explores three rationales which it describes as “normative, resources and governance”. It examines the extent to which current policy and practice reflects these three rationales, drawing on documentary analysis and interviews with policy makers and faith group representatives at both national level and in the city of Leicester. The report assesses the relative importance of the three rationales for different stakeholders and proposes a model of the faith group involvement that specifies the relationship between the three rationales, their key components in practice and the challenges they afford to both policy makers and faith communities themselves. The report maps faith involvement in civil renewal identifying the key players and their roles. The report is available from the Local Governance Research Unit at De Montfort University or can be downloaded from www.togetherwecan.info/acc/faith\_hope\_and\_clarity.html.

Presence and Engagement: The Churches’ Task in a Multi-Faith Society

This report from the Inter Faith Consultative Group of the Church of England looks at the task of churches in areas where 10% of the population are from faiths other than Christian. It focuses on the situation of churches in multi faith neighbourhoods, with the aim of re-affirming the commitment of the Church of England’s ministry in these areas, encouraging Church of England dioceses to review their strategies for supporting clergy, and encouraging theological reflection. The report offers the results of the Group’s survey including both anecdotal and statistical data looking at the themes of identity, confidence and sustainability. The report can be downloaded from www.cofe.anglican.org/info/interfaith/presence.pdf

Transcendence: Prayer of People of Faith

Co-edited by Daniel Favre and Tony McCaffry, 2005.

Newly revised and enlarged edition of a resources for multi faith occasions, such as school assemblies and inter faith celebrations, including prayers drawn from all the world’s spiritual traditions. ISBN 0 9536215 5 3. £7.00 plus postage. E-mail alfredagius@hotmail.com for further details on ordering.

Employing People in Higher Education: Religion and Belief: Guidance.

This guidance published by the Equality Challenge Unit provides a comprehensive overview of the current and prospective legal position in the area of religion or belief and offers Higher Education institutions practical advice on preventing discrimination and facilitating good relations between people of different backgrounds on the basis of religion and belief. It reproduces as one of its annexes the Network’s code Building Good Relations between People of Different Faiths and Beliefs.

Promoting Good Campus Relations: Dealing with Hate Crimes and Intolerance

Guidelines published in November jointly by the Equality Challenge Unit, Universities UK and the Standing Conference of Principals to help Higher Education institutions deal with hate crimes and intolerance on campus and describes the current legislative framework on this. It includes case studies which show how intolerant and extremist activity can potentially cause problems on campus and how Higher Education institutions might best deal with them.

Faith Foods Yorkshire and Humber Style!

11 June

The Yorkshire and Humber Faiths Forum is inviting people of different faiths and beliefs in their Region to participate in a Food Festival planned for Sunday 11 June. Sharing food with each other is a way of celebrating diversity and promoting community cohesion. This initiative is part of the Forum's Commitment to advance the contributions of faith in the region, encouraging people to work together, and challenging discrimination and injustice.

Why Food? "First we eat, then we meet" Guru Amardas Sahib

We all enjoy good food. The diversity of the Yorkshire and Humber region and its cultures is reflected in our foods. It is not unusual to be served a Yorkshire pudding filled with Chicken Tikka Masala. Yorkshire pudding, Wensleydale Cheeses, Grimsby Fish, Rothwell Rhubarb, Chicken Tikka Masala, Rice and Peas and more is our fan fare. Food is celebrated in many ways by faith communities. All faith communities keep an open table at meal times and food and hospitality stories from faiths abound. Let us share these stories and our distinctive cuisines with each other with pride, and learn from each other. You can arrange a meal in your local community to bring people of different faiths and beliefs together. It could be a bring and share meal, a picnic in a park, a Bar-B-Q in your garden, Sunday lunch in your home, or a meal in your local worship centre or community centre. Invite neighbours, friends old and new. Eat with each other as a way of meeting with each other to form friendships and foster relationships of respect and trust.

ANNIVERSARIES AND SPECIAL DAYS AND WEEKS

350th Anniversary of the Resettlement of Jews in England

2006 marks the 350th Anniversary of the Resettlement of Jews in England, following the expulsion by Edward I in 1290. For the past year an umbrella group has been working, under the chairmanship of the President of the Board of Deputies, to bring a series of events together and a wide range of activities from the academic to the cultural to the simply entertaining - performances, lectures and publications is taking place. Details on events can be found at www.britishjews350.org.uk/index.php?page=events

Festival of Muslim Cultures

The Festival of Muslim Cultures was launched in Sheffield in January 2006 by HRH the Prince of Wales. The Festival continues until July 2007 with events around the UK. It is working with arts and educational institutions across the UK to promote the mainstreaming of Muslim cultures within UK everyday life. The Festival was created out of the need to encourage a better understanding between Muslims and non Muslims (as a two-way process), to promote respect for Muslim cultures and to demonstrate how culture creates the pathways that connect people of many backgrounds together. For further information see www.muslimcultures.org

2007: the bicentenary of the abolition of slavery

25 March 2007 will mark 200 years to the day that a Parliamentary Bill was passed to abolish the slave trade in the British colonies. A project entitled set all free has been established by Churches Together in England to commemorate the bicentenary of the Abolition of the Slave Trade Act. set all free will be working with government, statutory bodies and community groups to host a conference and produce materials to make people aware of the bicentenary and is eager for a faith-based dimension to all aspects of the commemoration. More information can be found at www.setallfree.net

The Heritage Lottery Fund is keen to encourage community-based organisations to apply for funding for projects inspired by the Parliamentary abolition of Britain's involvement in the slave trade. A seminar is due to be held on this later in the summer. Further details are available at www.hlf.org.uk/English/InYourArea/London/News/Transatlantic+slave+trade.htm

10 September: Racial Justice Sunday

A day organised by the Churches' Commission for Racial Justice (CCRJ) for Christians and others across Britain and Ireland to learn, think and pray about racial justice, and to celebrate human dignity and diversity. The day helps to raise money for the Racial Justice Fund which supports projects around Britain and Ireland which are working to create better community relations. Information packs cost £3.50 and can be ordered from CTBI Publications, 4 John Wesley Road, Peterborough PE4 6ZP (enquiries sales@mph.org.uk).

The Inter Faith Network

The Inter Faith Network was founded in 1987. It works with its member bodies to promote good relations between the faith communities in the UK, to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make the UK a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions where all can practise their faith with integrity. The Network:

- provides information on faith and inter faith issues;
- advises on multi faith projects and inter faith issues;
- publishes materials to aid work in the religious and inter faith sectors;
- fosters inter faith co-operation on social issues;
- holds regular meetings where social and religious questions of concern to the different faith communities can be examined together;
- links 112 member organisations including: representative bodies from the different faith communities; inter faith organisations; local inter faith groups; and educational and academic bodies

Commission on Integration and Cohesion publishes Interim Statement

In early November the Commission on Integration and Cohesion published a consultation paper with questions for national bodies, local bodies and individuals and additional sectoral questions, such as those for faith organisations. The Commission published its Interim Statement on 21 February. This offers a short summary of some of the key issues flagged up by respondents to the consultation and also reflects some of the Commission's thinking so far on these. It also signposts several of the areas the Commission thinks will be important to consider in more detail in its final report, but in an attempt to be brief does not deal with each in full. The interim statement can be found at www.integrationandcohesion.org.uk/Interim\_Statement.aspx

Religious dress and symbols

Over the last few months, there has been renewed debate about the wearing in public of items of religious dress and of religious symbols in a religiously diverse society like Britain. A wide variety of views and concerns have been expressed in the course of this. At times these have shown a lack of appreciation of the reasons why religious dress and symbols are significant to the wearers or have made the inappropriate assumption that a person is somehow less 'British' or less of a full member of this society because of items they wear for religious reasons.

The Network's Executive Committee has issued a document, 'Wearing of Religious Dress and Symbols', setting out the wider context for discussion about religious dress and symbols: the deeply held beliefs which underlie choices about the wearing of these; the need for courteous and sensitive handling of the issues involved; and some of the factors to be taken into account in considering limits on the wearing of particular items for reasons of security, organisational corporate identity or health and safety.

The reflections close with a statement of three basic principles:

- The wearing in public of religious dress and symbols can be an important aspect of an individual's religious identity and discussion about the wearing of these should at all times be conducted in a courteous and sensitive way.

Commission on Integration and Cohesion publishes Interim Statement

The Commission's programme of visits to projects in the different English regions, consultations, special focus 'round tables', meetings and events will continue until May 2007. So too will its programme of research.

Background note: In August 2005 a proposal to set up a short term Commission on Integration and Cohesion was announced by the Prime Minister as part of a package of responses to the July bombings in London. Subsequently, Charles Clarke, who was then Home Secretary, consulted faith leaders inviting their views on this proposal. It was decided around the turn of the year that the proposal should be modified and that a Commission on Faith should be set up, to be chaired by Charles Clarke himself and plans for this were well advanced by the time when he ceased to be Home Secretary at the time of the Ministerial reshuffle last May. It was intended that this Commission should address a wide ranging agenda of issues relating to the place of faith in the Britain of today with the aim of its reporting before the end of this year. In a change of plan, following the reshuffle in May it was decided to revert to the initial idea of a Commission on Integration and Cohesion. In June 2006 it was announced by Ruth Kelly, Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government, that she had asked Darra Singh, Chief Executive of the London Borough of Ealing, to chair a Commission on Integration and Cohesion which will report to her.

The terms of reference of the Commission, which is due to report by June 2007, are to consider how local areas themselves can play a role in forging cohesive and resilient communities, by: examining the issues that raise tensions between different groups in different areas, and that lead to segregation and conflict; suggesting how local community and political leadership can push further against perceived barriers to cohesion and integration; looking at how local communities themselves can be empowered to tackle extremist ideologies; and developing approaches that build local areas' own capacity to prevent problems, and ensure they have the structures in place to recover from periods of tension.

The Commission was asked to undertake its work within the context of existing Government policy and to focus on developing practical solutions for local communities based on the best existing practice. It was also asked to consider the needs of communities defined by a shared characteristic (such as race or faith), which may require regional or national solutions. Recommendations for local areas will cover England only, but will consider issues which affect Scotland and Wales, and good practice from other countries.

NETWORK NEWS

- A choice to wear religious dress and symbols should be respected wherever other overriding factors such as security or health and safety do not come into play. There are situations in which some compromise is needed. However, any restrictions – whether because of the need to establish personal identity or because of the requirements of a particular job or the wearing of a uniform in accordance with the policy of a school or other corporate body – should only be imposed where these requirements are clearly necessary and after appropriate consultation.
- Careful and sensitive handling of issues linked to the wearing of religious dress and symbols is part of the wider commitment of our society to religious freedom and to valuing diversity alongside the shared pursuit of the common good.

Reflection document on faith and citizenship

During the last year there has been renewed discussion about the place of faith communities within society, the nature of citizenship, and the different ways we belong to, and help shape, our common society in Britain today. During the Autumn the Network's Office worked with the Executive Committee on a reflection document entitled Faith, Citizenship and Shared Life in Britain Today. A draft of this was sent to member bodies for comment in November and also put on the Network's website for wider comment. A final version of the document is under preparation.

Meeting with representatives of Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum, Scottish Inter Faith Council and Inter Faith Council for Wales

A meeting was held on 7 December in the Welsh

National Assembly building in Cardiff between Inter Faith Network staff and representatives of the Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum, the Scottish Inter Faith Council and the Inter Faith Council for Wales (which made the arrangements for the meeting). The meeting was a valuable opportunity to exchange news of developments since a similar meeting held in 2005 in Glasgow and to reflect on the ways in which the relationship between the Northern Ireland, Scottish and Welsh bodies and the work of the Inter Faith Network are currently developing.

Meeting of regional faith forums in England

A meeting of representatives of regional faith forums in England, convened jointly by the Inter Faith Network and the Faith based Regeneration Network, was held in London on 5 December. The meeting discussed the relationship between the work of the forums and other emerging multi faith initiatives; and the relationship between the Network, on the one hand, and the regional faith forums, on the other, and local inter faith initiatives.

The meeting also discussed a paper on the future handling of meetings of regional faith forums and it was agreed that these should continue to be facilitated by the Network and FbRN.

Regional 'link' meeting for local inter faith initiatives

A Network regional 'link' meeting was held, in association with the Yorkshire and Humber Faiths Forum, for organisers of local inter faith initiatives in the Yorkshire and Humber region in Leeds on 20 February. The meeting took place at the Guru Nanak Nishkam Sewak Jatha in Beeston which kindly provided, through the Yorkshire and Humber Faiths Forum, a meeting room and langar lunch for participants.

Building Good Relations on Campus

On 30 November the Inter Faith Network, in association with the higher education Equality

Challenge Unit held a consultation meeting on “Building Good Relations on Campus”. The meeting brought together a range of those interested in this topic, including representatives of national student religious bodies.

Participants were welcomed by the day’s chairman, Brian Pearce, the Network’s Director, and by Nicola Dandridge, Chief Executive, Equality Challenge Unit. Harriet Crabtree, the Network’s Deputy Director, gave a presentation looking at inter faith activity in the UK, the significance of good inter faith relations on campus and offered some preliminary reflections on taking this agenda forward. This was followed by national perspectives offered from a range of student organisations on the importance of working for good inter faith relations on campus. Contributors included: Jo Merrygold of the Student Christian Movement; Bijal Bhagwan of the National Hindu Students Forum; David Myers of the Union of Jewish Students; Simrit Sandhu of the British Organisation of Sikh Students; and Sabeen Akhund of the Federation of Student Islamic Societies (FOSIS). Additional input was offered by Richard Cunningham of UCCF (the Christian Unions); Adam Berry of the Catholic Student Forum; Parizad Avari and Tina Mistry of Young Zoroastrians; Alyaa Ebbiary of FOSIS; and Nava Hinrichs of the Baha’i Youth Committee for England.

Moussa Haddad, of the Equality Challenge Unit, then spoke on the role of the Unit and the work it has undertaken recently on promoting good relations on campus, within the context of its work on equality and diversity on campus.

After discussion, a presentation was given by Ronnie Millar, Director, Corrymeela Centre, Ballycastle, of the Corrymeela Community in Northern Ireland about the importance of creating safe spaces for encounter and dialogue.

Co-convenor of the University of Cambridge Faith Forum, Preet Majithia, talked about this recently formed example of a student multi faith forum and Sarah Talcott, Inter-Faith Education Officer at the University of Surrey, gave an overview of work to develop a multi faith student council there and of the wide ranging programme of inter faith activities which she and colleagues are taking forward with support this year from a grant from the Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund. This was followed by a presentation from Revd Hugh Shilson-Thomas, National Adviser for Higher Education and Chaplaincy, Church of England, on chaplaincies and their role in helping build good inter faith relations on campus.

A report on the day is under preparation. Further information from ifnet@interfaith.org.uk

NATIONAL UPDATE

Machinery of Government changes

As part of the machinery of government changes accompanying the Ministerial reshuffle last May the Prime Minister created a new Department for Communities and Local Government (DCLG) with Ruth Kelly as its Secretary of State. This brought together the responsibilities for regeneration, neighbourhood renewal and local government previously exercised by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, with the communities and civic renewal functions previously undertaken by the Home Office, including the work of its Cohesion and Faiths Unit.

The new Department also has responsibility for equality policy, including policy on race, faith, gender and sexual orientation, where functions were previously split between several Government departments. In consequence, the Women and Equality Unit moved to DCLG from the Department of Trade and Industry and DCLG is the sponsor department for the new Commission for Equality and Human Rights. Responsibility for policy on disability and age equality remained with the Department for Work and Pensions.

Phil Woolas, as one of DCLG's Ministers of State and a former Minister in ODPM, has responsibility for work on community cohesion and faith issues (along with local government policy, local government finance, neighbourhood renewal, supporting people; fire and civil resilience; and cities). He is supported in work on community cohesion and faith by Meg Munn, one of the Parliamentary Secretaries in the new Department. She was previously a Minister in DTI where she was responsible for piloting the Equality Act 2006 through the House of Commons. She is also responsible for women and equalities work and issues relating to gypsies and travellers and planning case work. Baroness Andrews, also a Parliamentary Secretary, is the Department's spokesperson in the House of Lords.

The machinery of Government changes also involved the creation of a new Office of the Third Sector (ie the voluntary and community sector) set up in the Cabinet Office, with Ed Miliband as the Minister with responsibility for its work, reporting to Hilary Armstrong.

Planning for the new Commission for Equality and Human Rights

The Equality Act, which received the Royal Assent a year ago, makes provision for the setting up of a single Commission for Equality and Human Rights. The new body now exists as a legal entity and is due to become operational in October of this year when it will take on the work of the Equal Opportunities (EOC) and Disability Rights Commissions (DRC) and also (as decided in the autumn) of the Commission for Racial Equality (CRE), together with responsibilities in the fields of age, religion and belief and sexual orientation, for which there have been no existing commissions of this kind. For some time, the agreed position had been that the CRE would not immediately become part of the CEHR but would do so "no later than 2009". However, it has now been agreed that it will become part of the CEHR at the same time as the EOC and DRC. The Department for Communities and Local Government will be the sponsor department for the new body.

It was announced in September that the Chair of the new Commission is to be Trevor Phillips, then Chair of the Commission Racial Equality. The following Commissioners were appointed in December:

- Kay Allen – Diversity Manager, BskyB
- Dame Jane Campbell – Health and Social Care Policy Adviser
- Kay Carberry – Assistant General Secretary, TUC
- The Baroness Greengross – Chief Executive, International Longevity Centre
- Francesca Klug – Professorial Research Fellow, Human Rights Centre, LSE
- Ziauddin Sardar – Writer and academic
- Ben Summerskill – Chief Executive of Stonewall
- Neil Wooding – Director, Public Service Management Wales, Welsh Assembly Government

Also appointed in December were three 'Transition Commissioners', one from each of the existing equality commissions – who will support the Chair and Commissioners through their knowledge and experience of equality and diversity issues: Jeannie Drake (EOC); Kay Hampton (CRE) and Bert Massie (DRC). There are further appointments yet to be made for the position of Scottish Commissioner and “up to four GB Commissioners with expertise in business, government and faith and belief issues”.

Dr Nicola Brewer, formerly on the staff of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, has been appointed as the Commission’s Chief Executive and took up post on 1 March. Work is in progress on staffing issues relating to the transfer of staff from the existing Commissions.

The Religion and Belief Consultative Group on Equality and Diversity and Human Rights, described in the last issue of Inter Faith Update, has continued to keep in touch with these developments and also with progress on the Equalities Review and Discrimination Law Review.

Equalities Review

The final report of the Equalities Review, chaired by Trevor Phillips, was published on 28 February. The Equalities Review was jointly sponsored by the Equality Minister in the Department of Communities and Local Government and the Minister for the Cabinet Office. It was established to carry out an investigation into the causes of persistent discrimination and inequality in British society. The Equalities Review report recommends a ten step programme for making Britain a fairer and more equal society. These include supporting employers to take positive action, an enforcement regime overseen by the Commission for Equality and Human Rights and targeted action on the most persistent inequalities. Trevor Phillips said: “Today, we report that greater equality would benefit the whole of society. But we also warn that inequality still scars our entire society and holds back too many individuals from realising their potential.” The report can be downloaded from the Equalities Review website:

www.theequalitiesreview.org.uk

Parallel to the Equalities Review, the Department of Communities and Local Government (DCLG) is working on a review to assess how anti-discrimination legislation can be modernised to fit the needs of Britain in the 21st century. More information about the Discrimination Law Review, which is due to publish its proposals shortly, is available on the DCLG’s Women and Equality Unit website: www.womenandequalityunit.gov.uk

Discrimination on grounds of religion and belief in the supply of goods and services

Part II of the Equality Act 2006 contains provisions to prohibit discrimination on the grounds of religion and belief in the supply of goods and services and the letting of premises. It had been anticipated that these provisions would be brought into force last autumn, but it is now expected that they will be brought into force this Spring, along with the parallel regulations covering Great Britain to be made under the Equality Act dealing with discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation.

A move to annul the secondary legislation making parallel provision on discrimination on grounds of sexual orientation in Northern Ireland was defeated by the House of Lords on 9 January.

The content of the regulations for Northern Ireland and the consultation on the forthcoming regulations for Great Britain gave rise to sharp exchanges between the Government and the Roman Catholic Church, focusing in particular on the requirement for Catholic adoption agencies in receipt of public funds from local authorities to be required to be willing to place children for adoption with gay couples. In a letter to Tony Blair, the Prime Minister, Cardinal Cormac Murphy O’Connor said that “to oblige our agencies in law to consider applications from homosexual couples as potential adoptive parents would require them to act against the principles of Catholic teaching”. However, the Government refused to provide an exemption to cover the point, although there is to be a transition period to the end of 2008 for the agencies to prepare for the change.

Meetings of the Faith Communities Consultative Council

The last issue of Inter Faith Update reported the setting up by the Government of a Faith Communities Consultative Council, bringing together the work of the Inner Cities Religious Council in the then office of the Deputy Prime Minister and of the Steering Group of the Home Office’s Working Together Review. The Council’s Chair is now Phil Woolas, a Minister in the Department for Communities and Local Government (DCLG). It has representatives on it from the nine faith communities in direct membership of the Network, together with representation from Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales and from the offices of the Inter Faith Network and the Faith-based Regeneration Network.

The Council first met on 27 April when discussion focused on its terms of reference. Its second meeting was held on 26 July. This discussed plans for the Government's Commission on Integration and Cohesion; the review by the Treasury and Office of the Third Sector of the role of the third sector in social and economic regeneration; the work of the Immigration Services Commissioner; and the report of the Church of England's Commission on Urban Life and Faith. The Council's third meeting took place on 6 December. The agenda included items on plans for a working group on emergency planning; teenage pregnancy strategy; the role of faith communities in local public partnerships (linked to a recent report by the Church Urban Fund); work on 'preventing extremism together'; and the national reducing reoffending delivery plan (with a presentation by Baroness Scotland, the relevant Home Office Minister).

The Council held its latest meeting on 28 February. An update was received on the work of the Council's Emergency Planning Working Group from Monsignor John Devine (who is chairing this). Members heard and discussed presentations on the work of the Commission on Integration and Cohesion and on its Interim Statement from Sayed Shah, Head of the Commission Team in DCLG; from Terrie Alafat, Director of Housing Strategy and Support Directorate in DCLG, on its work on Supporting People and Chaotic Adults; from David Rayner of the DCLG's Cohesion and Faiths Unit on the work that he is doing on issues relating to the engagement of faith communities with Local Public Partnerships and on a number of other issues relating to local authority engagement with faith and inter faith issues; and from Brian Pearce, Director of the Inter Faith Network, on the role of local inter faith forums.

Meeting of the Faith Communities Consultative Forum

A meeting of the Faith Communities Consultative Forum was held on 1 June. It noted that the Government had decided not to proceed with its earlier proposals to take powers to close places of worship given the strong support which had been expressed by respondents to its consultation for joint working and information sharing as the most effective way of stopping any abuse of places of worship by extremists. The meeting also noted the outcome of further consultation by the Government on entry requirements for 'ministers of religion', which had led to a distinction being made for this purpose between those with 'pastoral' and those with 'non-pastoral' duties. The meeting discussed the planned Commission on Integration and Cohesion and preparations for the setting up of the Commission on Equality and Human Rights; and heard also a brief presentation on the recently published report by the Church of England's Commission on Urban Life and Faith.

The latest meeting of the Faith Communities Consultative Forum was held on 22 February. Members discussed the relationship of the work of the Forum to the work programme of the DCLG's Faith Communities Consultative Council; the work of the Commission on Integration and Cohesion; the membership pattern of the Inter Faith Network; and heard a presentation from Belinda Pratten of the National Council for Voluntary Organisations about work to develop a link between umbrella organisations in different areas of voluntary sector activity and discussed ways in which the faith sector might best engage with this.

Incitement to religious hatred

The Racial and Religious Hatred Act (which applies only to England and Wales) which received the Royal Assent in February last year following a controversial passage through Parliament, has yet to come into force. It is expected that it will do so this Spring.

Rise in prosecutions for religiously aggravated cases

On 4 December the Crown Prosecution Service's Racist and Religious Incident Monitoring Report for 2005-2006 was published. It showed an increased in prosecutions on the previous year for both types of offences.

Prosecutions for racially aggravated offences rose by 28 per cent with 7,430 defendants, of which the CPS prosecuted 6,123 defendants or 82 per cent. Religiously aggravated cases rose by 26.5 per cent with 43 defendants, of which the CPS prosecuted 41 defendants or 95.3 per cent.

The Director of Public Prosecutions, Ken Macdonald QC said: “Racist and religiously aggravated crimes are particularly nasty because victims are targeted solely because of their identity or beliefs. These crimes don’t just affect individual victims and their families but whole communities.”

Charity news

The Charities Act 2006 received the Royal Assent last November. The Act defines a charity as a body or trust which is for a charitable purpose and is for the public benefit. The descriptions of the main purposes which are charitable include “the advancement of religion”, “the advancement of citizenship or community development” and “the advancement of human rights, conflict resolution or reconciliation or the promotion of religious or racial harmony or equality and diversity”.

In the past the assumption has been that all “religious” charities were acting for the public benefit. This is no longer the case. Both existing charities and organisations seeking charitable status for the first time will need to demonstrate, if their charitable status is linked to “the advancement of religion”, that their work is “for the public benefit”. The Charity Commission has already initiated consultation on the application of this “public benefit” test and it is due to issue a formal consultation document on 7 March. It will be made available on the Commission’s website www.charity-commission.gov.uk

The Charity Commission has recently published Stand and deliver which offers guidance for charities delivering public services or contemplating doing so. It comments on the fact that, according to a survey it has carried out, over 40% of charities delivering public services are not achieving full cost recovery. It also comments on the extensive use of one year funding. The Commission’s Chair, Dame Suzi Leather, said in launching the report: “The future for public service delivery by charities needs careful consideration. Charities can bring something unique to service delivery but their independence must not be compromised by short-termism or expediency – either by government or by charities themselves.”

Review of Citizenship and Diversity

Early last summer Sir Keith Ajegbo, the former headmaster of Deptford Green School in London, was invited to carry out an independent review, helped by a small team, of the way in which issues of identity and diversity are currently addressed in schools in the context of Citizenship Education. The report of the review was published on 25 January. The report can be downloaded at http://publications.teachernet.gov.uk/eOrderingDownload/DfES\_Diversity\_&\_Citizenship.pdf

Education Secretary Alan Johnson has accepted Sir Keith’s key recommendation that there should be a new strand in Citizenship education for pupils aged between 11 and 16 on ‘Identity and Diversity: Living together in the UK’, with a focus on the historical understanding of issues that shaped British life today and discussing shared values. The report recognises the role which Religious Education can play in contributing to this.

The main new elements in Citizenship will be:

- encouraging critical thinking about ethnicity, religion and race, with an explicit link to political issues and values;
- using contemporary history to illustrate thinking on contemporary issues related to citizenship; and
- an understanding of the make-up of the UK, immigration, Commonwealth and Empire, the European Union and extending the franchise.

Alan Johnson also accepted the review’s recommendations:

- that there should be a national “Who we think we are” week which will be the starting point for schools to launch local projects, cultural celebration, debates on identity and values – this would be an annual ongoing event; and
- that schools should be active in “twinning” with other schools of different ethnic, cultural, social and religious backgrounds so children can meet and work together on various activities.

The second of these points had been stressed in evidence submitted to the review from the Inter Faith Network office in line with the report of last year’s seminar, held by the Network in association with the Citizenship Foundation, on “Faith, Identity and Belonging: Educating for Shared Citizenship”, which is mentioned in the review’s report.

QCA secondary curriculum review

On 5 February the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) published a review of the secondary curriculum for 11-14-year-pupils in England with an online consultation on proposed changes to the national curriculum at key stage 3 through this review. The revised programmes of study and supporting materials can be viewed online at www.qca.org.uk/secondarycurriculumreview along with more information about the consultation. The consultation runs from 5 February until 30 April prior to final Ministerial decision in early June and implementation from September 2008.

Alan Johnson, Secretary of State for Education and Skills, said: "The new draft Curriculum is designed to create greater flexibility for schools so they can ensure pupils master the basics as well as offer more stretching opportunities for those who excel". He added that "the curriculum should evolve to meet a rapidly changing world, and enable teachers to teach in a way that will continue to interest and enthuse their pupils. These proposals move us away from a 'one size fits all' curriculum to one that offers more flexibility to tailor teaching to pupils' needs and aspirations. More flexibility for teachers, more interesting for pupils."

Schools are legally required to teach RE according to their local agreed syllabus or, in schools with a religious character, according to their governors' policy. However, there are no statutory programmes of study for RE at national level. In 2004, the Department for Education and Skills and the QCA published a non-statutory national framework for religious education, to be used by local agreed syllabus conferences for the development of agreed syllabuses for RE, and by faith communities for the development of RE programmes in their schools.

The non-statutory national framework for RE is included in the revised curriculum outlined in the Review in two forms: the current form, reflecting the structure of the 1999 national curriculum; and a re-presented form, reflecting the structure of the revised secondary curriculum. The content is the same in both versions of the framework but the re-presentation is designed to help ensure coherence across subjects and across the curriculum, and ensure clear progression in the transition between key stages. Inter faith issues therefore remain, as the non-statutory national framework indicated an important area for students to learn about. The re-presentation is currently in draft form and has a restricted distribution. www.qca.org.uk/secondarycurriculumreview/subject/ks3/re/approaches/index.htm

New national centre for Religious Education being developed

RE Online reports that it is intended is to transform the closed Wren church of St Nicholas Cole Abbey south of St Paul's Cathedral into a national centre for Religious Education. The plan is for a centre with its multi-purpose hall, offices, resource room, café/restaurant and display areas which will become the hub for national work on RE. It will be linked electronically to RE teachers throughout the country, provide a focus for RE teachers wherever they are working and will be a showcase for RE nationally and internationally. It is intended that the centre will also be the home of the Religious Education Council. A design has been prepared by architect Maxwell Hutchinson and plans have been submitted recently to the City of London planners. A £7million pound fundraising programme is about to start. £5.5million of this is for converting the building. Full details of the proposal and design can be seen at www.culham.ac.uk/coleabbey.

The future role of the third sector in social and economic regeneration – interim report

In his 2006 Budget Gordon Brown, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, launched a review looking at the vital future role third sector organisations, such as social enterprises, voluntary and community groups, and charities play in society. To inform the review the Chancellor promised the largest ever consultation with the third sector. It involved over 2,000 people, representing over 1,000 organisations across the country and included a variety of regional events and targeted events for equalities and faith groups, social enterprises, the private sector and local government.

On 6 December an interim report on the review was published, "The future role of the third sector in social and economic regeneration". It can be downloaded at www.hm-treasury.gov.uk/pre\_budget\_report/prebud\_pbr06/other\_docs/prebud\_pbr06\_odthirdsector.cfm. In his Pre Budget Report in the House of Commons on the same day, the Chancellor set out the main findings from the consultation and announced:

- a commitment from Government to see three-year funding settlements passed to third sector organisations as the norm rather than the exception;
- a community assets fund of £30m to enable communities and community groups to take on the management and ownership of assets;
- allocation of an extra £6.5 million within the Safer and Stronger Communities fund in Local Area Agreements, with a focus on building the capacity of local community groups and to help strengthen the voice of the local third sector.

The review is continuing, in consultation with the third sector, with a view to setting out “a common vision for the partnership between Government and the third sector”.

House of Lords reform?

On 7 February the Government published a White Paper, ‘The House of Lords: Reform’, “to set the stage for the free votes on the composition of a future House of Lords promised in the Government’s 2005 manifesto”. It proposes that a reformed House of Lords should be a hybrid House, part elected and part appointed by a new and independent Statutory Appointments Commission; and that the representation of the Church of England should continue in the new House.

The reform of the House of Lords has been under discussion for many years. A Royal Commission on this issue published in January 2000 a report entitled A House for the Future, which included detailed recommendations relating to faith community representation in any reformed second chamber. In a subsequent White Paper, published in November 2001, the Government proposed that the representation of the Church of England in the House of Lords should be reduced from 26 to 16 but did not accept the Royal Commission’s recommendations for formal representations for other denominations and religions on the grounds that “the practical obstacles are simply too great. ... Most other denominations and faiths do not have a hierarchical structure which deliver readily identifiable representatives. There are many more denominations and faiths than could be accommodated by the numbers proposed,” (ie by the Royal Commission which had suggested that there should be 26 representatives of the Church of England and other Christian denominations and that the proposed Appointments Commission “should ensure that at any one time there are at least five members of the Second Chamber specifically selected to be broadly representative of the different non-Christian faith communities.”).

The Government’s new White Paper says that “it is important that faith communities are represented in the House of Lords. ... It is... right for there to continue to be special representation of the Church of England in the reformed Lords. ... but it would be difficult to justify retaining the current number of 26 Lords Spiritual. ... It is equally important that a reformed House of Lords reflects the wider religious make up of the United Kingdom, though the formal nominated representation of particular faith groups may not be possible. ... The Government will look carefully at how the views of those of faith and those of none can be represented in a reformed House of Lords. This will of course only be realistically possible if there is a significant appointed element in a reformed House.”

It remains to be seen what views are expressed by Parliament in the forthcoming debates on the White Paper and what legislation the Government brings forward in due course in the light of these.

Holocaust Memorial Day

This year, the UK’s national commemorative event to mark Holocaust Memorial Day was in England and was hosted by Newcastle upon Tyne. Its theme was that of HMD 2007: ‘The Dignity of Difference’. The event took place on 28 January at the Theatre Royal. The programme included personal testimony, song, poetry, music, film and speeches. Sir Jonathan Sacks, Chief Rabbi of the United Hebrew Congregations of the Commonwealth, and Ruth Kelly, Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government, joined a range of other speakers, including Auschwitz survivor Harry Nagelsztajn and Mary Blewitt from the Rwandan Survivors Fund, to remember the victims of the Holocaust and other genocides, and to highlight the importance of respecting difference throughout society. Further details of the event can be found at www.hmd.org.uk

Across the UK an estimated 25,000 people attended 600 events, many of which had an inter faith dimension. For example, in the London Borough of Redbridge, the Borough's Faith Leaders, Councillors, Officers, and members of the Jewish community and other communities gathered in the specially dedicated Holocaust Memorial Garden in Valentines Park, Ilford, to mark HMD and show their respect for victims of the Holocaust and all genocides. In Wolverhampton, a multi faith service was organised at the city's Cenotaph in St Peter's Gardens. At the Cenotaph in Swindon a short ceremony took place with participation from members of different faith groups and town dignitaries, including the Mayor, who spoke and laid a wreath. After this, at the Quakers' Friends Meeting House, Eastcott Hill, there was a time for further reflection and contemplation with speakers from different faith groups and community groups in Swindon.

Walsall Multi Faith Forum and Walsall Council marked Holocaust Memorial Day with a special service on Saturday 27 January at The New Art Gallery, Walsall, attended by representatives of local faith groups and the Council. The event was held to bring people of different faiths and backgrounds together to focus on, or pray for, peace and reconciliation. It included a short interview with Marcianne Uwimana, who lived through the genocide in Rwanda in 1994 before she came to live in the area.

Telford and Wrekin Council organised an HMD exhibition, 'The Long Goodbye', about the experiences of 10,000 children who left Nazi Germany. This was followed by an evening service where there was music, readings and presentations by representatives of different faiths and community groups. In Plymouth, the Centre for Faiths and Cultural Diversity held a Holocaust Memorial evening of reflection, with readings and music, in the presence of the Lord Mayor. In Brighton, the Jubilee Library hosted a small exhibition depicting the experiences of European Gypsies during World War II. This was arranged by the Traveller Education Service and Friends, Families and Travellers and there was also a screening of a short film 'Sticks and Stones' in which Gypsy children describe the abuse they suffer today. Lancashire County Council held an exhibition to mark Holocaust Memorial Day. There was also a Book of Commitment to sign on behalf of the people of Lancashire plus a selection of library books with a reading list and workshops were held with young people, youth workers, librarians and members of the community in the run up to HMD.

Holocaust Memorial Day has a special significance for York where, linked to the commemoration, a candle vigil remembered the destruction of some 150 Jews at Clifford's Tower in 1190. Prayers and poems were read to mark the occasion.

In Northern Ireland, a Holocaust Memorial Day commemoration was organised by the Office of First and Deputy First Minister in partnership with Lisburn City Council. This provided local community representatives with the opportunity to reflect on the meaning and relevance of HMD. A number of other HMD linked events also took place in Northern Ireland, such as the event held by Belfast City Council Event looking at the impact that the Holocaust and the events of the second World War have had, and continues to have, on local people in Belfast. Two members of Belfast City Council's Youth Forum, who were part of a recent Council visit to Auschwitz and Birkenau, shared some reflections on this experience and a DVD documenting the experiences of 92 year old Rev Dr Ray Davey, who was a prisoner of war, was shown. He followed on from his experiences by founding the Corrymeela Community for peace and reconciliation in Northern Ireland. Millisle, a small village in Co. Down was a final destination for many Jewish children who were evacuated from Europe during the second world war. The children of the school reenacted these events and produced a DVD telling this story and excerpts from this was also shown.

In Scotland, Anne Frank's cousin joined a memorial service to mark the deaths of millions of Jews persecuted during the Nazi Holocaust. Bernd 'Buddy' Elias, a cousin of Anne and Margot Frank, visited Kirkcaldy as part of the town's Anne Frank and You festival programme which ran throughout January and was organised by Fife Council, Adam Smith College, Fife and other public sector partners. In Aberdeen, over 100 people attended an HMD event at The Tunnels, organised this year by Grampian REC (GREC) with funding from Aberdeen City Council. A range of speakers shared their experiences along with music and a variety of food from around the world.

In Wales, Cardiff Council's annual ecumenical service to mark HMD was held at the Assembly Room. Representatives from schools throughout the city participated in the service, which included interdenominational readings and prayers. A candle was lit in memory of the victims of genocide during the service, which was led by Revd Stewart Lisk. Cardiff County and the Vale of Glamorgan Youth Orchestra and Youth Choir gave performances during the service while dignitaries laid official wreaths of remembrance. Alan Schwartz, Chairman of the South Wales Jewish Representative Committee, joined Revd Lisk to give a departing Levitical Blessing. In Swansea, Swansea Council and the city's Faith Forum organised an HMD event at the Dylan Thomas Centre to promote good community relations and racial harmony in the area. Speakers included Holocaust survivor Ellen Davis; Uzo Iwobi, a commissioner for racial equality; Faith Forum chairperson, Rev Alan Bayes; and Norma Glass, a member of Swansea's Jewish community.

The Muslim Council of Britain continues to decline to be represented at HMD events on the basis that it does not see this as sufficiently inclusive of all genocides. Its Central Working Committee is currently holding a consultation with its 400 plus affiliate bodies about the issue.

Bolton City Council decided to hold an event as part of a genocide memorial day in June rather than to mark HMD, on the basis that this would be more inclusive, but flew its flag at half mast on HMD. Lord Janner, Chairman of the Holocaust Educational Trust, told the Jewish News: "I have no objection to having a Genocide Memorial Day but it should not be in place of a Holocaust memorial." "Other massacres", he added, "are included in the commemorations."

The Holocaust Memorial Day Trust has announced that Liverpool had been chosen as UK host city for HMD in 2008.

Queen's Christmas Day broadcast highlights contribution of faith communities

The Queen, in her Christmas Day broadcast recorded at Southwark Cathedral, urged greater efforts to bridge the generation gap. In her speech she focused on the relationship between different generations, what old and young have to offer each other, and how all faiths highlight the need to nurture and guide young people, and to encourage respect for elderly people. The Queen said: "It is very easy to concentrate on the differences between the religious faiths and to forget what they have in common – people of different faiths are bound together by the need to help the younger generation to become considerate and active citizens."

Jewish Community marks 350th anniversary

During 2006, the Jewish community celebrated its 350th year of continuous presence in Britain since resettlement in 1656 under Oliver Cromwell after their expulsion during the Middle Ages. Celebrations included a special celebration at Bevis Marks synagogue in the City of London, addressed by Prime Minister Tony Blair; a reception hosted by the Queen at St James's Palace; a dinner at the Mansion House and a cultural fair at Trafalgar Square.

At the royal reception at St James's Palace on 28 November, Sir Jonathan Sacks, Chief Rabbi of the United Hebrew Congregations of the Commonwealth, presented the Queen with a hanukia and Rabbi Tony Bayfield of the Reform Movement presented a kiddish cup to Prince Philip. Sir Sigmund Sternberg, co-chair of the 350th Anniversary Steering Group commented, "I have been especially pleased by the way in which Jewish communities countrywide have joined together in the 350 celebrations, and there can be no higher accolade than this reception hosted by the Queen and Prince Philip. In our celebrations, we are not only marking a special anniversary in the history of this community but we are sending out a message to new communities, still struggling to find their way in Britain, that service and commitment to crown and country do not require a loss of cultural or religious identity. We are no longer Englishmen of the Jewish persuasion but, proudly, British Jews."

A special booklet to commemorate the anniversary, edited by Zaki Cooper, Living and Giving: The Jewish Contribution to Life in the UK 1656-2006 can be ordered from 350@bod.org.uk or downloaded from www.britishjews350.org.uk/uploads/LivingGiving.pdf

One World Week

One World Week is an annual opportunity to join a world-wide movement of people taking action for justice locally and globally. It aims to enable groups at local level to work across boundaries such as culture and is also about stimulating imaginative activities which nurture values of ubuntu (an African term for 'active togetherness'). The theme for OWW 2006 was 'Mind the Gap', which focused on the gaps between the world's rich and poor, between words and actions and between 'friends' and 'enemies' in a world divided by conflict.

Numerous local groups and schools across the country marked the occasion during the month of October, celebrating the diversity of cultures; learning and sharing in caring for the earth and its resources; and taking action for justice, equality, peace and fullness of life for all. Activities ranged from talks, discussions and workshops to concerts, art exhibitions and poetry competitions. Some had an inter faith dimension. For example, Chelmsford OWW's inter faith celebration, in the presence of the Mayor at the Friends' Meeting House. Members of various faith and community groups gave reflections, readings, music and prayers on the theme 'Mind the Gap', looking at environmental, poverty and diversity issues. In St Albans, the Parish Church of St Michael organised an education programme during the month of October with four speakers from different faiths, focusing on dialogue between the Christian faith and those other faiths with each having an opportunity to understand and learn from the other. The programme culminated during One World Week with a Muslim speaker.

CSV Make a Difference Day

CSV (Community Service Volunteers) is the largest volunteering organisation in the UK. 'Make a Difference Day' (MDD) is a campaign which it runs annually. It is the UK's largest single day of volunteering. Over 100,000 people across the UK take part, giving time instead of money to improve communities. The 11th Make a Difference Day took place between 21 October and 4 November (according to local arrangements).

Among the bodies which took part were around 30 groups which identified themselves as 'faith-based' and, between them, involve around 860 volunteers. Many other people of different faiths also took part in activities not specifically 'faith based'. Some of the activities highlighting the faith and inter faith dimension included a multi faith cooking and gardening project organised by the Dashmesh Sikh Community Centre in Manchester; the Spitalfields City Farm (London) project where Israeli and Palestinian students joined other volunteers on the farm to help brighten up local park, Allen Gardens; and an activity for men aiming to help them improve their parenting skills, interact more with their children and share their experiences with other dads which was organised by St Andrew's Church in Plymouth. Muslim Youth Helpline reached out to imprisoned Muslim women through their CSV MD Day activity where the Helpline's volunteers collected donated gifts and information on where to get support after their release, which they packed into boxes and sent to prisoners for Eid.

Remembrance service for victims of Tsunami Disaster

The London Buddhist Vihara organised a 2nd year remembrance service on 26 December for people of all faiths for those who lost their lives in the 2004 disaster.

Hindu bodies oppose possible European ban on swastika symbol

On 1 January Germany took over the EU Presidency for 6 months. Early in January, Germany indicated that it wanted to harmonise rules throughout the 27-member bloc for dealing with Holocaust deniers and for punishing displays of the symbol of Adolf Hitler's Nazi party, the swastika, banned in Germany and several other states. The proposed ban on the swastika was strongly opposed by national Hindu representative bodies in the UK and by Hindu groups in Holland, Belgium and Italy and, in setting out plans for an EU-wide anti-racism law at the end of January, Germany said it would not seek to prohibit 'specific symbols such as swastikas'.

This was the second time in recent years that a ban on the swastika has looked imminent. It was under consideration in 2005 but EU legislators decided against the blanket ban proposed and suggested instead that member states tackle the problem individually. At the end of February 2005, the UK government said it would not pursue a ban on the swastika as the Home Office said that Britain's current race hate laws were sufficient to prevent improper use of the swastika. Holocaust Educational Trust chairman Lord Janner highlighted the difficulty of banning the symbol. "Having been a war crimes investigator in Germany and hating the swastika symbol I would love to have it banned, but it is totally impossible in the UK. Not least because of its perfectly proper use by my Hindu friends.”

Background Note: The swastika (sanskrit svastika) is a cross with its arms bent at right angles to either the right or left. The symbol has been used by a variety of cultures throughout the ages as a sign of good fortune and stability and is often seen in Hindu architecture and Indian artwork. It connotes well being and blessing.

Conferences to combat extremism

On 14 December, a national conference, ‘Tackling Extremism Together: Building Safer and Stronger, Cohesive Communities’, was held in London. It was organised by Neil Stewart Associates in association with the Muslim Council of Britain and Policy Review Magazine to bring together representatives from local government, the police, various educational institutions and communities to consider effective approaches to improve cohesion and strengthen relationships.

On 22 February, the British Muslim Forum and Birmingham City Council held a conference, Islam in Britain: Policy to Action, in Birmingham, hosted by Councillor Rudge and Zareen Ahmed Chief Executive of the BMF. The conference was addressed by Ruth Kelly, Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government. The aim of the conference was to develop partnerships between the community and the public sector to tackle issues of alienation, disadvantage and extremism. There were presentations setting out the theological, juridical and spiritual context for strategies to address issues of citizenship, civic engagement and de-radicalisation. Workshops explored questions relating to the implications of Shari'ah within a modern western democracy, faith based citizenship and the role of civic institutions in policy and engagement.

New funding for local authorities to tackle extremism

The Communities Secretary, Ruth Kelly, announced on 7 February the launch of a new funding programme aimed at overcoming violent extremism in England. Financial support will be given to support local councils and communities in increasing their role in isolating extremists. The new £5 million Preventing Violent Extremism

Pathfinder Fund will support local authorities and the guidance sets out how they can play a key role in building strengthened partnerships with the peaceful majority in communities to isolate and defeat violent extremism. Government Offices are working with around 50 local authorities, primarily from main urban areas, with the guidance to develop programmes of activities which the new fund will support. They will work in partnership with Muslim communities in bringing forward proposals. The guidance indicates that partnerships are to be with ‘...other agencies locally – including the police, third sector and local Muslim (and perhaps other faith) organisations.’ Preventing Violent Extremism Pathfinder Fund, Guidance Note for Government Offices and Local Authorities in England, is available at: www.communities.gov.uk/index.asp?id=1506075

Evangelical Alliance and MCB meet

Dr Abdul Bari, Secretary General of the Muslim Council of Britain and Dr Manazir Ahsan, Chair of MCB’s Mosque and Community Affairs Committee met on 6 February with Dr Joel Edwards, General Director of the Evangelical Alliance and Dr David Muir, its Public Policy Director, for an informal opportunity to share information about their work and activities.

Hindu-Christian Forum

The Hindu-Christian Forum held a meeting at the St Philips Centre in Leicester on 3 March. To help clarify its aims and broaden its base it is currently developing a ‘listening exercise’ modeled on the Christian Muslim listening exercise which led to the formation of the Christian Muslim forum in 2004. The Forum is also planning to hold a national conference on Hindu-Christian dialogue in April 2008.

The Hindu-Christian Forum, which began its work in 2004, is a national forum involving several Christian denominations and a range of Hindu bodies. Current Co-Chairs are Canon Andrew Wingate and Dr Girdhari Lal Bhan. Its purpose is to facilitate understanding between Hindus and Christians in the context of their living together in a positive way in Britain. A significant achievement early in its life was to agree a statement of good practice in relation to issues of mission and conversion. Further information from Canon Andrew Wingate

Hindu-Christian dialogue

On 9 November, the Oxford Centre for Hindu Studies held a conference at Regent's Park College in association with the Centre for Christianity and Culture. This one-day symposium brought together Christian, Buddhist, and Hindu perspectives on the theme of Desire. This was part of a series of Comparative Theology seminars and symposia in which scholars compare Hindu ideas with other theologies.

Christian Muslim Forum statement on religious festivals and celebrations

On 12 November, the Christian Muslim Forum issued a statement by the Forum's Chair, Rt Revd David Gillett, and Vice-Chair, Dr Ataullah Siddiqui, emphasising the value of all religious communities in the UK and the importance of recognising major festivals within each community. This was in response to various calls to move away from public celebration of festivals, such as Christmas, on the basis that these could offend members of other religious traditions. The CMF statement stressed that Christmas is a celebration of the birth of Jesus and this significant aspect of the Christian heritage should be acknowledged in national life. It said "We believe that our open and democratic society should promote freedom of religion in the public space rather than negatively restrict its observance... This is a positive way of affirming the public contribution that people of different traditions bring to our society." The statement can be found at www.christianmuslimforum.org/downloads/Religious\_Festivals.pdf

Christian and Muslim youth workers engage

On 22 February, nearly 100 youth workers Christian and Muslim youth leaders from around the UK came together in for the Christian Muslim Forum 'getting engaged' event at the Second City Suite in Digbeth to explore how they can 'get engaged' with each other, share their resources and help young Christians and Muslims to contribute better to community cohesion. The day event included presentations from Steve Chalke, founder of Faithworks; Muhammad Khan, founder of Muslim Youthwork Foundation and lecturer at Birmingham University; as well as discussion and interactive workshops with trainers Andrew Smith and Wahida Shaffi, the respective Christian and Muslim youth specialists for the Christian Muslim Forum. For more information about 'getting engaged' and other Christian Muslim Forum youth work, see www.christianmuslimforum.org/youth.asp

Ahimsa Day

The Institute of Jainology celebrated Ahimsa Day in the House of Commons on 1 November. This year's meeting, with the theme, 'Ahimsa and the Environment', attracted over 35 MPs. Invitations were extended to the major faith communities and representatives from many of these attended the event. Speakers included Elliot Morley, MP, Special Representative for Global Climate Change Affairs in the Office of the Prime Minister; Martin Palmer, Secretary-General of Alliance for Religions and Conservation (ARC); John Vidal, Environment Editor of The Guardian; and Harshad Sanghrajka, of the Institute of Jainology.

World Congress of Faiths holds 70th anniversary conference

On 23-24 October, the 70th anniversary conference of the World Congress of Faiths, 'Seeking Transformation for a Fractured World', was held at Selly Oak, Birmingham in association with the University of Birmingham. It was sponsored by the Hibbert Trust. 'Religion' is sometimes accused of being responsible for the world's violence and the aim of contributors was to draw attention to the potential for 'religion', and in particular for 'inter faith work', to become part of the solution to conflict.

Contributors to the conference included Professor Scott Appleby, Director of the Kroc Institute for International Peace Studies, at the University of Notre Dame, Indiana, USA; John Hick, Fellow of the Institute for Advanced Research in Arts and Social Sciences, University of Birmingham, UK; Jim Kenney, Director of the Interreligious Engagement Project, Chicago; Perry Schmidt-Leukel, Professor of Systematic Theology and Religious Studies and Chair of World Religions for Peace, University of Glasgow; Professor Gurharpal Singh, Nadir Dinshaw Professor of Interreligious Relations, University of Birmingham, UK; Dr Geraldine Smyth, OP, Irish School of Ecumenics; and Professor Jonathan Webber, UNESCO Professor of Jewish and Interfaith Studies, University of Birmingham. Further information about the topics which they addressed can be found at www.worldfaiths.org/2006%20Events.htm Some of the conference contributions will be published in Interreligious Insight, the journal of the WCF (www.interreligiousinsight.org).

Muslim women's inter faith initiative

A Muslim Women's Network for inter faith work was launched at the Markfield Conference Centre, Leicestershire on 25 February. Speakers included Sughra Ahmed, the Coordinator of the Women in Faith Project; Irshad Baqui, Executive Director of the Islamic Foundation; the Inter Faith Network's Deputy Director, Harriet Crabtree; and Wahida Shaffi of the Muslim Christian Forum. There were also testimonials from Farah Alvi and Nazneen Amin-Belmour, who had been studying on the Women in Faith course (see below). The Network will work to promote, support and enhance inter faith dialogue. Further information from Sughra Ahmed, tel. 01530 244 944 ext 222, email: sughra@islamic-foundation.org.uk

The new Network emerged from a course which The Islamic Foundation, funded by the Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund, ran over six weekends finishing in February. The course, 'Women in Faith' was designed to give the participants training in the field of faith, a chance to learn about a variety of faiths in the UK and to visit places of worship and gain understanding of a number of dimensions of worship and prayer. The women have also studied extensively some of the issues and concepts which relate to Muslims in Britain as well as the wider communities. Participants also received specialist training on working with the media and setting up inter faith projects. Participants were awarded a certificate from The Islamic Foundation.

Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund

On 6 March, Communities Minister Phil Woolas announced grants totalling more than £4.3 million to 343 organisations to promote a common sense of citizenship, following bids from more than 1,200 organisations to the Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund. This is the second round of a £13.8 million fund to help organisations promote community cohesion and shared citizenship at a local community level. Applications came from a wide range of faith, inter faith and non-faith based community groups. A full list of the 343 organisations that have been recommended for funding is available at www.communities.gov.uk

Announcing the grants, Phil Woolas said "Faith organisations play an important role in our communities and know their communities well. We want to draw on the expertise of faith, inter faith and non faith based community groups and do all we can to support them". He commented that "This local approach will help reach directly into communities to promote shared citizenship and integration. It is vital that we find ways of bringing people from different faiths and cultures together to understand their differences and celebrate their shared experiences."

The fund is administered by the Community Development Foundation (CDF) www.cdf.org.uk The Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund was first announced in the Government's 'Improving Opportunity, Strengthening Society' strategy in January 2005.

The Community Development Foundation (CDF) is currently providing support to organisations funded in Round 1 of the Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund (FCCBF) through its own staff and a group of CDF consultants. As many projects as possible are being visited and CDF is using a range of case studies and learning in its reporting of the fund. Some were drawn on at its forthcoming conference: Integration: if not now, when? which took place on 8 March in London.

CDF is also producing a publication "Setting up for success, a practical guide for community organisations" for FCCBF and Connecting Communities Plus, Community Grants (also administered by CDF) funded organisations as well as unsuccessful applicants to each of the funds. This publication builds on CDF's experience of supporting community groups and those it is funding. It has also been asked to audit 10% of those who received FCCBF funding in Round 1, and to ask all funded organisations to complete a second evaluation questionnaire so it can identify progress / trends they have made and therefore the overall impact of the fund.

CDF received over 1,200 applications for Round 2 of FCCBF by the closing date. Notification of awards is expected in the first week of March once funding has been approved by the Minister for Communities and Local Government.

New centre aims to build bridges between Jews and Muslims

The Centre for the Study of Muslim-Jewish Relations (CMJR), has been established in Cambridge by Dr Edward Kessler and Dr Amineh Hoti. Dr Hoti will be its first Director. CMJR is a sister organisation to the existing Centre for Jewish-Christian Relations (CJCR).

The Centre was opened on 1 February by Sir Jonathan Sacks, Chief Rabbi of the United Hebrew Congregations of the Commonwealth. In his presentation he said “We as Jews, Christians and Muslims have to keep talking. It doesn’t matter if we don’t agree...Difference makes a marriage work.”

The objectives of the CMJR include the development of the UK’s first ever curriculum on the study of Jewish-Muslim relations at undergraduate and postgraduate levels and an examination of anti-Semitism and Islamophobia, and the training of Jewish and Muslim lay leaders as well as rabbis and imams. Its programme begins in September. The Centre will, like CJCR, be under the auspices of the new Woolf Institute (for further information about the Institute see www.cjcr.cam.ac.uk/news/mk3leaflet.pdf).

Flexible Interfaith Education Programme launched by CJCR with CMJR and CCJ

In October CJCR launched the Flexible Interfaith Education Programme, working in partnership with the Centre for the Study of Muslim-Jewish Relations and the Council of Christians and Jews. The project has been funded by the Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund to provide an educational resource in inter faith relations and citizenship. FIEP brings together a cross section of local communities’ cultural, religious and professional groups including police, teachers, clergy, local government and members of different faith communities to develop their skills in inter faith dialogue, improve their understanding of the inter faith encounter and learn to deal with difference in their community. The first of the FIEP events took place in Newcastle in the autumn and the second in February in Manchester (launched by the Lord Mayor) and in Hillingdon in London (launched by the Mayor, who is also participating in the course). FIEP will also be going to Birmingham,. For more information please see www.cjcr.cam.ac.uk or contact Esther Haworth ech40@cam.ac.uk or 01223 742178

Council of Christians and Jews develops new programme of work

A number of new events and projects have been set up recently by CCJ, following a re-structuring of its work. These include a programme of seminars for Christian clergy and theological students under the ‘Yehi Or’ heading (Hebrew for ‘Let there be light’). One of these will take place in conjunction with the Three Faiths Forum at Sarum College on ‘Visions of the Other’, looking at discourses in society and texts from Jewish, Christian and Muslim perspectives. Others include a Jewish/Christian text study day for ordinands, to be held at Ripon College, Oxford, and a 10-day seminar for Christian clergy at Yad Vashem in Jerusalem. Also under the ‘Yehi Or’ banner, CCJ is carrying out a nationwide survey of attitudes of church-goers today to Jews and Judaism, and matters of inter faith dialogue in general. Currently a pilot survey has been carried out of Anglicans and Free Churches in four main areas. Further information about CCJ’s work can be found at www.ccj.org.uk/

In February, CCJ Youth Programmes ran a study tour to Israel and Bethlehem for young Jewish and Christian educators. Participants visited Israeli and Palestinian schools and looked at opportunities for educating for co-existence. Further information about CCJ’s Youth Programme can be obtained from Louise Mitchell louise@ccj.org.uk

Faith, Homophobia and Human Rights conference

A one-day conference on Faith, Homophobia and Human Rights took place in London on 17 February. It was opened by Cllr Brian Coleman, Chair of the Greater London Assembly. The opening speech was delivered by Lord (Chris) Smith, former Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, Chairman-designate Advertising Standards Authority. Speakers at the conference also included Lord Smith, as well as Vic Codling of the Gay Police Association; Revd Malcolm Duncan of Faithworks; Revd Giles Fraser, broadcaster and Guardian columnist and Team Rector of Putney; Sandhya Drew, Barrister, Tooks Chambers and specialist in Equality and Human Rights Law; Kay Carberry, Assistant General Secretary, TUC who is currently an Equal Opportunities Commissioner; and Arpita Dutt, a partner at Russell Jones and Walker solicitors and chair of the London Anti-Racist Alliance.

Face 2 Faith – Methodist Church month of prayer for inter faith relations

The Methodist Church is one of the largest Christian churches serving Great Britain, with nearly 300,000 members and regular contact with over 800,000 people. It has about 5,800 churches in Great Britain, and also maintains links with other Methodist churches totalling a worldwide membership of 70 million. During February, the Methodist Church's month of prayer for inter faith relations, Face 2 Faith, took place. Churches have been taking part by praying for better inter faith relations in Britain and the world; by doing something to encourage inter faith understanding in their community; and by entering the Face 2 Faith photo competition.

Face 2 Faith Photo Competition

The Face 2 Faith photograph competition was launched as part of the Methodist Church's month of prayer for inter faith relations (see above). It is open to anyone in Britain and Ireland of all ages and faiths, with young people especially encouraged to take part. Up to four pictures can be submitted with digital, print and even camera phone images being accepted. There is a first prize of £350 worth of Jessops vouchers. The aim is to find images that communicate something powerful about inter faith relations.

Sponsored by Methodist Insurance, the competition will be judged on how well an image expresses something about inter faith relations and how people of different faiths in Britain and Ireland can live, work and love together. The competition will run until 31 May and entries will be displayed on the Face 2 Faith website: www.face2faith.org.uk All the competition details can be found on the website or requested by post from: Inter Faith Office, Methodist Church House, 25 Marylebone Road, London NW1 5JR or from Anna Drew, Media and Information Assistant drewa@methodistchurch.org.uk

National Portrait Gallery Exhibition Faith and Church: Portraits by Don McCullin

3 February saw the opening at the National Portrait Gallery in London of a display of ten newly commissioned photographs of leaders and senior representatives of the major faiths in the UK. It is the latest in a sequence that has previously charted the health sector and the field of telecommunications. Taken by Don McCullin, internationally recognised as one of the greatest of British photographers, the subjects are captured in locations that reflect their spiritual lives. Sitters include Rabbi Tony Bayfield (Head of The Movement for Reform Judaism); Reverend Esme Beswick (the first black woman to become a President of the Churches Together in England); Cardinal Cormac Murphy O'Connor, (Archbishop of Westminster); Dr Syed Aziz Pasha (General-Secretary of the Union of Muslim Organisations); Rev Baroness Kathleen Richardson of Calow (former Moderator of the Methodist Church); Sir Jonathan Sacks (Chief Rabbi of the United Hebrew Congregations of the Commonwealth); Sir Iqbal Sacranie (former General Secretary of the Muslim Council of Britain); Dr Indarjit Singh (Director, Network of Sikh Organisations); Om Parkash Sharma (former President of the National Council of Hindu Temples); and the Archbishop of Canterbury Dr Rowan Williams.

A reception for the subjects of the portraits took place at the Gallery on 5 February. Speaking about the series, Rabbi Dr Tony Bayfield, said: "Arriving and seeing the ten photographs for the first time, I realised that, not only do we all know each other, but most of us are on first name terms. I was struck by the fact that I am part of a group who are committed to working together to restore the good name of religion and for the benefit of British society. It was both moving and hopeful.”

The exhibition runs until 7 May. Gallery opening hours are Saturday to Wednesday 10am-6pm, Thursdays and Fridays 10am-9pm

Diversity and Dialogue Moves to Citizenship Foundation

Diversity and Dialogue, the joint agency project which aims to create better understanding and friendship between young people from different faith and cultural backgrounds has moved to the Citizenship Foundation after more than two years based at Save the Children. Diversity and Dialogue supports individuals and organisations interested in building better relations between young people from different faiths and backgrounds. It acts as an information, support and ideas sharing network, publicising good practice, producing resources and giving advice. Diversity and Dialogue also works directly with young people, developing innovative projects and models of dialogue. Projects create spaces where young people from different faiths and backgrounds can come together to discuss controversial issues, then work together for change. ## Joseph Interfaith Foundation

A new inter faith organisation was launched in December. Its focus is improving Muslim-Jewish ties. It is the initiative of Mehri Nikham, previously the Director of the Maimonides Foundation.

The inaugural lecture of a series of national lectures organised by The Joseph Interfaith Foundation took place at the School of Oriental and African Studies on 30 January. Shahid Malik, MP for Dewsbury, Rabbi Danny Rich, Chief Executive, Liberal Judaism GB and Dr Reza Shah Kazemi, Author, Research Associate IIS, addressed the question ‘Is Religion the cause of integration or isolation in today’s British society?’ The event was chaired by John Battle MP, Prime Minister’s Envoy to Faith Communities. For information about the Joseph Interfaith Foundation, contact info@josephinterfaithfoundation.org

Conversation with Jack Straw

On 2 November at University College London the Three Faiths Forum and the City Circle arranged an evening, ‘In Conversation with Jack Straw MP’. The Leader of the Commons, MP for Blackburn, and former Foreign Secretary, whose comments on the niqab earlier in the autumn had sparked great debate, spoke on a range of issues including this and responded to questions and points from the audience.

‘Tea and Cake’ – Toc H spread neighbourly hospitality

From 11 September to 11 November, the national charity Toc H ran a ‘Tea and Cake’ campaign encouraging people to invite others of different faiths in to talk over tea and cake with the idea that by offering simple hospitality people can help create common bonds between communities and forge a safer and fairer society. Madeleine Fone of Toc H said “Most groups are good at putting the kettle on and getting out the juice and biscuits, so why not do what we do best. The campaign is about offering a gesture of friendship. It is not about converting people of other faiths or of none and it’s not about fundraising. It is to simply engender goodwill and share time together.” Events took place around the UK and there was also a special reception at the House of Lords on 18 October. ## INTERVIEW WITH RICHARD REDDIE & INDERJIT BHOGAL

25 March 2007 is the bicentenary of the 1807 Abolition of the Slave Trade Act. We talk with Richard Reddie, Project Director and Inderjit Bhogal, Chair, of Set All Free, an initiative established by Churches Together in England to commemorate the bicentenary this year of the Act and to respond to its legacies.

Q How do you see the significance of the bicentenary?

Richard Reddie: Its significance was enormous. The 1807 Act outlawed the slave trade throughout the British Empire and made it illegal for British ships to be involved in the trade, marking the beginning of the end for the transatlantic traffic in human beings. Although it marked just the start of the road to the eventual abolition of slavery itself, it is the key date to mark and this year sees a programme of linked events. You can find out about these at www.direct.gov.uk/en/slavery/DG\_065970 and at www.setallfree.net/whats\_on.php There is a particular significance in the date for Christians. Because of the involvement of the Christian churches in the slave trade and also because of the role of Christians, both black and white, in working for its abolition, many events are being organised by Christian bodies. A National Service is being held at Westminster Abbey on 27 March to mark the bicentenary.

Q Is there an inter faith dimension to projects marking the bicentenary?

Inderjit Bhogal: Very much so. For example, the Yorkshire and Humber Faiths Forum (of which I am Director) and East Riding's Council Community Cohesion Group have developed the 'Wilberforce Way', a new 35 mile walk which will be launched in May 2007, linking Hull, the birth place of abolitionist William Wilberforce, and Pocklington where he went to school and from where wrote his first letter of protest from there against the African slave trade at the age of 14, and went on to become MP for Hull and then for Yorkshire. You can find out more about this at www.eastriding.gov.uk/newsflash/archive/07020207896.html The Wilberforce 2007 team at Hull City Council and the Hull and East Riding Inter Faith have worked with editor Rev Tom McCready of the Hull Unitarian Church to produce a special inter faith prayer book, From Every Heart in the City of Hope, as part of the 2007 Wilberforce Commemoration. Local young people have produced a music CD, Freedom Road, to accompany this. (Further information from thomas.mcready@tesco.net).

Q But did the 1807 Act actually end slavery?

Richard Reddie: Slavery was finally abolished in the Americas in 1888 but it is estimated that over 20 million people are still in forms of servitude today. And even where slavery has ended, there are bitter legacies that remain.

Q What factors have contributed to slavery and what can we do today to respond?

Inderjit Bhogal: Sadly, one of the factors has been justifications of slavery based on religious beliefs. Faith and the slave trade have links historically and even today. You can find out more about understandings of slavery of different religions at www.bbc.co.uk/religion/ethics/slavery/ Most 'contemporary slaves' come from countries where the major world religions are practised and we believe that the fight to end the legacies of the Transatlantic Slave Trade and contemporary enslavement must involve all faiths. All faiths uphold a belief in the sanctity of human life and faith can once more play an inspirational role in ending global slavery. I hope that people of all the faiths will work to help end contemporary forms of servitude.

Q You spoke of slavery's legacies. What are these and what role can faith communities play in helping end these?

Richard Reddie: The legacies are many, but in particular forms of racism and injustice. Much has changed in this country since the initial campaign to end the Transatlantic Slave Trade, and Britain is a richer society for its diverse religious and cultural influences. There is little doubt that these faith communities have a key role in the work to break down the barriers of exclusion and the vital task of building a fairer, more cohesive society where the legacies of slavery which affect many in minority ethnic communities are finally ended.

PLACES AND PEOPLE

Zoroastrians working for good inter faith relations

The Inter Faith Network links communities of nine world faiths in its representative body category: Baha'i; Buddhist; Christian; Hindu; Jain; Jewish; Muslim; Sikh; and Zoroastrian. The communities are all developing programmes of work to build good relations with other faiths and to increase understanding between faiths. In this issue we highlight the Zoroastrian contribution.

There are only around 6,000 Zoroastrians in the UK but in inter faith terms they make a very significant contribution. Recently, Dorab Mistry was elected as the Vice Chair of Faith based Regeneration Network (FbRN) and he is also a member of the Executive Committee of Inter Faith Network for the UK. Zoroastrian Malcolm Deboo is a staff member at FbRN.

Some other prominent Zoroastrians involved in inter faith work include: Jehangir Sarosh (Religions for Peace Europe and a former Vice-Chair of the Inter Faith Network); Shahin Bhekhradnia (World Congress of Faiths); Ervad Rustom Bhedwar (Week of Prayer for World Peace); Mark Gifford (Minorities of Europe); Marzbeen Jila (Religions for Peace UK); Phiroza Gan Kotwal (Harrow Interfaith Council); Homai Modi (World Council of Religious leaders of WCRP International); Aspi Cichiger (Inter Faith Council in Milton Keynes) and Tehmtan Framroze (Brighton and Hove Inter Faith Contact Group).

A number of other leading Zoroastrians also have an interest in this field, such as Zerbanoo Gifford, the Founder Director of the ASHA Foundation, which encourages and supports philanthropy worldwide and works for inter faith and intercultural understanding.

New Chair for MCB Interfaith Committee

Sheikh Ibrahim Mogra has become the Chair of the Interfaith Committee of the Muslim Council of Britain. The Committee handles MCB's inter faith related correspondence and arranges for attendance of inter faith events. For further information about the Committee's work, contact its Secretary, Mary Barber at mary@islamic-foundation.org.uk

CTBI appoints new Secretary for Inter-Faith Relations

Churches Together in Britain and Ireland have appointed Rev Peter Colwell as its Secretary for Inter-Faith Relations (part-time) in which capacity he is serving the Churches Commission on Inter Faith Relations. A United Reformed Church minister since 1994, he has served as Deputy Director of the London Inter-Faith Centre and URC Adviser on Christian-Muslim relations. Contact details: ccifr@ctbi.org.uk

Churches Together in England appoints its first Inter Faith Officer

Churches Together in England has appointed Celia Blackden as its first Inter Faith Officer (part-time), in response to the Churches' requests that this area of work should be given a higher priority. Celia Blackden is a Catholic and a member of the Focolare movement who has worked for many years in the field of inter faith relations. She took up post in the autumn and will focus on encouraging and resourcing relations between Christians and other faith communities in the regions and counties, and working through 'Churches Together' groupings. For more information about this work see www.cte.org.uk/group/group.aspx?id=43001

Board of Deputies appoints new Interfaith Officer

In December, the Board of Deputies of British Jews appointed Aviva Dautch as its new Interfaith Officer to work with the community in facilitating and promoting inter faith relations. Her role at the Board will include promoting both strategic and grassroots inter faith dialogue and will involve steering a Home Office funded research project on the Jewish community's involvement in inter faith work; sitting on governmental advisory bodies; and working in education with students and teachers.

OBITUARIES

Most Venerable Dr Medagama Vajiragnana

The Most Venerable Dr Medagama Vajiragnana, Buddhist scholar, teacher and inter faith pioneer, died in December after a long period of illness. His funeral at Kensal Green Crematorium was attended by many hundreds of mourners both Buddhist and of other faiths. Born in 1928 in Sri Lanka, where he was ordained, he studied in Sri Lanka and India. His roles in Sri Lanka included that of Principal at the Parama Dhamma Cetiya Pirivena in Ratmalana and Principal at Pirivena Teachers' Training College in Ratmalana.

Dr Vajiragnana spent the years from 1966 to 1980 and from 1984 until his death in Britain where he made a major contribution to the development of Buddhist teaching. From 1984 he was the Head of the London Buddhist Vihara. In this role, he became involved in the setting up of the Inter Faith Network for the UK in 1987. He played a leading role in its work for nearly 20 years, tirelessly speaking at meetings and with visitors and emphasising the importance of respect, tolerance and informed dialogue. Dr Vajiragnana served as a Network Executive Committee member until 2004 and as Vice-Chair from 2000 to 2001.

Dr Vajiragnana also represented his community in many other contexts, from the annual Commonwealth Day Observance to the Remembrance Day service at the Cenotaph. He took particular pleasure, however, in the opportunities for deeper dialogue and friendship afforded by inter faith meetings and, alongside his multi faith engagements, took an active role in Buddhist-Christian dialogue. In the New Year's Honours list 2006, he was appointed OBE for his services to inter faith relations.

Brian Pearce, the Network's Director, spoke at Venerable Vajiragnana's funeral of the enormous contribution he had made to the development of good inter faith relations in Britain and the great loss that was felt by his many friends of all faiths.

Natubhai Jagivan

Nathubhai Jagjivan died on 19 October 2006. Born in Nairobi, Kenya, in 1925, he came to the UK in the exodus of Asians from Kenya. He was a founder member of the Leicester Council of Faiths, where he served as Vice-Chairman and also as Honorary President. Leicester colleagues note that he devoted his time and tireless efforts throughout his life for the benefit of the community as a whole. His affiliations with a large number of different organisations in Leicester and across the UK, both Hindu and multi faith, demonstrated the importance of good cross-cultural links for an integrated and peaceful society. His efforts in charitable fundraising, community events, organisation of religious programmes and his leadership qualities of being a well-respected, honest and hard-working member of the community will all be very greatly missed.

Dr Beman Khosravi

Dr Beman Khosravi, a leading member of the Northern Ireland Baha'i community and founder member and former treasurer of the Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum died in August, aged 73.

NORTHERN IRELAND

On 18 January the Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum held its AGM at Stranmillis University College, Belfast. This was followed by a presentation from the Rev Inderjit Bhogal Director of the Yorkshire and Humber Faiths Forum

An open meeting of the Northern Ireland Inter Faith Forum took place in the Conference Hall of Stranmillis University College on 18 October. It was in the form of a symposium on the theme of Religious Education in a Multifaith Context, with contributions from a range of people concerned with the development of a broad and inclusive approach to RE in Northern Ireland's schools.

SCOTLAND

On 29 October the Scottish Inter Faith Council hosted its AGM, with representatives of faith communities and inter faith groups present from all over Scotland and an open public meeting. The public meeting featured a key note address by Catriona Noonan, from the Department of Film and Media, Stirling University who gave a presentation on 'The Media, Religion and Scottish Identity'. This was followed by workshops on the same subject.

Throughout October a number of training events were held. Some focused on delivering training to faith communities on the 2003 (Religion and Belief) Employment Regulations and others were delivered to organisations keen to raise their general awareness of faith communities in Scotland. This training is on-going and is currently part of SIFC's remit.

SIFC also facilitated workshops at the Scottish Women's Convention on 26 October on the 'needs of women from faith communities'.

Scottish Inter Faith Week took place from 25 November to 2 December. The aim of the annual Inter Faith Week is to promote dialogue, understanding, and co-operation between Scotland's diverse religious communities. The 2006 Week was launched at Glasgow University with around 150 people from all the major faith traditions in attendance. Short presentations were given by representatives of the Christian, Muslim, Hindu, Buddhist and Baha'i traditions. A welcome was given by the Convener of the Inter Faith Council and representative of the Jewish Community, Dianna Wolfson, and Professor Andrew Nash, Clerk of Senate, Glasgow University. Interspersed between the presentations Glasgow University Chapel Choir sang and chanted. The event also included the launch of the NHS (Education for Scotland) Multi-Faith Resource for Healthcare Staff.

Religious Leaders of Scotland also hosted their first national conference during Inter Faith Week 06. Keynote speakers included Cardinal Keith O'Brien and Professor Haldane from St Andrew's University. Workshops were held exploring such topics as 'spiritual identity and social cohesion', 'faith communities in dialogue and cooperation', 'education and faith schools' and 'religion and the media'. SIFC acted as secretariat for the conference.

Throughout inter faith week local events were held in Glasgow, Edinburgh, Dundee, Skye, Aberdeen, East Renfrewshire, Fife, Dumfries and Galloway and Ayr. In Glasgow and Edinburgh a whole week of activities took place. The finale of Scottish Inter Faith Week is an annual Youth Conference. The conference theme was 'Visions, Dreams and Realities'. The conference included a key note address from Shiona Baird MSP who commended the SIFC Youth Group for their publication 'Our Sacred Earth' and encouraged those present to work together on practical projects to help save the planet. The conference also included storytelling, drumming, clay meditations, music, a Religion and Human Rights DVD, faith exhibitions and vegetarian lunch. Despite atrocious weather conditions around 85 young people from diverse faith traditions and none attended.

Dumfries

An inter faith seminar took place on 4 December at the University of Glasgow Dumfries Crichton campus with speakers Louis Bezuidenhout, Church of Scotland minister; Samier Hamad, who is doing a PhD on the identity of British Muslims; and Venus Carew, a member of the local inter faith group. The event included group discussion on creating a culture of respect and getting dialogue between faiths and a 'Time for Reflection', with words of peace, love, tolerance and forgiveness from all the world's religions, led by Jan Lethbridge, with music by Rosalyn Blake and singing by Rosalind Connell.

Fife

Fife Interfaith Group held its first inter faith event on Saturday 11 November in Rothes Halls, Glenrothes. It was open to anyone interested in finding out more about the different faith communities in Fife. Information on different faiths was available to be picked up or people were able to speak directly with faith representatives. The Scottish National Museum in Edinburgh loaned information about a range of faiths. Playing in the background throughout the event was music from various faith traditions and a light buffet with food from the different communities was also available. One of the speakers provided information on the work being done nationally with the different inter faith groups across Scotland through the Scottish Inter Faith Council.

The Group has produced an information leaflet on the different faiths in Fife and this is available through Frae Fife. Further information from: Zahida Ramzan, tel. 01592 413652.

Glasgow

In November, the Secretary of the Churches' Agency for Inter-Faith Relations in Scotland (CAIRS), Sr Isabel Smyth, addressed a meeting in Falkirk attended by members of Falkirk Churches Together and of the Falkirk Islamic Centre. Sr Isabel's talk was entitled, "Islam has nothing to do with us!" The ensuing discussion convinced all present of the continued desirability and need for dialogue and cooperation between members of the two faith communities, particularly in the light of a recent arson attack on the local Islamic Centre. Further information from CAIRS Education Officer, Andrew Sarle on 0772 456 8259 or at andrew.cairs@acts-scotland.org.

As a follow on to a study day led by Rabbi Nancy Morris of Glasgow Reformed Synagogue (GRS), the Churches' Agency for Inter-Faith Relations in Scotland (CAIRS) arranged a visit to GRS to attend Shabbat service, join in Kiddush and dialogue with members of the Synagogue on Saturday 24 February.

WALES

Funding across the last year from the Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund has enabled the Inter-Faith Council for Wales (IFCW) to develop its work further with the assistance of Project Worker, Brigid Bowen. IFCW continues to meet regularly, and is in the process of applying to become a Charitable Company. Members of the Council are looking forward to enjoying new links with Welsh regions and local inter faith groups through a new network of inter faith initiatives being developed which Brigid Bowen describes as enabling dialogue groups to enjoy a new sense of fraternity with a larger inter faith community. IFCW hopes that its website – interfaithwales.org – will help these diverse groups meet.

IFCW helped to support the launch of the Swansea Faiths Forum in November. The Forum's work with environmental charities and with Swansea Council is a beacon example of how larger civic Faith Forums can contribute to cohesion in cities. Such forums can also be a platform for religious and other spiritual communities to make their voices heard on issues of current concern.

Cardiff

In December Cardiff's Rabbi Mordechai Wollenberg invited members from Muslim and Christian communities to the Orthodox synagogue, to share a Friday night Shabbat supper with members from both the Reform and Orthodox Jewish communities.

ENGLAND – REGIONAL AND LOCAL UPDATES

East

The East of England Faiths Council (EEFC), the regional body that brings together the major faiths of the six counties, has been active in recent months in facilitating debate and increasing its support for faith groups engaged in community activity. This support is provided through the FaithNetEast programme funded by FCCBF, and run jointly with Anglia Ruskin University. Information and Learning Events held in September (Chelmsford) and January (Norwich) have attracted more than 100 delegates from faith groups involved in a whole range of projects, from youth activity to language classes. Delegates were able to network, and find out more about topics including funding, governance and evaluation. FaithNetEast is also providing development advice to selected pilot projects, and a monthly e-bulletin to the 2,300 faith groups on its database.

EEFC itself, which is the main point of contact between faiths and regional governance, has secured funding from its RDA to extend the Faith in the East of England research by looking in more detail at certain aspects of faith-based community activity; it has also undertaken a further study with faith representatives on Local Strategic Partnerships, Local Area Agreements and SREPs that will result in a summer event to address their expressed needs.

The Council has also been invited by a number of organisations, including the Environment Agency in the region to work with them on literature reflecting the contribution of the faiths in addressing climate change.

Luton

Yasmin Aktar, Luton Council of Faiths' Development Worker, writes: "On Saturday 2 December some young people from Luton, made history by speaking in the Council Chamber, nestling into the seats usually occupied by Luton Borough councillors. Let's face it together, a Youth Conference organised by Luton Council of Faiths, featured a variety of speakers, presentations and workshops involving statutory and voluntary organisations, community representatives from different faith backgrounds, local councillors, as well as LCoF and Luton Borough Council's community cohesion team. Organising Representatives from LCoF and Grassroots and various other colleagues and organisations from Luton were impressed by the understanding shown of issues such as drugs, crime, immature/premature sex, teenage pregnancies, late night party culture, faith and education. There was also an issue based play presented by performing arts students from Luton Sixth Form College."

East Midlands

Derby

The Forum of Faiths for Derby in conjunction with the University's Multi-Faith Centre held a poetry competition for the people of Derby and Derbyshire. The theme was "How I Feel About Faith Or Religion Or Spirituality". It stimulated a response from many budding poets of different faiths and none and 140 poems were submitted to the three judges, Adrian Buckner, Julie Lumsden and Sean Woodward, all local poets with an interest in faith. The prizes were presented at an event held at the Multi-Faith Centre in November attended by the prize winners and local people and presented by the Mayor of Derby. Following the prize giving and a buffet the five winners read their poems and then there was entertainment by local Asian dancers and Baha'i singers. All the places of worship in Derby and those whose entries were published have received a free copy of the poetry booklet which contains the best, as agreed by the judges, 48 poems. It can be purchased for £4.00 to include post and packing from The Multi-Faith Centre, University of Derby, Kedleston Road, Derby DE22 1GB or tel 01332 591574 or email mfc@derby.ac.uk All proceeds to help the Forum of Faiths for Derby.

Leicester

Leicester Council of Faiths has recently appointed a new Co-ordinator, Dr Ajay Aggarwal.

Peterborough.

A Festival of Faith and Foods in Peterborough took place on Sunday 21 January at Peterborough Town Hall. The annual event was organised by the Peterborough Inter-Faith Council and hosted by Peterborough City Council. The topic of discussion was the view of different faiths on Environmentalism. Peterborough City Council chief executive Gillian Beasley said: "Global concern about the environment and climate change means that people of all faiths need to consider how their beliefs and moral values can influence the way they care for the planet.” Jaspal Singh, chairman of Peterborough Inter-Faith Council, added: “It is important that all individuals work together with national and local government organisations to protect the planet. This festival will promote community and cultural cohesion as delegates reflect on how the sacred writings of different faiths encourage us to care for the earth.” Participant Gaurav Prinja writes “The event begun with a fantastic spread of foods from different cultures in a buffet style lunch. Having filled our stomachs with different foods that were all delicious, we then took our places in the main hall and filled our intellects with different faiths that were all environmentally friendly. There were eminent speakers from the Sikh, Christian, Muslim, Hindu and Jewish communities who each gave informative insights into the view of their faiths on the planet and the role and responsibilities of mankind.”

Faith Forum for London

Leaders of London’s faith communities gathered on 29 November at St Ethelburga’s Centre for Reconciliation and Peace to hear the findings of the first feasibility study into the setting up of a Faith Forum for London and to discuss the next steps. The findings reveal strong support for a London-wide independent forum whose primary purpose would be to enable faith communities to develop responses to local, regional and national government policy initiatives. Kate Monkhouse, Director of London Civic Forum, said that the study has produced a blueprint that could bring the project to life.

Inter Faith Event for Young Londoners

On 20 February, Diversity and Dialogue worked with the British Library to put on a youth inter faith event for young Londoners. This followed on from its event at the British Museum in October 2005 and formed part of the lead up to the British Library’s Sacred Texts exhibition. Young Londoners of all beliefs and backgrounds were invited to a day of dialogue and activities. The event focused on issues including freedom of speech and religious conflict. There were small group discussions and also space for more creative expression and the learning of new skills during arts and spoken word workshops. After the event, the young people’s views were recorded and will be edited into a resource that can be used by schools to provoke dialogue in Religious Education.

Barnet

Barnet Multi Faith Forum held a plenary session on 8 November in the presence of the Mayor of Barnet, Councillor Eva Greenspan. Representatives from the Christian, Muslim, Jewish and Hindu and Jain Faith Communities participated in an “Any Questions” programme on the topic of faith schools. The chairman for the evening was Superintendent Richard Walton of the Barnet Police.

Clapham

Christian communities came together in the first week of February for a series of talks in Clapham. Shi’a Muslim leader, Maulana Kamzi, spoke at the Clapham Methodist Church each evening from Sunday 4 to Wednesday 7 February. At this time of year, Shi’a Muslims remember the martyrdom of the Prophet’s grandson, Imam Hussain. The theme of the event was “The sufferings of Imam Hussain and Jesus.” Accompanied by Christian leaders from around Clapham, Kamzi explored themes such as the love of God, according to the New Testament. Around 30 Muslims and 30 Christians, along with people of other faiths and of none, participated each evening and learned about each others’ beliefs and shared traditions. The event was supported by the Clapham and Stockwell Faith Forum and the South London Interfaith Group. For information or to get involved in similar events, email Hannah Barker at info@csff.co.uk

Hillingdon

The local authority held a meeting on 12 September to discuss the development of an inter faith network for Hillingdon. The meeting was opened by the Mayor Cllr Routledge and chaired by Director of Social Services, Hugh Cunnachie, with presentations from Hillingdon SACRE, Hillingdon Metropolitan Police and from Sutton Faith and Belief Forum and the Inter Faith Network for the UK and contributions from a range of members of local faith communities. Further information from Fiona Gibbs fgibbs@hillingsdon.gov.uk.

Islington

An inter faith conference, 'Strengthening Communities and Promoting Well Being', supported by the Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund, took place on 12 October at historic Wesley's Chapel in London. Hosted by Islington Faiths Forum, the conference aimed to bring together the leaders and representatives of Islington's faith groups to identify and share common values; present IFF's aims and objectives, achievements to date and future plans; acknowledge and celebrate contributions of faith groups that support community well being; and explore how faith groups can develop the capacity to get more involved in local and national initiatives.

Lambeth

Faith Around the Elephant is a new network growing up for people of faith living, working or worshipping around the Elephant and Castle in the London Borough of Lambeth who would like to meet their neighbours from different religious and spiritual traditions. On 7 November they held a meeting at the Keyworth Centre for interested individuals to share stories about elephants from religious sources with Sarah Clive from 'state of the heart' storytelling and to discuss ideas for future meetings and events. They are planning to meet roughly every 6 weeks in 2007. Further information from suzanne@abcfilm.clara.co.uk

Tower Hamlets

An Inter Faith Week was held from 12 to 19 November, as part of the Tower Hamlets Inter Faith Forum programme for 2006-2007. Funded by the Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund, Inter Faith Week was the first project of its kind celebrating the diversity of faith communities in Tower Hamlets. Objectives of the project included the celebration of the vital contribution religious faith makes to the lives of the local communities; fostering greater understanding and respect between communities; and breaking down prejudice and discrimination based on faith while promoting social cohesion. Events included an Eid party; an opening gathering bringing together faith leaders, people interested in inter faith work and members of the local authority to engage in discussion; a film night; a children's art exhibition; a tour of the Museum of Immigration and Diversity, a workshop titled 'Tolerance and Diversity' for young people; a comedy night; faith trail; and a music and food festival.

The events were enjoyed and contributed to by over 450 people of all backgrounds and beliefs. Further information from interfaith@towerhamlets.org.uk

Wandsworth

In October, young people in Year 9 or above taking Religious Studies at school in Wandsworth attended a 'speed-dating' event at the town hall. Here, they were able to fire a series of quick-fire questions at representatives from the borough's different faith groups. The Faith Direct initiative was organised by Wandsworth Local Strategic Partnership Multi Faith-Sub-group. It brought together speakers from local Muslim, Christian, Hindu, Sikh, Jewish and Buddhist communities. 65 students from seven secondary schools conducted a whistle-stop tour round the room interviewing each faith representative in turn. Executive member for children and young people's services for Wandsworth, Kathy Tracey, said: "Wandsworth is a modern and diverse borough which is home to many communities. This unique event set out to improve young people's understanding of different faiths and the common bonds that exist between them."

Wimbledon

The Wimbledon Interfaith Group organised a meeting last October at a local RC Church where Robi Damelin, an Israeli mother who had lost her son to a Palestinian sniper, spoke with Ali Abu Awwad, a Palestinian who had lost a brother shot by an Israeli soldier. Both speakers are active in the Bereaved Families Forum: Israeli and Palestinian Bereaved Families for Peace, set up in 1994. This organisation, comprising 500 families across the divide, channels their grief towards work for reconciliation and non-violence through many educational and artistic initiatives. 55 people came to the meeting including Jews, Christians and Muslims. More information from www.familiesforum.co.uk

North East

Middlesbrough

Cleveland Interfaith Group held its annual 'Cultural Evening' on 24 January at Middlesbrough Council of Faiths. It was an opportunity to share the ways and thoughts of the members of the different faith group as well as to share food brought for an inter faith supper. 20 people attended the gathering and each member was given an opportunity to share their thoughts, which were diverse but not divisive. As always, the event closed with those present joining hands and saying 'The Lord Watch Between You And Me, While We Are Absent One From Another.'

A Festival of Faiths was held on 12 December in Middlesbrough, organised by Middlesbrough Council of Faiths and Middlesbrough Council. 120 people attended the event which was planned in response to a request from the Community Councils in the town to learn more about the different faith traditions. There was singing from Muslim and Christian groups and the 'Diversity Game' (developed by Suffolk Inter-Faith Resource to extend players knowledge of different faiths and beliefs) was played at round tables. Representatives of five different faith communities gave 5 minute summaries of the key aspects of their faith, followed by questions from the floor. The evening ended with a shared meal.

A number of social events have been organised by the Women's Initiative of Middlesbrough Council of Faiths to build social contacts between women members of all the faith communities, to break down barriers of misunderstanding, build friendships, and identify issues that women members wish to work on together. These events include social gatherings at which women present have a conversation with other women in an adaptation of 'speed dating'; and women only swimming classes in which each group of 12 women normally comprise 6 different faith traditions. As a result of these activities, friendships across faith groups are being developed.

Newcastle

The Hindu Temple Newcastle held an inter faith service as part of a Shat Chandi Maha Yagya event on 22-25 February which had as its purpose prayer for peace and prosperity for people of the North East and of the world. Rt Revd Martin Wharton, Bishop of Newcastle, chaired.

North West

Manchester

On 9 January, some Manchester Christians and Muslims joined to celebrate their common father, Abraham. The idea came from a Muslim youth worker, who involved his mosque committee and then ran it past the Anglicans' European Officer, who involved the Christians. The event took place at the Al Khizra Mosque in Cheetham Hill, Manchester. Some Christians and a Muslim talked about what Abraham meant to them, followed by further discussion and a meal. The next step may be an evening at a church after Easter, to talk about Jesus, a figure of great importance to both faiths.

Pendle

A Peace Vigil to mark the first anniversary of the earthquake disaster in Pakistan, where an estimated 75,000 people died and over 3.3 million were left homeless, was organised by Building Bridges Pendle on 6 October. The vigil was held in remembrance of those who had died and also in recognition of the reaction of the local community in responding to the devastation. The welcome address was made by Dr Malik, followed by speeches from guests and a two minute silence to pray for the victims.

Rochdale

Rochdale Multi Faith Partnership held a meeting on 10 February in Littleborough to help people learn about other faiths. There were displays on the details of birth, death and marriage and charity in the different faiths. A Hindu guest speaker was invited from Vishwa Hindu Parishad to explain in slightly more detail about these rites in the Hindu faith. The Hindu speaker, along with a Muslim and two Christian representatives then took questions from the floor ranging from the queries about specifics of how rites are performed to philosophical questions about the nature of death. Similar meetings, but with variation in inputs from different faiths, were held by RMFP in Heywood and Middleton on 27 January and 17 February.

Stockport

Stockport Inter-Faith Network held a meeting in November on 'Young people and faith'. Samantha Dunbar from Save the Children gave a presentation about its "Diversity and Dialogue" project. The aim of the project is to build better understanding between young people living in a multi faith society. Following her presentation, three discussion groups formed to look at questions prepared by Samantha from her experience of the project. This was followed by a showing of the DVD produced by the young people from the project. The DVD has been designed as a resource for youth groups and classroom settings to stimulate discussion amongst young people. Further information about the project at www.diversityanddialogue.org.uk

Warrington

At the invitation of Warrington Council of Faiths, and hosted by the Mayor of Warrington Cllr Linda Dirir and her Consort Allin Dirir, himself a Muslim, Christian leaders came together at Warrington town hall at the close of Ramadan. About 20 gathered for conversation and refreshments, as part of the Toc H 'Tea and Cake' initiative, which encouraged simple acts of kindness and occasions of hospitality between 11 September and 11 November, two dates significant in the 'war and peace' calendar.

South East

Brighton

Brighton and Hove Inter-Faith Contact Group held its AGM on 18 February at the Brighthelm Church and Community Centre in Brighton. Dr Indarjit Singh, Director of the Network of Sikh Organisations, spoke on 'The relevance of Sikh teachings in today's multicultural society'.

Crawley

In November the Crawley Interfaith Network hosted a visit by two members of the Jerusalem Peacemakers, Eliyahu McLean and Sheikh Bukari, the former an Israeli Orthodox Jew, and the latter a Palestinian Sufi Sheikh. The organisation is dedicated to bringing peace in Israel-Palestine by encouraging people of different faiths and social groups to come together to speak with one another and share their experience of loss and conflict, and the vision which their respective faiths offers them. Jerusalem Peacemakers is composed of Jews, Muslims, Christians and Druze, Israeli and Palestinian. The speakers described how the leaders have succeeded in bringing together people of very radical views and opposing ideologies.

Guildford

Between February 19-23 a Festival of Faiths was held at the University of Surrey. Lunchtime exhibitions on faith took place and evening panel discussions were held on such topics as 'building inter faith understanding' and 'women's leadership in religion'. Further information from Sarah Talcott, Inter Faith Education Officer s.talcott@surrey.ac.uk.

Portsmouth

On 6 December, there was a Muslim-Christian evening to celebrate jointly the birth of Jesus.

Around 80 people of all ages took part in the event at St Thomas's Cathedral in Old Portsmouth. The evening started with prayers followed by a tour of the Cathedral. The tour was followed by a meal where all the Muslims brought halal meat dishes and all the Christians brought vegetarian dishes, so everybody could indulge without having to worry. Taki Jaffer of the Portsmouth Interfaith Forum commented "There was genuine engagement all round where everybody seemed to have someone to talk to....This was community cohesion at its best."

Thames Gateway

Thames Gateway Women's Multi Faith Forum members spoke to a meeting in Maidstone of an inter faith group interested in offering spiritual support to people suffering from Alzheimer's disease or dementia. There are to be follow-up meetings with TGWMF's local Alzheimer's and Dementia Support group. The Forum has also been advising their area's Supporting Fosterers' Service, on issues of concern when fostering a child of a faith different to that of the host family. Together with other local Partners, the Forum organised a well attended seminar on domestic abuse, "Why Suffer In Silence".

West Midlands

A Conference. "Cohesion Through Faith – Good Practice and Positive Action in the West Midlands" was held by the West Midlands Faiths Forum (WMFF) in collaboration with North Staffordshire Forum of Faiths in November 2006 to look at community cohesion and practical actions that can be taken locally to foster inter faith dialogue and understanding. A conference report highlights examples of good practice and outlines a wide range of ideas for practical actions to strengthen community cohesion. The Report is available from www.wmfaithsforum.org.uk or from Ruth Wagstaffe, WMFF Secretariat Tel: 024 7652 1326.

Birmingham

Birmingham will be hosting a wealth of special events to mark European Capital of Culture 2008. Birmingham Council of Faiths is planning to develop a series of "pulpit exchanges" among leaders of different faiths in the run up to 2008. The aim will be to promote greater understanding and appreciation of other cultures and faiths. In 2008 there will be a major conference to celebrate and share experiences.

Sandwell

Sandwell Multi-Faith Network hosted a conference, 'How we use sounds and silence in our worship', on 3 February at Christ Church C of E Primary School in Albert Street, Oldbury. It provided an insight into the rituals of various religious beliefs. Network Officer, Barbara Dixon, commented: "People will work with or live near people of a different faith and may have wondered why they engage in certain rituals or behaviours. Hopefully the conference answered some of these questions in a user friendly way." Further information from: Barbara Dixon, tel. 0121 544 6423, or email: sandwellmultifaith@yahoo.co.uk

Telford

Over 120 people attended two public meetings organized by Telford and Wrekin Interfaith Group (known as 'TWIG') on two consecutive Tuesday evenings in November. A local councillor chaired and each participating faith was invited to provide a speaker who would take some ten minutes to offer a personal perspective on 'What I believe'. Questions from the floor were then invited before the turn of a speaker from another faith.

Wolverhampton

The Wolverhampton Inter Faith Group, which is one of the older local inter faith organisations in the country, has been renamed as the Wolverhampton Inter Faith Council to reflect the organisation's coalition of diverse faith communities, groups and agencies. The new name underlines the significance of collaboration in the organisation's work.

Worcestershire

Worcestershire Inter-Faith Forum (WIFF) have been engaged in two major activities. The first, titled 'Engaging Faith Communities in the Youth Justice System', is in partnership with the Youth Offending Service. The Forum is overseeing the project through a small steering group. Currently, the research worker, Roy Griffiths, has commenced interviews and mapping work. The second activity has been with Worcester Cathedral in a two day 'Faith on the Move' project for 6th formers. A panel of speakers from different faiths addressed the students, who were provided with food prepared by the Forum's Vice Chairman, Malik Fazaz. Three WIFF members also led an afternoon for the RNIB New College in Worcester. A teacher fed back: "The students appreciated the non-patronising and gentle tone of the debate and the great role models provided...people of different faiths who clearly have great liking and respect for each other."

South West

On 31 January 30 people from seven different faith groups met in Taunton to explore their shared concerns for their communities and for the region. The event was organised by faithnetsouthwest, in partnership with the SW Council of Faiths. Edson Burton, Development Worker with the Bristol Multi Faith Forum, outlined the scope of work for faith communities engaging with Bristol City Council, and the limitations of capacity and sustainable funding. The Forum works in two directions: providing information and developing understanding of faith issues in the public sector and maintaining links between faith groups. Jonathan Marshall, Director of the Plymouth Centre for Faiths and Cultural Diversity, spoke about the work of the Centre in bringing people of different faiths together and in the education in faith matters both of school students and public service workers: the dialogue with the public sector is important, suggesting that most important of all is to retain the core values of one's own faith in all these contexts. Rev Heather Pencavel, Director of faithnetsouthwest and Faith Communities Representative on the SW Regional Assembly, spoke of the place of faith in shaping public policy – remaining true to one's beliefs, but listening with openness to the agendas of others and working with them for change.

In the group discussions which followed, there was agreement that more meetings would be helpful – perhaps an annual regional event and more frequent meetings at sub-regional level. Three themes emerged from the day: the need for inter faith understanding; the possibilities of multi faith working; and the related theme of the government's faith agenda, which often moved at a different speed than the faith groups could achieve and so risked failing to hear their voices.

Yorkshire and Humber

'Faith 2 Faith. was the first ever region-wide inter faith event for 16 to 25 year olds in Yorkshire and the Humber. Organised by Yorkshire and Humber Faiths Forum, the event was attended by over 100 young people from a variety of faith backgrounds from across the region. It was held at Leeds University on 12 December to discuss discrimination and injustice, celebrate different faiths and ensure that young people's voices are heard on issues that matter to them. The conference formed the start of a programme of activities by the Yorkshire and Humber Faiths Forum to create a platform for young people of faith for dialogue and to influence policymaking. Kiran Bali, spokesperson for young people from the Yorkshire and Humber Faiths Forum, said: "Young people are young citizens in all communities with their own particular needs and hopes. By creating platforms for young people to discuss views, we encourage their direct contribution to the agendas of democracy, citizenship and social inclusion."

The conference included a wide range of young people from diverse faiths talking about their experiences of discrimination and a variety of workshops looked at ways to tackle discrimination positively through creativity and working with the media, dialogue and partnership. The event also explored innovative ways in which young people can continue to engage in issues of importance to them and can be involved in the ongoing work of the Yorkshire and Humber Faiths Forum including the setting up of a Youth Council.

Calderdale

Calderdale Interfaith Council (CIC) held its Annual Interfaith Celebration Event on 6 December at the Square Chapel, Halifax. The theme chosen was 'Peace and Respect'. Faith representatives including the Bahai, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim, Sikh and Quakers all provided a brief overview of the significance of the theme in their traditions. The event was jointly chaired by the Mayor of Calderdale Councillor Colin Stout (CIC's Chair), and CIC Vice Chair Rev Wendy Wilby, Vicar of Halifax. The event was attended by over 170 delegates. Presentations were delivered jointly by young people and faith representatives. The Hindu presentation included young people playing instruments and the bhanja, the Muslim presentation included a young person reciting the Qur'an, the Jewish representative sang their own songs dedicated to the theme and the Sikh young people played various instruments. At the end there was a minute's silence followed by an evening buffet supper.

Leeds

On 18 October, Leeds Concord Interfaith Fellowship held its annual Peace Service at the Quaker Meeting House. The service involved readings, music, meditation and the lighting of candles for peace by representatives of the faith communities in Leeds. Two new items to the programme included 'passing the Peace Flame' and signing the Peace Flag, which was then taken to Faslane in a peaceful protest over Trident.

York

York Interfaith met on 14 January. A volunteer from each faith represented read some teaching, offered a prayer or gave a brief synopsis of ideas from their faith background on making a peaceful world. A discussion followed on how to move forward on building good inter faith relations in York, especially in involving young people. The York Interfaith calendar of events, a calendar of festivals in various faiths and other literature from Yorkshire and Humberside Faiths Forum and the Inter Faith Network for the UK were made available.

RESOURCES

Women's Inter Faith Initiatives in the UK: A Survey

Commissioned by the Inter Faith Network from Dr Fatheena Mubarak and published in October. The report examines some of the different types of inter faith initiatives set up and run by women, gives many examples of 'good practice' throughout the report, reflects on the role of women in inter faith work more generally and provides a basis for further work in future on this important area. The report can be downloaded from the Network's website or bound hard copies can be ordered from the Network office at a cost of £5.50 plus £2 postage and packing. ISBN 1 902906 27 6

Faithful Representation: Faith Representatives on Local Public Partnerships

Report by the Centre for Local Economic Development at Coventry University, the Church Urban Fund and the Faith-Based Regeneration Network (FBRN) on behalf of the Department of Communities and Local Government (DCLG). The report details findings of research exploring the experiences of representatives of faith communities on local partnerships, such as Local Strategic Partnerships. Among other findings, it indicates that over 80% of faith representatives on local public partnerships surveyed would like to see the establishment of a national network for them with an easily accessible expertise database to enable them to communicate more effectively and draw upon the support, experience and expertise of one another. A downloadable summary of the report is available at www.cuf.org.uk/resources Further information about the research from billy.dan@cuf.org.uk

Faith in LSPs?: The experience of faith community representatives on LSPs

Report published in December by the Churches Regional Network, by Phillip Escott and Pat Logan. The report analyses how faith communities are involved in Local Strategic Partnerships and looks at the experience of faith community representatives on these. It can be downloaded at www.cte.org.uk/Publisher/Article.aspx?id=63910

Faith and Nation

A report by the Evangelical Alliance, was published on 23 October. Christian denominations and representatives from other faiths were invited to contribute. The report offers 100 recommendations on areas such as religious liberty, the environment, and constitutional matters, including the call for the Coronation ceremony to retain the phrase 'Defender of the Faith'. Launching the report, the Evangelical Alliance's Public Policy Director, Dr David Muir, said, "The report offers Christians, people of other faiths, and those of no faith, resources for engagement, discussion and action on a wide range of contemporary issues. We hope the report will help people understand the continued importance of the Christian faith in 21st century Britain". The report can be downloaded from <http://www.eauk.org/faithandnation/upload/faith%20and%20nation%20finalrevised.pdf>

The Imam and the Pastor

A 40-minute documentary, The Imam and the Pastor, had its first public screening on 9 December before an audience of nearly 300 people in the Friends House, Euston in London. The film tells the story of Imam Muhammad Ashafa and Pastor James Wuye of Kaduna, northern Nigeria. Both once led armed gangs in defence of their communities at a time of religious and ethnic conflict in their city in the early 1990s, and now they are joint directors of an Interfaith Mediation Centre. The film shows how, drawing on their respective faith traditions, they have succeeded in overcoming their animosity towards each other, and have created a partnership which has been effective in calming tensions in Nigeria and elsewhere. The event was co-sponsored by Initiatives of Change (www.uk.iofc.org) and the Nigerian High Commission. ### Women's Interfaith Media Literacy project website

Coming soon – www.wiml.org a 'One stop shop' interactive media web site. On 27 March Clare Short MP will launch this web site designed by the Women's Interfaith Media Literacy project of National Board of Catholic Women(NBCW). Regional, interactive, media taster days are planned to encourage women to meet together and become more media active. The site and taster days will help people in faith communities become more easily informed and actively engaged in understanding and influencing the ways in which all forms of media affect our lives and those of our children. The project has been developed with ecumenical and inter faith partners and was set up with the help of a grant from the Faith Communities Development Fund. The project has a small management group and an Advisory Panel of women from different faith networks. The impetus for the project was concern on the part of NBCW and partners about the premature sexualisation of and marketing to children in the media, the portrayal of faith and faith communities in the media and the continued exploitation and stereotyping of women in the media. ## FUNDING

Roger Hooker Memorial Trust

The Roger Hooker Memorial Trust offers grants of up to £500 (and occasionally more by agreement) to organisations and individuals involved in inter faith work or who wish to run an inter faith event. The trust was established six years ago in memory of Dr Roger Hooker and its aims are to promote good relations between faith communities in the Birmingham and adjacent urban areas through encouraging and developing interfaith and intercultural understanding at all levels, but particularly among young people. Bids are considered quarterly and forms can be obtained from our secretary at margaretozanne@fsmail.net or ring 0121 449 3839. For other enquiries call its Chair, Mr S S Mandla, on 07980 44 85 83.

Inter Faith Youth Trust (Alma Royalton-Kisch Trust)

The Inter Faith Youth Trust is part of the Alma Royalton-Kisch Trust which was established to promote the education of children and young people about the religions of the world and funds projects that bring together young people of different faiths to improve collaboration and understanding. Chair of the Trust, Simon Abbott said, "The Trust funds a variety of different projects ranging from safeguarding children from child abuse to inter faith conferences and arts and environmental projects. Priority is given to projects which are organised and run by young people." Grants of up to £3,000 are available to fund or part-fund projects. Further information and grant applications forms are available at www.kisch.org.uk. All applications and work reports should be on the Trust form downloaded or supplied on request. Applications should be submitted in the previous month for decision at meetings held in March, July, and November.

NASACRE/Westhill Awards

The National Association of Standing Advisory Councils on Religious Education (NASACRE) have announced the NASACRE/Westhill Awards 2007/8 for Young Inter-Faith Projects. The programme has been made possible for the third year through a grant from the Trustees of the Westhill Foundation. Local SACREs are invited to apply for awards for projects which promote dialogue between young people of different faith positions and seek to benefit the local community. All SACREs have already received full documentation, but further information and an application form may be found at www.nasacre.org.uk. Applications for an Award should be received at NASACRE's office in the University of Birmingham by 31 March.

Connecting Communities Plus: Community Grants, Round 2

In December, CDF announced Round 2 of a grants scheme for local communities, on behalf of the Department of Communities and Local Government, to increase race equality and community cohesion within communities. This £1 million fund is aimed at a local level and CDF believes local communities are in an excellent position to work with others to improve their own situations. Applications are welcomed from small, locally run and managed voluntary and community organisations who want to improve opportunities for people locally and to improve relations between people of different ethnic and/or faith backgrounds. The Fund has four key priorities derived from 'Improving Opportunity, Strengthening Society', the Government strategy to increase race equality and community cohesion, one of which is: 'bringing together communities from different races and faiths, and promoting a shared sense of belonging (community cohesion)'. Guidance notes and application forms are available to download at www.cdf.org.uk. To talk with CDF about the fund, ring 01223 400343. Closing date for applications is 29 March.

CALLS FOR INFORMATION

South East mapping exercise to identify faith groups working with offenders

The South East Reducing Re-Offending Strategy was published in March 2006 and applies to all activity with offenders and those on community sentences in the South East. The work of Pathways, Partnerships and Alliances, under the auspices of the Regional Offender Manager (ROM), is to “facilitate effective partnership working across the statutory, private, voluntary and community and faith sectors.” A Voluntary and Community Sector (VCS) and Faith Alliances Steering Group has been set up to ensure that the interest and perspectives of partners from this sector are taken into account on an ongoing basis as well as act as a conduit for informing and advising the ROM commissioning process. The Department of Social Responsibility in Guildford Diocese is undertaking a mapping exercise to identify different faith groups working with offenders. A questionnaire has been produced and the Diocese would appreciate anyone involved in this work completing it. Please contact Jane Schofield at Janeschofield@cofeguildford.org.uk or tel: 01483 790333.

Growing up in a Mixed-Faith Family: A Project at the University of Warwick Is Looking for Participants

A three year study, funded by the Arts and Humanities Research Council on growing up in a mixed-faith family, will take place from June 2006–May 2009 at the University of Warwick. Currently, there are few solid statistics on the number of mixed faith or inter faith marriages and academic research in this area is scant. Yet every faith community is aware that such marriages are on the rise, particularly among young adults. The research team, comprising Dr Elisabeth Arweck, Dr Eleanor Nesbitt, and Prof. Robert Jackson, is building on previous studies of religious nurture in the Warwick Religions and Education Research Unit (WRERU) in investigating how children, whose parents have different faith backgrounds (namely Christian, Hindu, Muslim or Sikh) form their own religious identities. The research team would welcome any relevant information and contact with members of mixed-faith families. Please contact: Elisabeth Arweck, tel: 02476 528 434, email: elisabeth.arweck@warwick.ac.uk

Carnegie Trust – Inquiry

The Carnegie UK Trust is actively seeking public participation in its http://democracy.carnegieuktrust.org.uk/civil\_society Inquiry into the Future of Civil Society. The Inquiry will explore the possible future threats and opportunities for the development of a healthy civil society, looking out to 2025; Identify how policy and practice can be enhanced to help strengthen civil society; enhance the ability of civil society associations to prepare for the challenges of the future. The Inquiry will last 18 months starting in November 2006. The Inquiry Commission is keen to hear views about future threats and opportunities for Civil Society in the UK and Ireland as well as contributions that reflect on the European and global dimensions of civil society, especially in so far as they relate to the UK and Ireland. ### Bridge Building at the Grassroots – Aston Centre study

In the Autumn, the Aston Centre for Voluntary Action Research (ACVAR) at Aston Business School, Aston University (www.cvar.org.uk) began an 18 month research project on 'Bridge Building at the Grassroots'. The research is exploring local and neighbourhood-based activity intended to build bridges between people and communities traditionally divided by ethnic or religious differences. It is focusing on London Borough of Tower Hamlets; the City of Birmingham; and Oldham Metropolitan Borough. At this stage of the project, the research team are finding out what bridge building activities are taking place in each of the three areas and would welcome help in this since many of these activities are not well known or widely publicised. If you are aware of any examples of organised formal or informal interpersonal bridge-building activities in any of these three areas, or if you can put the team in touch with appropriate local people, please contact the Project Leader, Professor Margaret Harris on m.e.harris@aston.ac.uk or ACVAR's Research Support Officer, Selena Teeling on s.teeling@aston.ac.uk or tel: 0121 204 3253.

Inter Faith Network marks 20 years of working for good relations

The Inter Faith Network for the UK was founded in 1987 to promote good relations between people of different faiths in this country and to “advance public knowledge and mutual understanding of the teachings, traditions and practices of the different faith communities in Britain, including an awareness both of their distinctive features and of their common ground”. Its member bodies include the representative bodies of the Baha'i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jain, Jewish, Muslim, Sikh and Zoroastrian faiths; national, regional, local and other inter faith bodies; and educational and academic bodies specialising in inter faith relations. Together, and through their individual programmes, they work to promote understanding and respect between the faith communities in the UK.

The Network's National Meeting in Coventry on 16 July had an anniversary theme: 'The Inter Faith Network for the UK: 20 Years of working together for inter faith understanding and cooperation.' At it, member bodies looked back at some of the key moments of the first two decades and celebrated their work together as well as considering some of the continuing challenges.

Commission on Integration and Cohesion

The final report of the Commission on Integration and Cohesion, Our Shared Future, was published on 14 June. It puts forward a wide-ranging set of recommendations for practical action to address cohesion and integration issues at a local level, along with suggestions for a national framework to support these. It followed an interim report published on 21 February. The Government has said that it will be making its response in the Autumn to the Commission's findings.

The report reflected a programme of commissioned research; visits by Commissioners to a number of communities in England to hear about the barriers to integration and cohesion in different local situations and conversations with researchers; and practitioners working on integration and cohesion related projects. Commissioners also visited Northern Ireland to explore how issues of integration and cohesion are being handled there. It also reflected the 600+ responses to its consultation paper. These included a very high return level from the faith and inter faith sectors.

NETWORK NEWS

Inter Faith Network marks 20 years of working for good relations

Dr Indarjit Singh reflected in his keynote presentation on some of the most significant developments of the Network's first 20 years. Then, in 'Local inter faith work – a visual journey across 20 years', Chas Raws, Secretary of Merseyside Council of Faiths and member, Society of Friends and Urmi Raval, Project Officer of the Inter Faith Network, looked back across 20 years at how this vital area of work has developed and at the Network's role in this.

At lunchtime, Ven Bandula of the Sri Lankan Sangha Sabha and a Network Vice-Chair during 2006-07 spoke of the achievements of the Network and of the importance of the harmonious spirit of friendship characterising the relationships it has helped build. He spoke of the endeavours of members, staff and trustees who, across the 20 years, have helped the work come this far. He closed by saying "I pray that our work continues in the same peaceable, cooperative and effective way that it has done since 1987. Let us give thanks and join in a moment of celebration". Then a special 20th anniversary cake was officially cut by outgoing and newly elected Officers and by the Director and representatives of the four categories of Network membership.

Afternoon discussion groups were facilitated by Professor Brian Gates, Chair, RE Council for England and Wales; Rev Dr John Hall, Chair, West Midlands Faiths Forum; Pramila Kaur, Chief Executive of the Scottish Inter Faith Council; Dorab Mistry, Zoroastrian Trust Funds of Europe; Deepak Naik, Minorities of Europe; and Ann Noonan, Roman Catholic Conference of Bishops for England and Wales. Participants discussed the particular strengths of past work of the Inter Faith Network on which they thought the Network should build for the future; how the Network's role might develop most fruitfully across the coming years; whether there were any particular needs or tasks they wanted to identify; and how the framework of the Network, and the links which it provides can best be used to work together to deepen inter faith understanding and cooperation in Britain. Key points were fed back into the plenary in a short report back by Stella Opoku-Owusu, Inter Faith Network Project Officer.

Panellists Shaykh Ibrahim Mogra, Chair of the Inter Faith Relations Committee of Muslim Council of Britain, Rabbi Jacqueline Tabick, Chair of the World Congress of Faiths, and Dr Harriet Crabtree, Deputy Director of the Inter Faith Network reflected on some of the key themes that emerged during the day.

The meeting was chaired by Network Co-Chairs Bishop Tom Butler and Dr Nawal Prinja.

A full report on the National Meeting will be available from the Network office in the Autumn.

Network AGM

At the Network's AGM held in Coventry on 16 July in conjunction with its National Meeting the following organisations were admitted to Network membership: Churches Together in Britain and Ireland (in place of its Commission on Inter Faith Relations); Churches Together in England; Faiths Forum for the East Midlands; Joseph Interfaith Foundation; St Ethelburga's Centre for Peace and Reconciliation; St Philip's Centre for Study and Engagement in a Multi Faith Society; Blackpool Faith Forum; Bradford District Faiths Forum; Crawley Interfaith Network; Horsham Interfaith Forum; Keighley Interfaith Group; Faith Network for Manchester; Middlesbrough Council of Faiths; Portsmouth Interfaith Forum; Redbridge Faiths Forum; Rugby Inter Faith Forum; Swansea Faiths Forum; Tameside Interfaith Network; Westminster Faith Exchange; Centre for Christianity and Interreligious Dialogue at Heythrop College in the University of London; and Cambridge Inter-Faith Programme.

The AGM noted that the Centre for the Study of Jewish-Christian Relations, in the University of Cambridge, under its Director, Dr Ed Kessler, (which had been in Network membership since 2004) now formed part of the Woolf Institute of Abrahamic Faiths, which also incorporates the new Centre for the Study of Jewish-Muslim Relations which was set up in 2006.

The number of Network member bodies is now 150.

Bishop Tom Butler and Dr Nawal Prinja were elected as Co-Chairs for 2007-08, with Dr Manazir Ahsan, Dr Natubhai Shah, Dr Indarjit

Singh and Vivian Wineman as Vice-Chairs and Ramesh Shah as Treasurer. Dr Fatma Amer, Dina Gold, Dr Elizabeth Harris and Harsha Trivedi stood down from the Committee. The new members elected to it were Sughra Ahmed, Rev Peter Colwell, Aviva Dautch and Nitin Palan. Outgoing officers and other trustees were warmly thanked for their contribution to the Network's work.

Network document on faith and citizenship

The last issue of Inter Faith Update referred to a reflection document entitled "Faith, Citizenship and Shared Life In Britain Today" which had been sent to Network member bodies for comment last November and had also been put on the Network's website for wider comment. The final version of the document is now on the Network's website.

We are currently in the process of gathering pictures, quotes and memories about the Network's first 20 years for a special '20 Year' supplement to the Annual Review.

If you have any memories or stories that you would like to share about the Network please ring or email Urmi Raval at 020 7931 7766 or urmi.raval@interfaith.org.uk by Friday 7 September.

NEW EDITION Inter Faith Organisations in the UK: A Directory

ISBN 1 902906 314. £8.95 (£11 including postage and packaging) from the Inter Faith Network ifnet@interfaith.org.uk 8A Lower Grosvenor Place, London SW1W 0EN. Cheques payable to The Inter Faith Network or request invoice.

This fourth edition of Inter Faith Organisations in the UK: A Directory, published July 2007, lists more than 250 inter faith bodies promoting good relations. The directory is a valuable resource for all those engaged in the work of developing mutual respect, understanding and encouraging good relations between faith communities of the UK. It lists contact names, addresses, telephone numbers, websites and email addresses for 217 local, 14 regional and 25 national inter faith groups as well as brief information about the activities of each of them. Over recent years, there has been a steady increase in the establishment of local inter faith groups and this year alone, there are 27 new additions among those listed in the directory. There are also 11 other new entries, among them academic centres focusing on inter faith relations which is a category of listing new to this edition.

In the last 20 years the work of local inter faith bodies has become varied and local groups are engaging with public, private and education sectors on a daily basis. Since the 70s the number of local inter faith groups has nearly tripled. The increase of local inter faith bodies shows that dialogue and action among faith communities is increasing active.

NATIONAL UPDATE

Commission on Integration and Cohesion

The terms of reference of the Commission, which was chaired by Darra Singh, Chief Executive of the London Borough of Ealing, were to consider how local areas themselves can play a role in forging cohesive and resilient communities, by: examining the issues that raise tensions between different groups in different areas, and that lead to segregation and conflict; suggesting how local community and political leadership can push further against perceived barriers to cohesion and integration; looking at how local communities themselves can be empowered to tackle extremist ideologies; and developing approaches that build local areas' own capacity to prevent problems, and ensure they have the structures in place to recover from periods of tension.

The Commission was asked to undertake its work within the context of existing Government policy and to focus on developing practical solutions for local communities based on the best existing practice. It was also asked to consider the needs of communities defined by a shared characteristic (such as race or faith), which may require regional or national solutions. Recommendations for local areas were to cover England only, but the Commission was able to consider good practice from Scotland and Wales, and good practice from other countries.

The report notes the contribution that faith groups make to the life of local communities. In its recommendations it picks up, however, the fact that this contribution could be strengthened if there was a higher level of 'religious literacy' on the part of public agencies and recommends that 'faith communities should be encouraged to work with Government, the LGA and other relevant agencies to develop a programme to increase 'religious literacy''. The report notes also a possible under use of faith-based bodies by some local authorities 'due we think in part to the lack of understanding about faith groups, but also to a squeamishness about the possibility of their proselytising...[and] some evidence of a concern that engaging with faith groups might undermine the inclusiveness of the local authority's wider strategies.' It recommends that 'A set of clear guidelines should be developed to enable local authorities and others to be able to award public service contracts to faith based bodies without fear that there will be issues over whether this will lead to proselytising or pressure on users of services to accept the religious beliefs of the providers.'

More broadly, the report notes the fact that 'Religious faith is profoundly important to those whose lives it shapes' and that is 'is potentially a unifying force within society'. At the same time, the report notes that 'At times religious identity can be advanced in divisive ways or can become a factor which separates people from the wider community – for example in many of the areas where 'parallel lives' are most in evidence.' It underlines the importance of inter faith engagement: "We believe that the way relations between people of different faiths and beliefs develop in the coming years in England's diverse local areas will be very important to integration and cohesion. There has already been much effective work to develop these relationships but more needs to be done." The Commission recommends that 'Local authorities and LSPs conduct a brief 'audit' of opportunities for cross-cultural and inter faith engagement in their areas" It also calls for 'A nationally sponsored 'community week' with a focus on celebrating all communities and inter-community engagement' which could be a time, among other things, for individual faith and other groups to open their doors to each other. In an annex responding to the consultation of the then DfES on the Duty to Promote Cohesion, the Commission again picks up the significance of inter faith issues in relation to schools.

As well as stressing the important of inter faith engagement, the report also highlights the need for broader intercultural dialogue and for a more constructive conversation between those who are religious and those who are not. The report, overall, has a strong emphasis on interaction and shared citizenship.

The report is available free of charge from Communities and Local Government Publications, PO Box 236, Wetherby LS23 7NB. ## Government changes under the new PM

In the new administration formed in late June when Gordon Brown became Prime Minister the Department for Communities for Local Government continues to carry the main responsibility for relations between the Government and faith communities. However, the Department has new Ministers dealing with this issue and with issues of community cohesion. The Department's new Secretary of State is Hazel Blears; and a new Parliamentary Under Secretary, Parmjit Dhanda, who will be chairing the Faith Communities Consultative Council.

There have been significant machinery of Government changes affecting equalities issues including general responsibility for the new Commission for Equality and Human Rights.

A new Equalities Office has been established which is located within the Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) but will have its own Vote from the House of Commons. The Women and Equalities Unit, previously based in the Department for Communities and Local Government (DCLG), (and before that in the Department of Trade and Industry), are being transferred to the new Office. However, because of the links to the community cohesion agenda, race and faith issues remain located with the rest of the community agenda in DCLG.

Harriet Harman, who is Leader of the House of Commons, will be responsible for the Equalities Office at Cabinet level as Secretary of State for Equality. Barbara Follett, in addition to her current role as Parliamentary Under-Secretary at the DWP, will be Parliamentary Under-Secretary in the Equalities Office, with the title Minister for Equality. There continue to be lead Secretaries of State and Ministers for individual policy areas as follows:

- Harriet Harman is the lead Cabinet Minister for women and is supported in this role by the Women and Equality Unit in DWP
- Peter Hain, Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, is the lead Cabinet Minister for disability issues, supported by Ann McGuire, Minister for Disabled People, and the Office for Disability Issues in DWP.

- Hazel Blears, Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government, is the lead Cabinet Minister for race and faith issues.
- Stephen Timms, Minister of State at the Department for Business, Enterprise and Regulatory Reform, is also to play an important role in advising the Government on issues of concern to faith communities.
- Baroness Ashton, Leader of the House of Lords, will cover the equalities agenda there.

The Sub-Committee on Communities and Equalities, a sub-committee of the Domestic Affairs Committee, will bring together Ministers from across Government to discuss key policies on equalities and is to be chaired by Ed Miliband, Minister for the Cabinet Office.

The Governance of Britain

In early July the Government published a substantial document, under the title The Governance of Britain, setting out a wide range of proposals relating to constitutional arrangements in Britain. It covers proposals to limit the powers of the executive; to make the executive more accountable; to reinvigorate democracy; and to address issues relating to the citizen and the state.

There are a number of proposals which may be of particular interest to faith communities.

The document says that the Government intends "through an inclusive process of national debate to develop a British statement of values that will set out the ideals and principles that bind us together as a nation." As a starting point, over the next few months the Government will release a series of discussion documents and materials to inform this debate. The Government wishes to build on the current and ongoing work of various "expert and representative groups". The process of developing a British statement of values will involve local, regional and national level events and opportunities for contributing to it and the Government will engage with a wide range of people and groups, from individual members of the public to community groups, schools, academics, local authorities and other interested parties. The aim is the production of "a British statement of values that reflects the voices of citizens across the country". The document says the debate will also provide valuable insights into national views on citizenship and Britishness, which may be published after a period of dialogue and feedback.

The document also says that the Government plans to bring forward a comprehensive set of proposals to complete reform of the House of Lords and will develop proposals for a substantial or wholly elected second chamber.

It is also intended that the Prime Minister should in future not have an active role in the selection of individual candidates for appointment as Bishops of the Church of England. At present the Prime Minister receives two nominations and decides which to recommend to the Queen. It is proposed that in future the Prime Minister should receive only one nomination which he would then recommend to the Queen.

Preventing Violent Extremism – winning hearts and minds

In early April the Government published a new action plan to step up work with Muslim communities to isolate, prevent and defeat violent extremism. Preventing Violent Extremism – winning hearts and minds says that the Department for Communities and Local Government, working with others, will take this forward through four key approaches: promoting shared values, supporting local solutions, building civic capacity and leadership, and strengthening the role of faith institutions and leaders.

It set out the Government's immediate priorities as being to: broaden the provision of citizenship education in supplementary schools and madrassahs within the Muslim community; ensuring the most effective use of the education system in promoting faith understanding; supporting local authorities to work with their communities in tackling violent extremism; increasing the number of local forums on extremism and islamophobia; supporting the developing of "tackling violent extremism roadshows"; fundamentally rebalancing the Government's engagement towards those organisations that uphold shared values and reject and condemn violent extremism; strengthening the role that women can play within their communities; working with the Charity Commission to raise standards of governance in mosques; developing a new fully accredited Continuous Professional Development Programme for faith leaders; and establishing a framework of minimum requirements for all imams engaged by the state.

In launching the report, Ruth Kelly, then Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government, announced that the Government would be providing £600,000 to the Charity Commission to help it create a new Faith and Social Cohesion Unit; and would provide an additional £6 million to fund work in around 70 local authorities to tackle violent extremism. This work would include support for local authorities in establishing at least 40 new local forums on extremism and islamophobia in addition to the 12 already in place.

Accompanying the main document was a separate set of case studies of preventing violent extremism initiatives funded from the Preventing Violent Extremism Pathfinder Fund.

The Government's proposals were discussed at a meeting of the Government's Faith Communities Consultative Council on 6 June. Faith community representatives expressed concern that there had not been prior consultation with faith communities generally on these proposals and emphasised the need for more involvement of all faith communities in tackling this agenda. Plans are being made for further briefing and engagement of faith community representatives towards the end of August.

Condemnation of terror attacks in London and Glasgow

Following the attempted terror attacks in central London and at Glasgow airport at the end of June, statements condemning them were issued by the British Muslim Forum and the Muslim Council of Britain and also by religious leaders in Scotland. The statement from the British Muslim Forum spoke of "the duty of every British citizen to assist the Police in safeguarding national security and ensuring the safety of all our citizens." The MCB said that "those who deliberately seek to kill or maim innocent people are the enemies of all of us... Those who engage in such murderous actions and those that provide support for them are the enemies of all, Muslims and non-Muslims, and they stand against our shared values in the UK." Scottish religious leaders voiced their concern "that the public reaction to such attacks is not mis-directed against others by association of race or religious belief, and in particular against the Asian community” and said that “... any act of terrorism carried out in the name of religion is a gross perversion of the purpose of faith and is not supported by either the tenets of any of the faiths in Scotland nor by the vast majority of the followers of each faith.”

New counter terror proposals

In a statement to the House of Commons on 25 July Prime Minister Gordon Brown proposed fresh measures to tackle terrorism. He referred to three lines of defence: overseas at other countries’ ports and airports where people embark on journeys to this country and from where British embassies issue visas; security within Britain’s own borders; and ID security within Britain. He said that “the British way is that every measure we take to enhance security is complemented by additional protections against any arbitrary treatment and in defence of the liberties of the individual.”

The Prime Minister emphasised that the Government wants to consult widely and seek all party consensus on proposals relating to the treatment of intercept evidence and new provisions for pre-charge detention and post-charge questioning. He went on to say that there is a need to “work with all communities in all countries through debate, discussion, dialogue and education as we tackle at root the evils that risk driving people, particularly vulnerable young people, into the hands of violent extremists”. The proposal which has attracted most public comment is for an extension of the current limit of 28 days in the period for which a suspect may be held without charge, subject to certain judicial and Parliamentary checks.

Gordon Brown said that over the next three years the Government would provide an additional £70 million to support local authorities and community groups in improving the capacity of local communities to resist violent extremism. This would include developing leadership programmes for young people, strengthening capacity of women’s groups and local projects to build citizenship. This approach builds on the announcements in the Government’s earlier document on Preventing Violent Extremism – winning hearts and minds.

The Prime Minister said that the Government would “propose inter faith bodies in every community in the country to build greater understanding”. He had already mentioned in his responses during Prime Minister’s Question Time on 4 and 11 July his wish to encourage the development of local inter faith bodies across the country.

There are a number of ways in which anyone who is interested in the proposed new counter terror legislation can become involved in the Home Office’s consultation exercise on this. There is a website dedicated to the Bill which can be accessed at <http://security.homeoffice.gov.uk> and this contains a number of documents relevant to the Bill and related issues. Any queries or concerns about the Bill, the measures proposed for inclusion in it or pre charge detention can be emailed to CTBill2007@homeoffice.gsi.gov.uk

Commission for Equality and Human Rights

As reported in the last issue of Inter Faith Update, the Commission for Equality and Human Rights came into being as a legal entity at the end of last year following the appointment of its Chair, Trevor Phillips, in September and a number of other Commissioners in December. The Commission begins operations on 1 October when it will take over the work of the existing Commissions for Disability Rights, Equal Opportunities and Racial Equality commissions, together with responsibilities in the fields of age, religion and belief and sexual orientation. However, it has been made clear in recent statements that while the new Commission will be “open for business” from 1 October it will not be fully operational from that date.

In addition to its Chief Executive, Nicola Brewer, who was previously a civil servant in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, a number of senior management posts have been filled and arrangements have been made for the transfer of staff from the existing Commissions. The transition team has held meetings with a wide range of the Commission’s key stakeholder organisations, including the Inter Faith Network and the Religion and Belief Consultative Group.

There are still further Commissioner appointments which remain to be made, including one for which a candidate was sought with expertise in “faith and belief” issues.

Part 2 of the Equality Act 2006 providing protection against discrimination on the grounds of religion and belief in the supply of goods, facilities and services took effect on 30 April. Regulations made under the Act relating to discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation, which include certain exemptions for religion and belief organisations, also came into effect on 30 April.

Discrimination Law Review: proposals for a Single Equality Bill

In June the Government published a lengthy consultation document setting out proposals for a Single Equality Bill covering Great Britain (ie England, Scotland and Wales). These proposals have been developed through the Discrimination Law Review which was launched in February 2005. The Government subsequently announced that it is considering publishing such a bill, in draft, in the next Parliamentary session.

This is clearly a most important document which will contribute to the shaping of equalities legislation for Great Britain, including provisions relating to discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief. Among the many issues it addresses, the Review proposes the retention in a new Single Equality Bill of the present exemptions for religion or belief organisations from existing legal requirements dealing with discrimination on the grounds both of religion or belief and of sexual orientation in the fields of employment and vocational training and in the supply of goods, facilities, services and premises. It also opens up discussion on whether the duty on public authorities to promote equality should be extended to cover religion and belief.

The consultation document is available at www.communities.gov.uk/index.asp?id=15112. Responses to the consultation need to be sent by 4 September to the Women and Equality Unit, which, following recent machinery of government changes, is now in the Department for Work and Pensions. They should be addressed to Kate Hepher, Discrimination Law Review Team, Women and Equality Unit, Ashdown House, 123 Victoria Street, London SW1E 6DE or sent by email to kate.hepner@communities.gsi.gov.uk

The Government has said that it wants to take forward its proposals on a participative basis with the full involvement of all those who have an interest in this area and comments from everyone are welcome. Contact with stakeholders will continue during and after the consultation period as the proposals contained in the consultation document are further developed and refined. There are to be special arrangements to ensure that the Single Equality Bill is tailored to the needs of Scotland and Wales.

Part 1 of the paper asks for views on proposals to promote a culture of compliance with the law; to simplify and standardise definitions and tests in discrimination law; to simplify and harmonise exceptions; to simplify and harmonise the way the law treats public functions and public services; and to bring the law of equal pay into the Single Equality Bill and update it in line with case law.

Part 2 asks for views on proposals to allow a wider range of balancing measures to effectively address entrenched discrimination and disadvantage; to simplify the current duties placed on public authorities to promote race, disability and gender equality in order to tackle disadvantage more effectively; to consider extending the coverage of public sector equality duties to cover age, sexual orientation and/or religion or belief; to explore how public authorities can actively take account of equality issues in procurement; ways to improve equality practice in the private sector; and to improve the resolution of discrimination disputes outside the workplace.

Part 3 asks for views on whether changes should be made to the statutory protected grounds; the case for prohibiting age discrimination in areas outside employment; whether to strengthen the protection on grounds of gender reassignment outside employment; whether to strengthen the protection on grounds of pregnancy and maternity outside employment; whether to strengthen prohibitions on discrimination by private clubs; how to improve access to, and use of, let residential premises for disabled people; and whether express statutory protection from harassment should be extended outside the employment area for the different grounds of discrimination.

Racist and religious crime

The Crown Prosecution Service has produced a draft of a revised policy statement on the way in which they deal with racist and religious crime. This is because there have been changes in the law and CPS procedures since the publication of their first policy document in July 2003. The draft of the revised document can be found at www.cps.gov.uk/consultations/rrc\_index.html and comments on it are invited by 14 September which should be sent to jonathan.bushell@cps.gsi.gov.uk or in writing to Jonathan Bushell, Crown Prosecution Service, Cambria House, Merthyr Tydfil Industrial Park, Pentrebach, Merthyr Tydfil, CF48 4XA.

Faith Communities Consultative Council

A meeting of the Government's Faith Communities Consultative Council was held on 6 June. The agenda included Ministerial presentations on work with faith communities of both the Department for Work and Pensions and the Department for International Development (by Jim Murphy and Gareth Thomas respectively); the REACH Group's recommendations on work on raising the aspirations and attainment among black boys and young men; and the DCLG's document on Preventing Violent Extremism and the Winning hearts and minds.

Improving Opportunity, Strengthening Society

The Department for Communities and Local Government has published a 'two years on' progress report on taking forward the agenda set out in January 2005 in Improving Opportunity, Strengthening Society, the cross-government strategy to increase race equality and improve community cohesion. The report covers many areas of work across a range of Government departments.

In the chapter dealing with "Building cohesive communities" there is a section on engagement with faith communities. This says that in developing partnership working with faith communities the focus will be on:

- increasing faith communities' contribution to active citizenship and community cohesion, their role as agents of change within communities, and provision of services as part of the voluntary and community sector;
- drawing in the other faiths to work alongside, and support, Muslim communities in addressing radicalisation and extremism;
- developing the role of faith communities in wider social action and regeneration; and
- developing local and regional interfaith forums and structures, in line with the commitments we have made in the Local Government White Paper.

The document can be found at <http://www.communities.gov.uk/index.asp?id=1512143>

Faith groups and the BNP

A number of faith leaders and organisations including the Archbishop of York, the Muslim Council of Britain and the Jewish Council for Racial Equality, encouraged voters not to support the British National Party (BNP) in Yorkshire and other target areas in the local elections in May. The BNP is a legal political party but its perspective on a range of issues, including its perspective on Islam, have led many to see it as a threat to a harmonious and respectful multi faith Britain. Target areas for the BNP included Bradford, Sandwell and outer Essex. The party failed to gain significant numbers of seats in council elections, but did win increased support in some areas such as Windsor and Maidenhead.

Change in the English regions

In July the Government announced that the existing unelected regional assemblies in the English regions are to be abolished, with their powers split between local councils and Regional Development Agencies. The change does not affect the elected Greater London Assembly. No timetable has been announced and primary legislation will be required. It is understood that the change is unlikely to take place for two or three years.

These changes have been decided following a review of "sub-national economic development and regeneration" launched in the spring of 2006.

The Green Paper on The Governance of Britain launched earlier in July by Prime Minister Gordon Brown said that this sub-national review would “signal a shift of focus to local authorities, open up the possibilities of powerful city regions and give a clearer role for the regions of England”.

More details of how the roles of local authorities and of Regional Development Agencies will be affected are set out in the statement made to the House of Commons on 17 July by John Healy, now a Minister of State of the Department for Communities and Local Government. The full report of the review is to be found at www.hm-treasury.gov.uk/spending\_review/spend\_csr07/reviews/subnational\_econ\_review.cfm.

When he formed his Government the new Prime Minister appointed eight Regional Ministers to provide a “clear sense of strategic direction for their region” and more is said about their role in paragraphs 115 to 120 of the Government’s Green Paper, The Governance of Britain. The functions of the new Regional Ministers are mostly clustered around the responsibilities of the regional Government Offices providing “central government in the regions” and implementing a wide range of policies on behalf of 11 Whitehall Departments); and the Regional Development Agencies, which drive and coordinate regional economic development and regeneration. Regional Ministers will be able to take questions in Parliament on the work of regional bodies, and on regional strategies. The Government suggests that one means of achieving effective Parliamentary scrutiny would be through the establishment of nine regional select committees.

The list of Regional Ministers is: North East of England – Nick Brown; North West – Beverley Hughes; Yorkshire and the Humber – Caroline Flint; London – Tessa Jowell; South West – Ben Bradshaw; East Midlands – Gillian Merron; West Midlands – Liam Byrne; East of England – Barbara Follett.

Consultation on consultation!

The Government is reviewing its consultation policy and has issued a consultation document, Effective Consultation: asking the right questions; asking the right people; listening to the answers.

This consultation exercise is intended to seek evidence from a wider range of stakeholders to help in the design of an updated consultation policy which will lead to better consultation practices across Government. It forms the centrepiece of a review of the Government’s consultation policy and follows discussions within Government and with a number of external organisations on how consultation exercises can be improved.

The document, which can be found at www.cabinetoffice.gov.uk/regulation/documents/consultation/pdf/effectiveconsultation.pdf, is in two parts. The first discusses how Government currently consults and how this can be improved upon. It asks questions about the principles on which Government consultations should be based and how fulfilment of these principles should be monitored. It also explores the relationship between consultation and impact assessment and discusses how departments should consult. Issues which are addressed include awareness-raising, Government responses to consultations and consultation fatigue.

In the second part of the document three options for consultation policy are presented. These options have been designed to address, to varying degrees, some of the issues explored in the first part of the document. They are intended to stimulate discussion rather than being exhaustive.

Responses to the consultation need to be sent to the Cabinet Office by 28 September. These can be submitted in writing to Cabinet Office, 4th Floor, 22 Whitehall, London SW1A 2WH or by email to consultation.policy@cabinet-office.x.gsi.gov.uk

Religion and the law

Three cases over the last few months have involved the courts adjudicating in matters affecting religious belief and practice.

In February a ruling was given in a High Court case in which a Muslim schoolgirl sought judicial review of a decision reached last September by a head teacher to refuse to allow her to wear the niqab at school. This claim was dismissed, but the judge who heard the case made it clear that his judgment did not “concern or resolve” the issue of whether the wearing of the niqab should be permitted in the schools of this country which “is not a question that a court could or should be asked to resolve”. The judgment was concerned simply with the case in question. The full text of the judgment can be found at www.judiciary.gov.uk/docs/judgments\_guidance/x\_v\_y\_school\_full210207.pdf

In a second High Court judgment it was decided that a Christian schoolgirl was not discriminated against when she was banned from wearing a purity ring (which symbolises chastity) in school and that the school had not breached her right to “freedom of thought, conscience and religion” under Article 9 of the European Convention on Human Rights. The judge rejected the submission that the ring was a “religious artefact” and therefore exempt from the school’s uniform policy which bans jewellery.

In both these cases the legitimacy of the uniform policy operated by the schools in question was upheld.

The third and most recent case involved the decision by the Welsh National Assembly to slaughter Shambo, a bullock kept in the sanctuary of the Skanda Vale Temple near Carmarthen in South Wales, because it tested positive in a routine test for tuberculosis. The Government’s current policy is to kill any animal suspected of carrying bovine TB because of the threat to other livestock. Cows and bulls are considered sacred by Hindus who refrain from eating beef and both the Hindu Council for the UK and the Hindu Forum of Britain appealed for the life of Shambo to be spared. The Skanda Vale community took the Welsh National Assembly to court in the hope of preventing the implementation of the slaughter notice. The temple community argued that the bullock had been placed in isolation to prevent infection of other livestock and was also isolated from contact with the public in a specially constructed shrine within the main temple. The High Court in Cardiff upheld the appeal against the slaughter notice but this decision was overturned on an appeal by the Welsh National Assembly and Shambo was taken away from the temple for slaughtering shortly afterwards.

New cremation, burial and death notification and certification proposals

In July the Government circulated to a range of organisations, including a number of faith community bodies, its proposals for new cremation regulations. The consultation by the Ministry of Justice on these proposals ends on 22 October. The document is available on its website at www.justice.gov.uk. The proposals reflect two main policy changes. Firstly, the bereaved would have a right to inspect the medical forms before cremation. The Government is still considering what further changes might be required to death certification legislation in the light of the deaths of patients of Dr Harold Shipman. Secondly, cases involving contagious diseases would be handled differently. At the time of a pandemic the regulations would be amended to allow for a simpler procedure for the cremation of bodies.

The Ministry of Justice has also just published the Government’s responses to the consultation carried out in recent years on the basis of a consultation document produced in 2004 on burial law and policy which covered a wide range of issues concerning the provision and maintenance of burial grounds and the legislative framework within which burials and exhumations are conducted. The Government will now be proceeding to implement changes in these by making use of existing legislation wherever possible and by developing new guidance, introducing other changes by new primary legislation when the opportunity to do so arises. The Government’s conclusions were summarised in a statement to the House of Commons on 5 June by Harriet Harman, Minister of State in the Ministry of Justice. The full report is available at www.justice.gov.uk/docs/burial-law-policy.pdf

Also just published by the Ministry of Justice is a preliminary consultation paper on the statutory reporting of deaths to coroners, making proposals in relation to: the public service personnel on whom the duty to report deaths should rest; the specific circumstances and categories of death that should be reported to the coroner; and the sanctions that may apply if there is a failure to report a relevant death to the coroner.

The document is available at www.justice.gov.uk/docs/cp1207.pdf Responses to the consultation are to be sent by 7 September to Coroner Reform Team, Coroners’ Unit, Ministry of Justice 5.08, 5th Floor Steel House 11 Tothill Street London SW1H 9LH or emailed to coroners@justice.gsi.gov.uk

In its third report in July 2003 the Shipman Inquiry proposed a radical overhaul both of the Coroners’ system and of the arrangement for death certification. The draft Coroners’ Bill published by the Government in June 2006 embodied the Government’s response in terms of the Coroners' system. The Department of Health has now circulated proposals for improving the process of death certification in England and Wales in order to address the weaknesses identified by the Shipman Inquiry. The proposals are intended to provide a more transparent, proportionate, consistent and affordable system, which improves the surveillance of causes of death and removes current inequalities in the way burials and cremations are dealt with.

The consultation document is available on the Department of Health's website at www.dh.gov.uk/consultations Responses to the consultation are due by 24 October.

Organ donation

'Can we count on you?' is a new campaign encouraging the UK's black and Asian communities to become organ donors. The drive aims to dispel common myths that are known to affect the rate of organ donation and highlights the fact that people of black and Asian origin are three times more likely to need a kidney transplant due to increased diagnosis of diabetes, high blood pressure, kidney diseases and heart disease, which can lead to organ failure. The campaign is backed by comedienne Nina Wadia and Gina Yashere, as well as other prominent celebrities

Visit www.uktransplant.org.uk or call the Organ Donor line on 0845 60 60 400.

As a part of this national campaign, a leaflet titled 'Organ donation and religious perspectives,' is being distributed. Different faith communities helped some years ago in the development of this. The leaflet explains that none of the major faiths practised in the UK forbids becoming an organ donor and it lists the support religious leaders from Buddhist, Christian, Hindu,, Jewish Muslim, and Sikh faiths.

The leaflet can be downloaded at: www.uktransplant.org.uk/ukt/newsroom/factsheets/religious\_leaflets/general\_religious\_lflet-2005.pdf

There are also six leaflets covering the views of the six faiths which helped develop the material and they can be downloaded from: www.uktransplant.org.uk/ukt/how\_to\_become\_a\_donor/religious\_perspectives/religious\_perspectives.jsp

Religious charities and public benefit

To meet the statutory definition of a charity included in the Charities Act 2006 an organisation must both have purposes falling within the list of charitable purposes set out in the Act and operate for the public benefit. It removes the presumption that currently exists that those charities relieving poverty or advancing education or religion benefit the public.

The Charity Commission is under a statutory obligation to publish guidance on the way it proposes to exercise its powers and duties in relation to this 'public benefit' test. The 2006 Act does not define what is meant by 'public benefit' which continues to be governed by existing law, based on decisions made by the courts and the Charity Commission over the years. But in future all charities will have to demonstrate that their purposes benefit the public and the trustees of charities will be required to take account of the Charity Commission's guidance on public benefit when this has been finalised, reinforcing the general duties that Trustees already have to act for the public benefit.

The last issue of Inter Faith Update foreshadowed the publication in early March of a consultation document by the Charity Commission on the application to charities of the 'public benefit' test. The Charity Commission's consultation document can be found at www.charitycommission.gov.uk The formal consultation exercise by the Charity Commission on the basis of this document has now closed and it is due to issue in October general guidance on the public benefit test. However, the Commission will be launching towards the end of this year a three month public consultation on more detailed guidance dealing with the public benefit of charities established for the advancement of religion; as well as for the prevention and relief of poverty; and the advancement of education.

It is due also to publish in September next year the results of pilot public benefit assessments and to begin then its formal assessments. There is a commitment to review in 2010 the impact of the public benefit requirement.

In May the Charity Law Association held a day conference to discuss the public benefit test and the Charity Commission's consultation document. The report of this conference, For the Public Benefit, is now available from Plaza Publishing, 3 Rectory Grove, London SW4 0DX (020 7819 1200). The report includes a section on the application of the public benefit test to charities set up for the advancement of religion based on contributions to one of the workshops held in the course of the day.

Third sector developments

The last issue of Inter Faith Update reported on the publication in early December of an interim report of the Government's review on "The Future Role of the Third Sector in Social and Economic Regeneration". The final report on the review was published in late July by the Office of the Third Sector in the Cabinet Office. It sets out a strategy to promote the partnership between the Government and the third sector over the next ten years.

Most of the measures will be led by the Office of the Third Sector, which will invest more than £515 million in third sector programmes to support thousands of community organisations across the country.

The main aims outlined in the report are to help give third sector organisations a greater voice and to work with the sector to strengthen communities, transform public services, encourage social enterprise and support the conditions for the sector to thrive.

The Government will give third sector organisations more of a voice and ensure that third sector organisations are able to speak out and represent their communities.

The Government will develop innovative approaches to consultation, work to protect the rights of organisations to campaign and mechanisms to ensure Ministers hear the views of third sector organisations on policy. The Office of the Third Sector is planning to create a single advisory body drawing in expertise from across the third sector.

The Government will also work with third sector organisations to bring people from different backgrounds together to improve life in their communities. It will invest £50 million in endowments for community foundations to make sure they can provide grants in the future for community groups, and at least £10 million of new investment in community anchor organisations and community asset and enterprise development. In addition, the Government will provide £117 million of new resources for youth volunteering.

The report recognises the vital role of some organisations in helping to deliver public services, and contains a commitment to improve public services by fully drawing on the understanding and experience of the sector in designing, developing and delivering services. The Government will build the capacity of third sector organisations to improve public services, though the Futurebuilders Fund, which provides loans and grants to organisations looking to deliver public services, training for public sector commissioners and work to build the evidence on opportunities for the third sector.

The Government will also encourage 'social enterprises' – businesses with social and environmental aims. The Government will promote awareness of the social enterprise business model, and support its departments to investigate areas for social enterprise delivery, including getting social enterprise into the Key Stage 3 and 4 of the curriculum framework from 2008.

Finally, the Government wants to improve the environment in which all third sector organisations work. The Government will improve funding arrangements for the third sector, and make three-year funding the norm, rather than the exception; create a new national research centre as part of a programme to build the third sector evidence base; and implement a new third sector skills strategy. It will also invest over £85 million of new resources in developing third sector infrastructure through the Capacitybuilders agency, and continue to focus on the Compact as a means to build the relationship between the third sector and all levels of Government.

The full report gives details of all the proposals and can be found at www.cabinetoffice.gov.uk/third\_sector/documents/review/ots\_review.pdf

The report says that the Office of the Third Sector will champion and provide support to Government departments wishing to provide strategic and long term funding to third sector organisations to provide a consistent voice in public policy making, alongside the development or updating of departmental third sector strategies.

In this context the Department for Communities and Local Government is planning to develop a strategic partnership programme for engaging third sector organisations to provide a strategic voice and to support local action in the Department's policy areas. Subject to the outcome of this year's Comprehensive Spending Review, the Department plans to develop a new strategic partners grant programme providing core funding over a three year period for strategic partners. It will encourage the pooling of small grants programmes to the third sector to provide certainty, efficiency and the potential to develop deeper relationships with the third sector. The Department published a discussion paper on its plans in June, Third Sector Strategy for Communities and Local Government. Comments are invited by the Department on this by 20 September. Comments can be sent by email to thirdsector@communities.gsi.gov.uk or by post to Towards a Third Sector Strategy, DCLG, Zone 1/E5 Ashdown House, 123 Victoria Street, London SW1E 6DE. The document is available at www.communities.gov.uk/index.asp?id=1510989

The Department has also provided an Expressions of Interest Form for organisations to complete if they wish to enter a strategic partnering relationship with the Department, together with accompanying information on these arrangements. This makes it clear that the Department will not accept applications from certain categories of organisations including those the scope of which is solely local or regional; or whose work is primarily "the promotion of religious activity". Applications from partnerships/consortia may be submitted through a lead organisation. Only organisations that register their interest by 20 September and are subsequently given the status of strategic partners will be eligible to apply for strategic funding from the Department.

OFSTED reports improvement in Religious Education

In June the Office for Standards in Education, Children's Services and Skills (OFSTED) reported on its findings on Religious Education in schools and the impact of locally agreed RE syllabuses.

The report says that RE has improved overall in the past few years but there are still variations in the quality of provision and achievement by pupils remains very inconsistent. It questions whether RE in non-faith maintained schools is best served by the current statutory arrangements under which it lies outside the National Curriculum, with all 151 local authorities in England having responsibility for developing their own locally agreed RE syllabus. It suggests that this means that there is insufficient consistency in the quality of RE across the country and that RE cannot respond quickly enough to important national initiatives, such as the emphasis on a more flexible curriculum and the drive to promote community cohesion.

The report finds that RE often makes a positive contribution to the development of pupils' understanding of diversity and to the promotion of community cohesion. Nonetheless, it argues that the curriculum and the teaching of RE, particularly in secondary schools, do not place sufficient emphasis on exploring the changing political and social significance of religion in the modern world and that, as a result, the full potential of the subject to contribute to community cohesion, education for diversity and citizenship is not being realised.

The report argues that RE should not ignore controversy or the changes in the role and significance of religion in the modern world. Pupils should be taught that religion is complex but its impact is ambiguous and should be given the opportunity to explore that ambiguity. The current focus in RE on ethical or philosophical issues needs to be complemented by consideration of questions about the social role of religion.

The report finds that Standing Advisory Councils on Religious Education (SACREs) provide valuable support for RE when they are led and resourced properly. The report recommends that consideration should be given to extending the role of SACREs to reflect the priorities of promoting community cohesion and educating for diversity. However, many local authorities do not have sufficient resources to ensure that SACREs fulfil their responsibilities effectively. The report welcomes the recent submission to the (then) Department for Education and Skills by the Religious Education Council for England and Wales proposing a national strategy for RE.

Good relations on campus

The report of a conference, 'Building Good Relations on Campus', held by the Inter Faith Network with the Equality Challenge Unit (reported on in the last issue of Inter Faith Update) last November has been widely circulated and further work in this area is under discussion. The report can be downloaded free at <http://www.interfaith.org.uk/publications/campus.pdf>

Across the last two years, the Inter Faith Network has helped facilitate a series of conversations between national student religious bodies. In May, the following statement on building good relations was agreed by the Baha'i Youth Committee for England Catholic Student Forum (Catholic Youth Service); British Organisation of Sikh Students; Federation of Student Islamic Societies; National Hindu Students Forum; Student Christian Movement; Union of Jewish Students; Young Jains; and Young Zoroastrians:

Good Relations on Campus: A Joint Statement

The primary purpose of national student faith-based bodies is to resource, support and work for students of their own particular faith. At the same time, a commitment to dialogue and to working together to encourage good relations between our members on campus is of great importance.

Representatives from the national student faith-based bodies and relevant faith community youth committees have held a series of informal conversations across recent months, facilitated at our request by the Inter Faith Network for the UK. These have focused on the desire of our bodies to strengthen their mutual links in order to discuss together issues of common concern and to work to promote good relations on campus. Future work in pursuit of these aims is under discussion between our bodies, and also with the Inter Faith Network and the National Union of Students. This includes a programme of activities and of training opportunities to help students of different faiths on the UK's campuses to work with confidence and commitment to promote understanding and respect on campus between those of different faiths and beliefs.

On 29 June, Universities UK and Association of Managers of Student Services in Higher Education (AMOSSHE) held an event "Delivering good campus relations" which looked at new reports and developments since the publication of UUK guidance on related issues in November 2005. The event explored tackling discrimination on campus including anti-semitism and Islamophobia, as well as institutional approaches to good campus relations. ## RE programmes of study for Key Stage 3

Alongside the new national curriculum for secondary schools in England launched by the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) on 12 July a programme of study (which unlike the national curriculum material is non-statutory) for Religious Education at Key Stage 3 was also published. The content of this is substantially the same as the Key Stage 3 element of the non-statutory National Framework for RE published by QCA in 2004 offering national guidelines for the subject. The material can be found on the QCA website at www.qca.org.uk/qca\_12228.aspx

Faiths in FE

The National Ecumenical Agency in Further Education (NEAFE), Faiths in FE Forum (FiFE) and the Centre for Excellence in Education published, in July, Making Space for Faith: Values, Beliefs and Faiths in the Learning and Skills Sector. It is the report on a national enquiry carried out by NEAFE and FiFE into opportunities for spiritual and moral development in the Further Education Sector. Launching the publication on 16 July, the Minister of State for Lifelong Learning and Further and Higher Education, Bill Rammell, said: "This report comes at an important time for further education when we are working with colleagues from across the system to review how to strengthen its contribution to community cohesion."

The purpose of the enquiry was to build up a picture of:

- the role of the sector in enabling all members of society, irrespective of age, gender, ethnic background, values, beliefs and faiths, to engage with one another in shaping a positive approach to 21st-century pluralism

- the views of learners and staff in colleges and in workplaces on issues of values, beliefs and faiths
- how the system and its stakeholders could improve responses to learner and staff needs in relation to issues of values, beliefs and faiths in a way that is in keeping with the sector's economic, educational and social missions

A total number of 41 colleges and 924 individual students and staff participated in the enquiry, which found that:

- almost three quarters of students (74%) were more likely to feel part of a college or workplace that actively encouraged dialogue and activities between people and communities of diverse faiths and beliefs
- 79% of students, regardless of their own personal beliefs, thought that colleges should provide for people's faith and belief needs
- almost three quarters of staff surveyed (73%) thought that legal entitlement to spiritual, moral, social and cultural development provided for learners in school sixth forms through the 1944 Education Act should be extended to cover students and trainees over the age of 16 in the learning and skills sector

The report offers a number of recommendations for the government, agencies, colleges, learning providers, churches and faith communities.

The Queen receives inter faith award

On 17 May leading members of nine faiths were present at Buckingham Palace when The Queen was presented with a specially struck Interfaith Gold Medallion with diamond. The award was conferred in gratitude for the lead The Queen has given personally in the search for mutual tolerance, respect and brotherhood.

The traditional Jewish blessing upon meeting with royalty was recited by Chief Rabbi Sir Jonathan Sacks. Sir Sigmund Sternberg, one of the Founders of the Three Faiths Forum, then presented the award, making reference to Her Majesty's 2006 Christmas message in which she said that "it is very easy to concentrate on the differences between the religious faiths and to forget what they have in common". This, he said, summed up what the gathering on this occasion represented.

Moulana Shahid Raza of the Muslim College read out the accompanying scroll in which the leading members of the major faith communities placed on record their deep and sincere appreciation of the lead The Queen has given to the nation "in the promotion of respect and understanding for minority faiths and in seeking to include new communities as natural components of this society."

Three Faiths Forum celebrates 10 years

200 people gathered at the National Portrait Gallery on 9 May to celebrate the achievements of the Three Faiths Forum in its first decade. Speakers included Forum co-founder Sir Sigmund Sternberg; Sandy Nairne, Director of the Gallery; Rev Dr Marcus Braybrooke, a co-founder of the Forum; Henry Grunwald QC, President of the Board of Deputies; and Faris Badawi, son of the late Sheikh Dr Zaki Badawi, the third co-founder of the Forum; and Stephen Shashoua, Director of the Youth and Education Division of the Forum;

Imams and rabbis conference

On 26 March a conference of Imams and Rabbis took place in Manchester. 'Building Alliances, Respecting Differences'. Hazel Blears, then Minister without Portfolio at the Home Office, was among the speakers. In the course of her speech she said, "It is through inter faith dialogue and learning that true respect can be forged. Many Christians are simply unaware that the Qur'an reveres Jesus as a prophet. Many Jews, Muslims and Christians are unaware of the rich Abrahamic heritage we share in common. A study of other people's religions is a prerequisite for a greater understanding of one's own. There has been much discussion about the tensions between religions, races and ethnic groups. But I believe that Britain is an exemplar of how a multi-faith, multi-ethnic nation can work in practice. We are an immeasurably richer country for the contribution of people arriving here, often in search of a better life." John Battle MP, then Prime Minister's Envoy to Faith Communities, also addressed the Manchester conference.

Jewish-Muslim dialogue at conference for women

On 28 March in London a conference was held to bring together Jewish and Muslim women, including community leaders, congregational religious leaders, educators, social activists and grass-root members as well as young women in order to work towards greater inter faith interactions in a multi-faith and cohesive society. The conference was organised on behalf of the Imams and Rabbis Committee by the Joseph Interfaith Foundation and Alif-Aleph. Meg Munn MP, then Deputy Minister for Women and Equalities, addressed the conference. She said, "Having inter faith dialogue is important to the creation of a society that reflects positive interaction between people of all faiths and none. It can act as the social glue that joins our differences in culture, faith and ethnicity together. Inter faith activity is not just about conversation and discussion; it is about co-operation and devising practical examples which can inspire real change."

Jain Manuscript Catalogue launched

In the presence of H R H The Duke of Edinburgh over 300 Jain dignitaries, both local and international, and guests of other faiths attended the launch ceremony on 15 May at Buckingham Palace of the three volume catalogue of Jain manuscripts of the British Library. They included delegates from India, Singapore, Oman, Kenya and UAE. It has taken the Institute of Jainology over fifteen years to complete the project. Visit www.jainology.org for further details.

Younghusband lecture

On 26 April the annual Younghusband Lecture of the World Congress of Faiths took place at Essex Hall in London. Writer and broadcaster Jonathan Freedland spoke on "Multiculturalism: Is the British Model Failing?".

Jews and Christians consider slavery and redemption

Jews and Christians met together at Westminster Abbey on 19 April to explore shared values of social justice under the title 'Let My People Go'. The seminar, held by the Council of Christians and Jews to mark the 200th anniversary of the abolition of the slave trade, involved leading Jewish and Christian speakers and activists. The emphasis was on practical outcomes from shared traditions. Those present heard Clive Lawton, founder of the informal Jewish learning initiative 'Limmud' and Director of 'Tzedek', and Dave Tomlinson, writer and Anglican priest, on the question of 'redemption'. Malcolm Duncan, leader of the Christian social initiative 'Faithworks' spoke about the "shared commitment of Christians and Jews to affirm the dignity of humanity" and Rabbi Dr Jonathan Romain, historian and congregational minister, recalled the Biblical prophetic imperative to seek justice and righteousness in practical ways. The seminar was chaired by Jane Clements, CCJ's Director of Programmes. Canon Robert Reiss welcomed speakers and guests on behalf of the Dean and Chapter.

Alif-Aleph launches interactive web forum

On 29 March, Alif-Aleph UK, a grass-roots organisation promoting positive contacts between Muslims and Jews, launched the first interactive web forum for cross-community dialogue. The website, funded by through the Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund, provides the tools for a new and dynamic discourse to take place between Muslims and Jews of all ages throughout the UK and beyond. Alif-Aleph UK members were treated to a night of music from a variety of Jewish and Muslim traditions to celebrate the launch. To post on the forums, users need to visit <http://www.aauk.org/> and register some basic details. From there they can join already existing discussions or start new feeds on any subject they want.

Brian Pearce thanked for his service as the Network's Director

Brian Pearce stands down as Director of the Inter Faith Network at the beginning of September. At the close of the Network's National Meeting in Coventry on 16 July member bodies thanked him for his 20 years of dedicated service.

Dr Manazir Ahsan, a Vice-Chair of the Network, made a formal presentation on behalf of the Network. He spoke of the remarkable gift of time and skill which Brian had made, full time on a voluntary basis since the Network was founded. He said "The Inter Faith Network and Brian Pearce are so intertwined that these two appear to me as synonymous. The image that permeates the Inter Faith Network and makes it the cohesive and successful organisation has no doubt been shaped by Brian's mild and humble persona, his dedication and above all his handling of faith with care and sensitivity....Brian always downplays his role and never refers to himself as a 'founder' of the Network.....However, his dedicated, patient and determined work was probably the most significant factor in enabling the Inter Faith Network to come into existence. Likewise, it has been his careful, diplomatic engagement with people of the different faiths, as well as his tireless willingness to talk through difficulties on occasions when these occur, which has helped hold together, through nearly twenty years, a highly diverse network of faith community organisations and local inter faith bodies. His ability to bring out the best in people and to inspire work to build trust and understanding has helped the Network's own work prosper but also helped support and strengthen many other faith community and inter faith initiatives."

Bishop Tom Butler added his personal appreciation and read out a range of tributes that had been received. Following a presentation of a bouquet to Brian Pearce's wife Michelle, whose support of the Network has also been of enormous importance, Harriet Crabtree then joined Dr Ahsan to present to Brian Pearce a set of annual reviews from each year of the Network's existence; a bound photo book of twenty years of photographs put together especially for the occasion; and a selection of other gifts, culminating in a small Royal Crown Derby owl painted in beautiful colours which "seemed the most appropriate present we could find for one of the wisest directors that you could possibly imagine".

The meeting closed with those present marking their appreciation of Brian's contribution with a standing ovation.

The Inter Faith Network

The Inter Faith Network was founded in 1987. It works with its member bodies to promote good relations between the faith communities in the UK, to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make the UK a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions where all can practise their faith with integrity. The Network:

- provides information on faith and inter faith issues;
- advises on multi faith projects and inter faith issues;
- publishes materials to aid work in the religious and inter faith sectors;
- fosters inter faith co-operation on social issues;
- holds regular meetings where social and religious questions of concern to the different faith communities can be examined together;
- links 150 member organisations including: representative bodies from the different faith communities; inter faith organisations; local inter faith groups; and educational and academic bodies

INTERVIEW WITH BRIAN PEARCE

In September Brian Pearce will be standing down from his post as Director of the Inter Faith Network for the UK, having served in this capacity for just over twenty years.

Q You left a career in the Civil Service to help set the Network up and work full time for it. What was it that motivated you to do this?

My initial interest in questions of religious diversity came from my desire, as a Christian, to explore how I could relate theologically to other religious traditions. But I soon realised that there were important issues more concerned with relations between the communities here in the UK linked to these different religious traditions and their place in society. I became involved in the World Congress of Faiths and the Council of Christians and Jews, helped to set up a local inter faith group in South London and was asked to join the Committee of the Churches' Committee on relations with other faiths. Then the idea emerged of my taking a year's leave of absence from the Civil Service to explore ways in which the profile of inter faith work might be enhanced and links between those involved in it developed further. And I never went back to work in Whitehall.

Q As you look back on your time as the Network's Director, what are some of the main changes you have seen in the inter faith landscape?

The changes have certainly been considerable. Twenty years ago inter faith activity was, in general, relatively marginal and indeed seen by many as being vaguely heretical! Now it is a key item on the mainstream agenda of all our main faith communities. There were far fewer national inter faith organisations than now. Some pioneering work had been done in setting up local inter faith organisations over the previous decade. But by 1987 there were only 27 of them across the whole of the UK. Today there are 217. There was little interest on the part of Government, whether central or local, in inter faith issues and that continued to be the case until the setting up of the Inner Cities Religious Council in 1990 in which the Network was involved.

Q Are there moments in the work on which you look back with particular pleasure or satisfaction?

In many ways the most important times have been personal encounters and conversations with people from many diverse backgrounds. These have been a great enrichment for me. I am very sad when I hear initiatives to bring together people who might not otherwise meet being dismissed as "tea and samosas". Active projects and cooperation are important but so is building mutual respect and understanding at a personal level. More publicly, the Network's contribution in helping plan the faith dimension of the Millennium celebrations was a watershed and the Shared Act of Reflection and Commitment which we helped to organise in the House of Lords on 3 January 2000 was a very special occasion.

Q Do you have any thoughts about how you hope inter faith work in this country might develop in the coming years?

With over 250 inter faith bodies in the UK a good deal of the organisational fabric needed for this work is in place. But in many cases these structures need to be strengthened and the level of dialogue and cooperation to be deepened. And we need to ensure that inter faith work at UK, national, regional and local levels fits together well.

I am sure that the greater interest of Government in recent years, at both central and local level, in faith and inter faith matters has been of significant benefit, but the relationship is still settling down. I hope there will be greater stability in future in the Government's handling of its engagement with faith communities and that longer term funding will be provided for inter faith work. It makes an important contribution to the community cohesion agenda. But building good inter faith relations is an even broader long term task for faith communities themselves, both in tackling prejudice and stereotyping in their internal teaching and through their engagement in inter faith work.

I believe the Network itself will continue to have a vital role to play as a central source of advice and information, complementing and promoting the work of its member bodies. I am naturally delighted to know that the work of the its office will be in such good hands as my colleague of many years, Harriet Crabtree, becomes the Network's second Director.

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Diversity and Dialogue

James Sevitt has been appointed as a Project Officer at Diversity and Dialogue which is an inter faith and intercultural project working with young people based at the Citizenship Foundation. For further information see <http://www.diversityanddialogue.org.uk/>

Muslim dialogue development worker begins work at Blackburn Cathedral

A Muslim is working to promote dialogue between communities from Blackburn Cathedral. Anjum Anwar, previously an education officer at the Lancashire Council of Mosques, has been appointed to the newly-created post of Dialogue Development Officer. Her post is being funded by the North West Development Agency (NWDA) for an initial two year period. Canon Chris Chivers, who has responsibility for inter-faith issues, said he knew the move would raise eyebrows, but said: "We are not trying to convert each other, and we are secure enough in our own faith to do this." He said it is believed to be the first time a Muslim has been appointed to work from an Anglican Cathedral in an outreach role. Welcoming the development, Abdul Hamid Qureshi, Chairman of the Lancashire Council of Mosques, said: "This is very happy news for us in the Muslim community. It indicates the level of trust already developed between communities, and can help to take things to a new level." Further information at <http://www.ekklesia.co.uk/node/4962>

Church of Scotland

Iain Stewart has been appointed as the Church of Scotland's Inter-Faith Support Worker. His main role will be to offer advice and encouragement to local churches on inter faith matters.

Alan Race

In October, Rev Dr Alan Race, editor of Interreligious Insight, will take up the post of Dean of Postgraduate Studies at St Philip's Centre for Study and Engagement in a Multi-Faith Society as well as that of priest in charge of St Philip's Church, Leicester.

Obituaries

Henry Guterman MBE

One of the UK's best known Jewish community and inter faith activists Henry Guterman has died, following a stroke. He came to the UK with his family after the 1938 Kristallnacht pogrom and dedicated much of his adult life to working to encourage understanding and respect between people of different races and faiths. He was a central figure in most of Manchester's inter faith groups, including the Muslim-Jewish Forum and Indian Jewish Association, the Black Jewish Forum, the Council of Christians and Jews, and Manchester Interfaith Forum. He was a founder of the Black Jewish Forum. He also represented the Jewish community on the Manchester and Trafford Standing Advisory Councils for Religious Education, as well as on the Manchester Council of Community Relations. Some years ago Mr Guterman received an MBE for his work.

REGIONAL AND LOCAL UPDATES

NORTHERN IRELAND

On 23 June a small group of members of the Northern Ireland Inter-Faith Forum travelled to Rostrevor in County Down to visit the Benedictine monastery. The group included representation from a range of faith communities including Hindu, Buddhist and Bahá'í. The purpose was to visit the Benedictine Monks and to be present at their celebration of the Eucharist. The group was welcomed at the Monastery by Brother Thierry and had an opportunity for a conversation about the nature of inter faith dialogue and the opportunities that the Brothers have for inter faith encounter. They then joined the congregation that was gathering in the church for the celebration of the Eucharist and had the opportunity to be able to observe the Monks leading worship. They then travelled a short distance to Kilbroney park for lunch, where they were joined by some other members of faith communities in Rostrevor.

A week long Inter Faith Peace Walk from Dublin to London took place in May. Full details of the background to the walk and its route can be found on the following web site www.footprintsforpeace.net People from various communities organised accommodation and hospitality along the route and many even joined in parts of the walk. Civic receptions were being given by several towns along the route. Following this event a musical evening was held at the South Belfast Friends Meeting House where a varied programme of music was performed by many local musicians and there was an opportunity for those attending to speak with organisers of the walk.

SCOTLAND

Women from across Scotland from a variety of faith traditions joined together in an inter faith event at the Albert Halls in Stirling on 28 March 'Looking After One Another: The Safety and Security of Our Faith Communities'. This explored how to 'look after one another as women of faith' and hear about the work women within faith communities are doing to create a more cohesive and caring society. Guest speakers included women from Amina Muslim Women's Centre; the Samaritans; the Association of Baha'i Women Scotland; the Hindu Mandir, Glasgow; the Sikh Sanjog, Edinburgh; and from Rokpa Buddhist Centre, Dundee. Leah Granat the Jewish Parliamentary Officer also spoke. Pramila Kaur, Chief Executive of the Scottish Inter Faith Council, gave the opening address and highlighted the need for more effective engagement between representatives of the Police force and faith communities. At the event Association of Chief Police Officers Scotland (ACPOS) launched its Religion and Belief Action Plan which sets out a strategy for the more effective engagement of Police Officers and the faith communities.

Just a few of the local inter faith events which have been taking place in Scotland in recent months are:

Ayr

50 students attended an inter faith seminar on 17 April at University Campus, Ayr. Anwar Din and Fahed Kayani of Shawlands Academy, and Zam Zahid of Ashcraig School, gave a personal account of their Muslim faith. Discussion touched on family life, education, growing up in Islam, responses to stereotyping and discrimination, and partnership between the religions. It was an opportunity to put faith in context, from three different perspectives.

Dundee

Dundee people of Christian, Buddhist, Sikh and Baha'i Faiths, as well as some of no religion, participated in a walkabout, visiting places of worship in Dundee. These included the Rokpa Centre in Meadowside; St Paul's Church; the Hindu Mandir; and the Sikh Gurdwara, where the children gave presentations about their faith, in Punjabi and English, followed by a Sikh hymn.

Fife

Fife Interfaith Group visited various places of worship in Kirkcaldy on 19 May to raise awareness and gain a better understanding of other faith communities in Fife. The Group started their visit at Fife Islamic Centre, Cumbernauld Terrace and were met by the Committee who explained how the centre was run, the different prayer times and how they pray, and hold classes for children in Arabic. They were shown the body washing facilities where they prepare the deceased for burial. The next visit was to St.

Mary's Church in Dunniker Road - a Roman Catholic Church which had formerly been used by the Church of Scotland and is one of two Catholic Churches in Kirkcaldy. The Group completed their tour with a visit with the Buddhist Group who meet monthly at the Volunteer Centre and had a short introduction to the basic principles of the daily practice of gongyo and daimoku (chanting the title of the Lotus Sutra – Nam Myoho Renge Kyo).

Shetland

In June Shetland Inter Faith and friends gathered for the public launch of their constitution. Maureen Sier, Development Officer from the Scottish Inter Faith Council, gave a public address.

Skye

In April 'Faiths Together' in Skye held a meal and ceilidh to celebrate 'Our Sacred Earth'. In June representatives of the group attended 'The Power of Compassion' a programme of dance, chants and prayers by Tibetan Monks from Tashi Lhunpo Monastery at the Kyleakin Village Hall.

WALES

On 9 July the Centre for the Study of Islam in the UK and the Muslim Council of Wales held an event attended by over 400 people, entitled "Interfaith Dialogue: Muslim and Christian Perspectives". Cardinal Cormac Murphy O'Connor, the Archbishop of Westminster, spoke of the importance of inter faith in today's modern times. Dr Jamal Badawi, an internationally known speaker on Islam and Professor Emeritus, commented on the aims of inter faith work and how they can be achieved.

Swansea

Interfaith Swansea is developing a new website at interfaithswansea.org funded jointly by the Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund and the Communities @One Welsh Assembly Government initiative to help people in Communities First areas make the most of new technology.

ENGLAND

Meetings of English regional multi faith bodies

A meeting of representatives of the English regional faith forums, convened jointly by the Inter Faith Network and the Faith based Regeneration Network UK, was held in London on 17 April. The meeting endorsed plans for the setting up of a new 'English Regional Faith Forums Network'.

FaithAction (a consortium of Faithworks, Faith Regen Foundation and Lifeline) is carrying out a project funded by the Office of the Third Sector relating to the creation of a framework to support faith based organisations in tendering for the delivery of public services and to provide a 'voice' for them. Representatives of FaithAction attended part of the meeting on 17 April to facilitate discussion of the relationship between its work, which has an important regional dimension, and that of the regional faith forums. The meeting also heard a presentation from Faithworks on the second round BASIS bid that they will be submitting to the Lottery for funding for work on supporting Christian, and possibly multi faith, structures.

A further meeting of representatives of those regional faith forums in membership of the Network took place on 30 April to discuss the Network membership review and associated issues. It was agreed to undertake further work on clarifying the relationship between inter faith work at national, regional and local levels.

East

Faith Making a Difference, a networking event for faith representatives on Local Strategic Partnerships (LSPs) in the East England, took place on 13 June at the offices of Stevenage Borough Council. It was organised by the East of England Faiths Council, the regional faith forum that brings together the major faiths in the Region, together with Welwyn Hatfield Interfaith Group. Jenny Kartupelis, Director, East of England Faiths Council, spoke about faith communities connecting with regional governance and supporting local action; Terry Osborne, Chief Partnerships and Performance Officer, Welwyn Hatfield Council, addressed the topic of engaging the local community in partnerships and looked at the possibilities for joined up working in the future; Christine Novelli, Chair of Welwyn Hatfield Inter Faith Group, looked at the contribution of faith communities to Local Strategic Partnerships; and Natubhai Solanki, a trustee of the Hindu Community Centre, Luton, spoke from the experience of a community worker. Participants had the opportunity to put questions to the speakers and there were two workshops: 'Finding our way in a new territory with a new language' and 'What am I meant to do?: Developing the role'.

Bedford

An inter faith cricket match was held on 10 June between Luton Council of Faiths and Bedford Council of Faiths. This event was a return match between the two groups after one held last June. The aim of the game was to use the widespread interest in cricket as a catalyst to bring different faiths together. Spectators were welcomed and refreshments were provided. Visit www.bcof.org.uk for more information about the event.

Cambridge

Cambridge Inter Faith Group held its 5th Cambridge Faith Fair at Guildhall, Market Place, in the Small Hall on 24 June. Visit http://www.cam.net.uk/home/interfaith/ifg\_diary.html to find out more.

Suffolk

A celebration of the people who make up Suffolk's past and present was the focus of a week long series in May of seminars, workshops and a photographic exhibition, 'The Faces of Suffolk'. The events were organised by Suffolk Inter Faith Resource and Suffolk Racial Harassment Initiative and other partners. The seminars held in St Michael and All Angels Church Occold were on faith and cultures and were aimed mainly at staff of statutory bodies and local industry but were also open to others interested. On different evenings evening there were guest speakers from the Hindu, Muslim, Jewish, Sikh and Buddhist faiths traditions where the topic of My Life and Faith was covered. Three presentations for schoolchildren were also held during the week. A film called A Gypsy's Wish gave insight into the area's traveller community followed with a presentation by The Romany Theatre Company. For more information about these events visit www.sifre.org.uk

East Midlands

Leicester

Last year in Leicester, imams and clergy fielded competing cricket teams for a match. This year, on 26 May a joint cricket team of imams and clergy played their counterparts from Bradford at the Leicestershire Country Cricket Grounds. The game was organised by the Federation of Muslim Organisations and the St. Philip's Centre.

Hundreds of people came to watch the game, which the Leicester team, which included the Bishop of Leicester, Rt Rev Tim Stevens, and Dr Ashraf Makadam of the Federation of Muslim Organisations, won. The entrance to the grounds was free by courtesy of the Leicestershire Country Cricket Club, a partner in this unique event, and all donations and contributions went to the Clean Drinking Water project for the people of Mozambique.

Loughborough

An evening of multi-faith performances organised by Loughborough Council of Faiths took place at Loughborough Town Hall on 22 March to celebrate the different faith traditions in the area. The diverse performances, from the young and old, included devotional songs, music with a variety of different musical instruments, and acting. The event was funded by a Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund and Charnwood Borough Council.

Nottingham

"The spirit of Nottingham and Nottinghamshire", a photographic exhibition by young people in Nottingham, was launched on 30 May. The display, at Nottingham Council House, was of a collection of photographs taken by young people of different faiths in the county. The subjects covered included people of faith at work, leisure and worship. The exhibition was organised by Nottingham Inter Faith Council. It was sponsored by the United Religions Initiative (URI) and Nottingham City and Nottinghamshire County Councils.

London

Thursday's Child, an inter faith and peace festival with exhibition and activities that promoted the message of peace, was held on 7 and 8 July at West Ham Memorial Recreation Ground. The event was an educational exploration and a 'Celebration of Faith'. Individuals and organisations representing a range of faiths and inter faith initiatives gathered to take part and unite in an understanding and mutual respect of each other's beliefs. Workshops, talks, dancing, singing, Newham School children singing for Peace, and story telling took place over the weekend. Further information at <http://www.thursdays-child.co.uk/>

City of London

An evening dialogue took place on 26 April at St Ethelburga's Centre for Reconciliation and Peace in London exploring the message of nonviolence from different faith perspectives. Speakers included Imam Abduljalil Sajid, Jay Lakhani and Mohinder Singh.

CCID at Heythrop College

The Centre for Christianity and Interreligious Dialogue (CCID) at Heythrop College held an event on 11 May on 'Catholics in Encounter with Hinduism'.

Brent

The London Inter Faith Centre hosted an event on 27 June on 'Music from the Faiths', in partnership with Brent Inter Faith Forum. The evening showcased music from many of the world's religions.

Croydon

Nearly 500 people from Christian, Muslim and other faith backgrounds from Croydon, gathered for a dialogue session between Imam Quasim Ahmad of the Al-Khair Foundation and Rt Revd Nick Baines, Anglican Bishop of Croydon.

The theme for the event was 'Two faiths, one world, where do we go from here?' and it focused on different aspects of Christian – Muslim relations and the basic beliefs of each faith with the intention of improving understanding of the faiths.

Finchley and Golders Green

The 21st Annual Multi Faith Pilgrimage of Westminster Interfaith, the inter faith programme of the Catholic Diocese of Westminster, was held in the Finchley and Golders Green area on 3 June.

Each year the pilgrimage goes through different areas within the diocese and on this occasion the tour started at the Swaminarayan Hindu temple and

'Health preachers'

Waltham Forest Faith Communities Forum has published a report on the outcomes of the health preacher's scheme that was held last year. Early in 2006, through WFFF's participation in the Local Strategic Partnership (LSP), they held discussions with the local Primary Care Trust (PCT) on how the Forum could help to convey key health messages to people within Waltham Forest's religious congregations. The idea of a "Health Preachers" scheme developed from these discussions. The key concept behind this idea was that religious people might be motivated by their faith to make positive health changes, especially if they were able to access health messages as part of their faith community experience. The PCT had previously run a course to train local people as Community Health Outreach Workers (CHOWs) and agreed to re-run this scheme for a group of faith community leaders recruited by the Forum. The local authority agreed to provide LSP funding for the scheme.

The volunteer trainees were recruited to train as "Health Preachers" who would communicate key health messages to their congregations in a way that would seek to engage others with health as a faith issue. There was an enthusiastic response from the faith communities and WFFF recruited 3 Muslim, 3 Sikh and 9 Christian leaders, the last from a wide variety of church traditions. Out of the 155 people who took part in the sessions 137 recorded that the event had encouraged them to live a healthier lifestyle, whilst 125 people said they would eat more healthily, exercise more or do a combination of both. Father Steven Saxby commented, "Health Preachers' was, we are sure, the first scheme of its kind in the UK and we were enthusiastic to promote it as something for others to emulate, a model for faith community engagement on the issue of health as well as a for inter faith co-operation. However, the proof of the low-fat, high-fibre fruit pudding had to be in the eating. The course made a difference to our health decisions as trainees; could we convince others, through our preaching and activities, to make positive health changes? This results of the evaluation work indicate that we could and did and demonstrate the success of the scheme!"

ended at Trinity URC/Baptist Church. The group visited two synagogues, an Islamic cultural centre, a Catholic Church where a Sikh group provided lunch and a Methodist church, where a member of the Brahma Kumaris gave a talk.

Wandsworth

Perspectives from Judaism, Christianity, Islam and Hinduism on the Evolution of Marriage were the discussion point for Wandsworth Multi-Faith Forum at an event on 12 June in Nightingale House, South West London.

Westminster

Voluntary Action Westminster hosted a Celebration of Faiths event at Westminster Cathedral Hall. The theme of the gathering, held on 22 March, was 'Love Thy Neighbour'. The event marked the launch of an updated version of Westminster Directory of Faiths and was sponsored by Westminster Faith Exchange and Westminster City Partnership for Racial Equality. The directory can be downloaded from <http://www.westminster.gov.uk/communityandliving/faithsbeliefsandreligions/> For more information about Westminster Faith Exchange visit: contact Nazia Mirza on 0207 6413047 or at nmirza@westminster.gov.uk

North East

Meetings have been taking place in the North East of England to establish the basis of a framework to develop a regional faith forum for the area. At a meeting held on 16 April at the Centre for Life Jenny Kartupelis, the Director of East of England Faiths Council, and Revd John Hall, Chair of the West Midlands Faith Forum, were keynote speakers. The Inter Faith Network's Director, Brian Pearce, also contributed to the days proceedings.

This event was the first of two organised through the regional Faiths Task Group that has been set up to work on developing a structure that best reflects the needs of local and regional inter faith organisations in the area. Paul Southgate, the Chief Officer of the Churches' Regional Commission, who is working on this development said that local inter faith bodies need to be able to link to, and learn from, each other, to cooperate and learn how to support each other at a regional level. He added that there are some notable local examples of inter faith work including initiatives in Middlesbrough, Newcastle, Darlington. Participants in the workshops at the conference made recommendations on developing the foundations for the regional forum.

The Faiths Task Group held a further networking meeting in Durham on 4 July for members from faith communities in the North East.

North West

Bolton

Faith, food, and identity are topics that have been covered by the Bolton Interfaith Council in recent meetings. The discussion on faith and food was held at the Swaminarayan Temple in 2 June. In March, participants took part in a tour of the Zakariyya Central Mosque, in Peace Street, and observed prayers there. This was followed by a panel discussion at the open forum meeting titled: 'What does it mean to be British? What does it mean to you?'

Burnley

A group of faith community representatives and faith leaders from Building Bridges Burnley explored the sights and sounds of London on a three-day visit. The group visited the Houses of Parliament, the Department for Communities and Local Government, the National Observatory in Greenwich, the East London Mosque and London Muslim Centre in Whitechapel and three places of Christian worship, including Westminster Cathedral. The programme had various objectives which included developing broader thinking; providing an opportunity to travel, learn and explore together; and understanding political and religious power bases. The visit also helped the participants, through spending time together, to achieve a better understanding and relationship between Burnley faith leaders.

Nelson

A church and a mosque opened their doors for members of faith and non-faith communities to learn about the Christian and Muslim faiths. Christ Church and Central Ghausia Mosque, in Nelson, Lancashire, hosted the event on 27 March where participants were encouraged to learn together about the role of faith and places of worship in society. The day was organised by Building Bridges Pendle and started with morning meeting and refreshments at Christ Church followed by lunch at the Ghausia Mosque.

South East

Crawley

On 10 June Horsham Interfaith Forum, Crawley Interfaith Network and Brighton and Hove Interfaith Contact Group held a joint inter faith day at: Worth Abbey, near Crawley with the theme: 'Holy Living'.

Elmbridge

Elmbridge Multifaitth Forum held a faith and community supper on 28 June at the Claygate Village Hall. Jewish, Islamic, Christian and Hindu speakers discussed how their faiths support the development of friendship and respect in the wider community with a focus on working towards integration and cohesion. A curry supper was provided and the Mayor of the Borough of Elmbridge attended the event.

Hampshire

At the inaugural meeting of the Hampshire Interfaith Network on 16 May, Rageh Omaar, the broadcaster addressed participants about his experience as a British Muslim. The aim of the event was to bring people of influence together including county and district councillors and LSP members as well faith group representatives from the Hampshire Interfaith Network, to explore how it feels if you belong to minority faith group in Hampshire. The lecture was attended amongst others by the Lord Lieutenant of Hampshire, Mary Fagan, as well as the Anglican Bishop of Winchester, Rt Revd Michael Scott-Joynt. The HIN website was launched at the event too: <http://www.hants-interfaith.org/news.htm>

Maidenhead

The faith groups of Maidenhead held a series of events during the first half of 2007 to allow members of the faith communities of Maidenhead to meet together and to share their faiths and values with each other. At the events, each speaker discussed either their faith or current issues from their faith's perspective. The other half of the session was time set aside for discussion between everyone on the topics raised. The programme was open to the public and had speakers from a range of faiths. ## West Midlands

West Midlands Faiths Forum (WMFF) launched two reports at the Government Office for the West Midlands on 31 July. The first, Widening the Net, is an account of the proceedings of WMFF's third annual conference held in March. The second, A Faith Group Engagement Strategy, maps the level of engagement of faith groups with infrastructure support providers and ChangeUp Consortia across the region. The research for the second report was carried out by b:RAP (a strategic equalities based advisory organisation in Birmingham) which was commissioned by WMFF. WMFF had received funding for this from the Capacitybuilders Improving Reach programme. The research is part of the development of an Engagement Framework, for implementation in 2007-2008, which will assist faith based organisations in the region to access capacity building resources including funding and help in enhancing governance and workforce development. Speakers at the meeting included Angelina Jetson who introduced the FaithReach project, which is a part of Capacitybuilders' Improving Reach programme; Jane Gallagher from WMFF who spoke about policy and priorities from the faith sector in relation to the Widening the Net report; Mary Jane Peach, Capacitybuilders regional manager for West Midlands; and Dr Chris Allen, Director of research and policy for b:RAP. More information about WMFF's activities can be found by visiting www.wmfaithsforum.org.uk

Birmingham

The role of women in nurturing faith within the family was the subject of an inter faith mother's day conference that was held on 31 March by Sutton Asian Women's Forum and Sikh Nari Manch UK. The event was held in Fellowship Hall, Sutton Coldfield. The aims were to develop a better understanding of different faiths and to help the empowerment of women. There were speakers from the Buddhist, Christian, Muslim, Hindu, Sikh, Jewish and Rastafarian faiths. Keynote speakers were Andrew Mitchell MP for Sutton and Coldfield and Shadow Secretary for International Development, and Neena Gill, a Member of European Parliament.

Coventry

Coventry Inter Faith Forum held an exhibition on 'Sacred Writings of World Faiths' on 5 May at the Coventry Multi-Faith Centre. There was a special attraction for children on the day which included storytelling by Kusumika Chatterjee and Pru Porretta who is known as Coventry's Lady Godiva, who has for the past twenty years, brought Lady Godiva to life for the people of Coventry and visitors to the city by telling the tale of her life. She was accompanied by African Drummer Jahman Aggrey. Viewing of the Sacred Writings of World Faiths exhibition can be arranged by telephoning Coventry Multi-Faith Forum on 024 7625 7594.

Wolverhampton

Wolverhampton Interfaith Council held its annual pilgrimage event on 30 June. Participants met to board the coach at the starting point at the Shri Krishna Hindu Temple, Marston Road. The first visit was Balaji Temple in Oldbury where lunch was provided and then the group visited Guru Nanak Nishkam Jatha Temple in Birmingham.

South West

Faithnetsouthwest is acting as regional representative for the One World Week Inter Faith Project, which will bring together three faith groups to exchange ideas on OWW events they are organising, before and after the event. The project will help produce guidance on inter faith involvement specifically for One World Week which will be published on the OWW website for others to use. For more information, contact Alistair Beattie at alistair@faithnetsouthwest.org.uk

Bristol

A tour of places of worship on the afternoon of 21 July was organised by Bristol Inter Faith Group. Participants had an opportunity to visit the Sri Guru Singh Sabha, Shah Jahal Mosque, the local Baptist Church, the Bristol and West Progressive Synagogue and Bristol Hindu temple.

Yorkshire and Humber

On 12-13 May, people of diverse faiths and from key government organisations from across Yorkshire and Humber walked together to demonstrate their partnership in tackling modern forms of slavery and injustice, and to inaugurate a permanent new trail, 'The Wilberforce Way'. Members of the Yorkshire and Humber Faiths Forum and the East Riding Community Cohesion Forum, who developed the walk to commemorate the bi-centenary of the Abolition of the Slave Trade Act, were joined by representatives from the Government Office for Yorkshire and the Humber and Yorkshire Forward. The walk inaugurated the new 35 mile trail linking Hull, the birth place of William Wilberforce and Pocklington. Wilberforce was educated at Pocklington School and wrote his first letter of protest from there against the African slave trade at the age of 14, and went on to become MP for Hull and then for Yorkshire.

A free guide leaflet outlining the route and key landmarks has been published by the East Riding County Council and distributed in the county to encourage walkers and to raise awareness on issues of community cohesion in the area. Further information from Inderjit Bhogal, Director, the Yorkshire and Humber Faiths Forum 0113 245 6444, mobile 07793780588 email: inderjit.bhogal@yorkshireandhumberfaiths.org.uk

The second regional 'faith and food' day took place on 10 June. Guidelines for local events can be seen on the Yorkshire and Humber Faiths Forum site at www.yorkshireandhumberfaiths.org.uk/activities/food/

Keighley

'Being British and Muslim' was the focus of a talk organised by Keighley Interfaith Group. Around 45 members and friends of the groups attended the event that was held at the Balti House Restaurant in 14 March to listen to Wahida Shaffi speaking on the topic. The aim of the meal and talk was to hear the views and experiences of a young Muslim woman living in Britain today. On 7 July the Keighley 'Walk for Friendship' gave faith communities and their families the chance to come together and walk through Keighley Town Centre. The walk, organised by Keighley Interfaith Group, began at the Town Hall Square, and went on to Cliffe Castle Park where there was entertainment and a picnic tea.

Leeds

Members of different faith traditions gathered in Leeds for the annual Walk of Friendship sponsored by Leeds Concord Interfaith Fellowship and visited places of worship in Leeds. Participants walked along Chapeltown Road with a rainbow banner and enjoyed each other's company on the tours of Catholic, Pentecostal and Anglican Churches, a gurdwara and a mosque. The Lord Mayor, Mohammed Iqbal, and Favian Hamilton MP led the walk. Photographs of the walk can be viewed at www.concord-leeds.org.uk

Europe

WCRP women's initiative

The World Conference of Religions for Peace (WCRP) invited women from different faiths to come together at a meeting in Rome, in May, to form a Women's Coordinating Committee of Religions for Peace in Europe. The meeting followed a gathering in August of last year at the World Assembly of Religions for Peace in Kyoto, where women of faith from Europe expressed their desire to create a network to promote peace in Europe and to elect a committee to coordinate its activities and projects. Ravinder Kaur Nijjar, from the Sikh community in Scotland, and one Executive Committee member of both the Scottish Inter Faith Council (SIFC) and the Inter Faith Network was invited from the UK. She was selected to be coordinator of the European Women of Faith Coordinating Committee (EWCC), which will bring together and work in partnership with faith-based and inter faith women's organisations to form a European Women of Faith Network. The Committee, together with the Religions for Peace European Governing Board, visited the Vatican and met with senior members of the Pontifical Council and discussed inter faith dialogue. They also met with the Mayor of Rome and the newly formed inter-religious council, an initiative introduced by the mayor.

Global

United Nations

In 2005 the 'Alliance of Civilisations' was founded, at the initiative of the Governments of Spain and Turkey, under the auspices of the United Nations. A High-level Group was formed by former Secretary-General Kofi Annan to explore the roots of polarization between societies and cultures today and to recommend a practical programme of action to address this issue. Further information about the initiative can be found at http://www.unaoc.org/repository/implementation\_plan.pdf

In April of this year the UN announced that Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon had designated Jorge Sampaio, the former President of Portugal, as High Representative for the Alliance of Civilizations. His role is to 'promote the Alliance of Civilizations as a credible and viable attempt to diminish the dangerous tensions between diverse societies and their threat to international stability, as assessed in the report of the High-Level Group of the Alliance of Civilizations'. Speaking in May, the High Representative told the Member States of the Organization that many of the political conflicts facing the world today are underpinned by intercultural and inter-religious tensions. "What is at stake in these conflicts is not religion or culture themselves, but the ways in which cultural identity or religious beliefs are often exploited in pursuit of political ends". He noted that intercultural tensions around sensitive issues have the potential to inflame passions and can act as lightning rods for expressions of anger and resentment and that these, in turn, can have widespread political repercussions. Mr Sampaio invited the members of the General Assembly to develop a better understanding of the interaction between the world of politics, on the one hand, and cultural and religious factors, on the other. "And it is crucial that this understanding is reflected in political decision-making and global diplomatic efforts".

The Alliance of Civilizations, he said, will be one of his key priorities in the coming months as it can play an important role in facilitating and fostering partnerships among key players at the levels of government, international organisations and agencies, civil society and the private sector.

The programme and detailed arrangements are currently under development. To register your interest visit <http://www.yorkshireandhumberfaiths.org.uk/events/>

Local inter faith focus on the environment

Sharing different faith perspectives on the environment and looking after the earth is increasingly becoming a part of local inter faith bodies' programmes.

Luton Council of Faiths and Bedford Council of Faiths held an open day on 18 May to launch a 'Faith Woodlands' project. An area of Maulden Woods, which lies between Bedford and Luton, has been provided by the Forestry Commission to be transformed into a permanent spiritual and educational space. Local faith communities and inter faith will work together in partnership with other organisations to change the area.

Watford Inter Faith Association held a public meeting on 18 June with speakers from four different faith communities addressing the topic of the environment. As part of a Hull and East Riding Interfaith meeting on 17 July aspects of plants in the Bible and the views of different religions on climate change were discussed. London Sustainability Week 2007, from 5-12 June, focused on Faith in London's Environment with seven events looking at a multi-faith action approach encouraging working towards achieving a sustainable London environment, were held. For further details visit <http://www.london21.org/page/36/show/1277>

See under Conferences, Exhibitions and Seminars for details of a forthcoming seminar on the Earth Charter and faith groups.

SPECIAL DAYS AND WEEKS

21-28 October, One World Week. One World Week is an annual opportunity for people from diverse backgrounds to come together to learn about global justice, to spread that learning and to use it to take action for justice locally and globally. The theme this year is 'All Together Now'. For further information about the week and how to take part, see www.oneworldweek.org

19-27 November, Islam Awareness Week. An annual festival of events. This year's theme is 'One World' and many events will focus around both historic similarities and environmental necessities that bind people of all faiths together. Exhibition listings, teachers materials and more will be available on the website <http://www.iaw.org.uk/>

25 November-2 December, Scottish Inter Faith Week at various locations. The aim of Inter Faith Week is to promote dialogue, understanding, and co-operation between Scotland's diverse religious communities. This initiative was born out of the recognition that religious communities can no longer afford to exist in isolation from each other but must seek, instead, to replace barriers of prejudice and fear with bonds of friendship, in order to build a better Scotland for all. The week will open at Aberdeen University on 25 November, launched by John Battle, MP. The national youth conference will take place at Glasgow University on 2 December. For further information contact the Scottish Inter Faith Council on 0141 420 6982 or email admin@interfaithscotland.org

27 January 2008. Holocaust Memorial Day. Holocaust Memorial Day commemorates all of the communities who suffered as a result of the Holocaust and Nazi persecution and provides a focus – through national and local events and activities – for people to think about the continuing repercussions of the Holocaust and more recent genocides on society. This year's theme is 'Imagine...remember, reflect, react'. Remember the past; -Reflect on the present; React to create a better future. Further information at www.hmd.org.uk As 27 January (the annual HMD date) will fall on a Sunday, which may be unsuitable for faith, community and school events, the Holocaust Memorial Day Trust advises organisers to plan their event on a day convenient to them in the weeks either side of 27 January.

CONFERENCES, EXHIBITIONS AND SEMINARS

Until 23 September, British Library, Euston Road, London. "Sacred: Discover what we share". A major British Library exhibition bringing together for the first time some of the world's most important and beautiful religious texts of the Jewish, Christian and Muslim faiths. A series of events will be taking place over the coming weeks at the British Library including musical evenings and talks. A touring programme, "Sacred on Location", being provided in partnership with museums, libraries and heritage organisations is bringing activities inspired by Sacred and based around the theme of faith to a wider audience. For more information about events and booking visit www.bl.uk/sacred

25 September, Taplow. UNESCO UK, in association with the Earth Charter, is holding a day seminar on 'Active Faith: The Earth Charter' to engage people from faith organisations in discussing how and in what ways the Earth Charter can be a vehicle for learning for change towards a just, sustainable and peaceful world. Plans for developing a network of interested organisations from faith perspectives to support and endorse the Earth Charter will be discussed at the seminar. The seminar is being hosted by Soka Gakkai International. Attendance fee is £20 and includes lunch and refreshments. Venue: Taplow Court, Taplow, near Maidenhead. Further information from Toni-Ann Hirayama at Toni-Ann.Hirayama@sgi-uk.org by 7 September.

12 October, Leeds. Day conference 'Faith Schools and Social Cohesion – part of the problem or the solution?' The keynote speaker will be John Battle MP. The event is being organised by Chance Your Arm, an education and training provider. The cost is £149 (less £25 for delegates observing Ramadan). Email cyaconf@aol.com for further details or to book a place.

1-2 November, Belfast. 'Rights and Righteousness: Religious Pluralism and Human Rights'. A conference being organised by the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission and the Irish School of Ecumenics to stimulate discussion about the relation between faith and rights. Some of the questions to be explored at this conference include: What role do cultural and religious traditions have in the articulation of human rights? Are human rights secular necessarily as some advocates would argue? Or perhaps, as others argue, is a religious commitment necessary to believe that human beings have an inherent dignity that should be respected? By what means should we hope to achieve consensus when we differ?

Visit <http://www.tcd.ie/ise/news/events.php> for further details.

October and November, Liverpool. Liverpool Community Spirit will be holding faith literacy training sessions at Liverpool Cathedral. The first session exploring Judaism, Christianity and Islam, will run on 31 October from 9.30am to 3.00pm and on 7 November from 9.30 am to 3.00pm Hinduism, Buddhism and Sikhism will be covered. The training is to develop understanding and awareness of identity, values, traditions and customs of the faith. For more information call Cressida Godding on 0151 709 3171, email

cressida.godding@community-spirit.org.uk or visit www.community-spirit.org.uk

December 2008, Israel. The theme for the 2008 ICCJ (International Council for Christians and Jews) conference in Jerusalem will be the impact of Israeli-Palestinian Conflict on Jewish-Christian dialogue. A variety of lectures, workshops and study visits will take place. From September 2007 onwards the conference will “start” on the Internet. An internet forum composed of experts will discuss the impact of the conflict in the Middle East on Jewish-Christian relations. All those interested in the topic, are invited to read the contributions of the invited experts and to take part in the discussion. If you are interested, please let the ICCJ know at info@iccj-buberhouse.de

COURSES AND TRAINING

Workshops for development workers. SkILD, a project of NAVCA (National Association for Voluntary and Community Action), is running courses in different cities in England to provide skills and knowledge for local development through relevant training to support voluntary and community groups. It particularly welcomes applications from development workers who are supporting faith-based organisations. Courses available cover seven areas, some of which include governance, funding and financial management and organisational development. The cost is £45 for voluntary and community organisations. Praying for Peace Domestic Violence and Faith Communities Project. The Greater London Domestic Violence Project (GLDVP) will run a Praying for Peace Domestic Violence and Faith Communities Project. The scheme aims to build on the dialogue and recommendations put forward at a meeting that took place in between domestic violence service providers and faith leaders at City Hall London, in November 2006. Over the coming year the GLDVP intends to produce guidelines for faith communities and domestic violence services providers detailing the important role faith communities through their interaction with children and young people in challenging, preventing and educating them about domestic violence. It will also highlight information about interventions that can be made to hold perpetrators responsible for their violent behaviour. Training for faith leaders and domestic violence service providers to help build partnerships and understanding will be developed and run over the year. If you are interested in this project and would like more information visit www.gldvp.org.uk or call 020 7785 3860.

A Global Guide to Interfaith Reflections from around the World by Sandy and Jael Bharat ISBN 978 1905047970, published by O Books, 2007. £19.99 (with royalties to UNICEF). An insight into what the authors call ‘the inter faith movement’ through varied personal reflections from more than one hundred activists and academics from all corners of the world looking at the “when, why, who, how and what” of inter faith issues and considering the origins of the inter faith movement, its cause, its issues and its resources. From their differing perspectives the contributors present their inspirations and insights, concerns and motivations and their thoughts about the future. Practitioners also give pointers on organising inter faith events and projects.

Tools 4 Dialogue The Youth and Education Division of Three Faiths Forum has developed Tools 4 Dialogue, religious text-based educational programme inspired by the methodology of Scriptural Reasoning. It uses texts from the Tanakh, Qur’an and New Testament to bring Christians, Jews and Muslims to an understanding of each other through their own written teachings while focussing on themes that are relevant to young people today. It is currently being piloted in a number of colleges, universities and schools. For more information, see www.3ff.org.uk

Improved Understanding of South London’s Multi Faith Situation by Sarah Thorley and An Evaluation of Different Models of Inter Faith Activity by Siriol Davies. Two pieces of research on inter faith activity published by South London Inter Faith Group. The second of these publications comes with a CD containing interviews relevant to this project. For more information contact Revd Alan Gadd at secretary@southlondoninterfaith.org.uk or telephone 020 8678 8977. Visit www.southlondoninterfaith.org.uk for more details about the group’s activities.

Interfaith Relationships: A Resource Pack for Couples, Heather al-Yousuf and Rosalind Birtwistle for the Interfaith Marriage Project. A resource pack for people in a relationship with someone of a different faith, wanting to know whether it can work, and looking for information and support. At a national consultation seminar in 2006 a number of religious leaders and academics, experts in cultural studies, psychology and relationships, as well as people with personal experience of inter faith and inter racial relationships, identified some of the questions and dilemmas faced by couples in mixed marriages. There were discussions about how to arrange a wedding ceremony, and how to manage religious rules about food and hygiene, fasts and festivals in a home with two faiths, as well as deeper questions of identity, including dilemmas about conversion and respect for the unique spirituality of each person. Lastly – and most important for many families – there was discussion on how children are brought up when their parents have different beliefs. This resource pack draws on the expertise of those at the seminar to highlight the issues that are likely to affect people involved in marriages between people of different faiths and beliefs. It contains resources such as books, websites and organisations, as well as personal stories. The appendix includes brief descriptions of the main faiths found in Britain today, and what, if anything, they have to say about mixed marriages. The pack can be downloaded at www.interfaithmarriage.org.uk

Setting up for Success: A practical guide for community organisations. ISBN 978 1 901 974 75 1. £9.95 A new handbook written by Anna Allen and Catriona May published by CDF (Community Development Fund) providing practical tips, templates, case studies and links to resources to help community organisations. Subjects including financial management, promoting your organisation, policies and procedures and employment. The guide was inspired by the experiences of groups across the country that received funding from round one of the Faith Community Capacity Building Fund, Connecting Communities Plus Community Grants, administered by CDF. More information about the handbook and how to order is available at www.cdf.org.uk

Keeping it Together: A Reflective Practice Tool for Faith-Based Community Development Practitioners by Steve Miller (£7) and Priceless, Unmeasurable? Faith and Community Development in the 21st Century England by Adam Dinham (£5)

Published in partnership between the FbRN UK (Faith Based Regeneration Network), Anglia Ruskin University, the Churches’ Community Work Alliance and the Community Development Exchange. Two new publications developed from a series of seminars, funded by the Faith Community Capacity Building Fund, drawing together community development practitioners from different faith traditions to reflect and share good practice and issues they encounter. To order either publication visit www.fbrn.org.uk or telephone 020 7471 6791.

Faith and Voluntary Action: An Overview of Current Evidence and Debates.

Faith in the community: The contribution of faith-based organisations to rural voluntary action.

The National Council for Voluntary Organisations, 2007

The first report addresses some of the questions and misunderstanding surrounding faith based organisations, explores some of the more commonly used concepts associated with their work and reviews current evidence regarding their scope, coverage and activities. It reviews the Government's policies and initiatives relating to faith based organisations and the current diversity of views regarding the involvement of faith based organisations in the public realm. The report contains suggestions that whilst faith based organisations are distinctive, by treating them as separate from secular charities or community groups there is a danger that policy makers will alienate civil society. It suggests that both secular and faith based organisations can at times be discriminated against when applying for Government funding and excluded from policy discussions.

The second report was produced in partnership with the Commission for Rural Communities and forms part of the NCVO's programme of research and policy development focusing specifically on the needs of voluntary and community organisations working in rural areas. It examines the contribution of faith based organisations to community life in rural areas, drawing on the experience of those working in this field to identify the type of services and activities faith based organisations provide and the resources they are able to mobilise in support of these activities. There is a particular focus on the changes and challenges they face and how they are responding to these. The report contains 15 case studies.

Both reports are available on the NCVO's website at www.ncvo-vol.org.uk/publications and hard copies can be obtained from NCVO (telephone 020 7520 2484 or email to referral@ncvo-vol.org.uk)

Local faith directories

Directories listing contact details and places of worship in areas have become very popular over the last few years. An increasing number of local authorities, SACREs, colleges and local inter faith organisations are researching and developing their own handbooks with the help of faith communities in a bid to promote greater awareness of different communities and to make it easier to draw them into consultation or projects or to arrange visits to their places of worship. Directories also, of course, help those of a particular faith find out where their own places of worship are located. As Councillor Genevieve Hibbs says in the introduction to the directory recently published by the London Borough of Hounslow, "For many people who arrive in the borough, their faith can be a reassuring anchor in new and unusual surroundings." Many directories are available on line. For some examples see:

Faith Communities Forum members visit Church of England Synod

On 14 February, the Church of England invited members of the Inter Faith Network's Faith Communities Forum to a lunch reception and special briefing on how the Church of England's decision making processes and public affairs work and to attend a session of Synod which was in progress at Church House. Bishop of Bradford, Rt Revd David James, hosted the lunch; Dr Philip Giddings, Chair of the Church of England's Mission and Public Affairs Council, welcomed participants; and Canon Guy Wilkinson, Inter Faith Adviser, gave the briefing. Participants were later warmly welcomed from the floor of Synod by its Chair at the time, Rt Revd Michael Perham, the Bishop of Gloucester. 28 members of the Forum attended on behalf of the faith communities linked in national faith community representative body membership by the Inter Faith Network.

This formal sharing of public life decision making processes event was a 'first' for the faith communities at national level and it is hoped that, linking with an ongoing programme of work by the Faith Communities Forum, other such opportunities from within the different faith communities will follow.

Government consultation on 'inter faith strategy'

On 17 December the Department for Communities and Local Government launched a consultation document on the development of its inter faith strategy. Hazel Blears, Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government, Parmjit Dhanda, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State, Dr Rowan Williams, Archbishop of Canterbury, and young people from Burnley were among those who spoke at the launch event. The document is entitled "Face-to-Face and Side-by-Side": A framework for inter faith dialogue and social action. The closing date for responses to the consultation is 7 March.

In her foreword to the document Hazel Blears says that "through this consultation we aim to find out how we can all best work in partnership with each other to increase inter faith dialogue and social action and

NETWORK NEWS

Network meetings

The Inter Faith Network's Executive Committee met on 18 October and 28 January. Its Faith Communities Forum met on 13 November (see report on page 5) and 14 February. At the meeting on 14 February Forum members were invited to attend a session of the Church of England General Synod (see full report on page 1). On 6 November the Network held a meeting for advisers on inter faith issues within the national faith community bodies (see report on page 6).

The Inter Faith Network co-facilitated a meeting, with the Faith Based Regeneration Network (UK), of the English Regional Faith Forums Network on 31 January (see report on page 20) and on 11 February held a consultation meeting, with the Community Development Foundation, on the preparation of some short, web-based, guidelines to support development workers in local inter faith organisations as well as those hiring and supporting these (full report on page 21).

The Network also facilitated a meeting on 13 December between the Office for National Statistics and faith community representatives to discuss issues relating to the 2011 Census.

Network's new Director takes up post

In September, Dr Harriet Crabtree took up post as Director of the Inter Faith Network, succeeding the Network's first Director, Brian Pearce. He continues to work for the Network part-time as Adviser on Faith and Public Life. Dr Crabtree has worked for the Inter Faith Network since 1990. During 2006–7 she served, in a personal capacity, as a Commissioner on the Commission on Integration and Cohesion and was the Commissioner with responsibility for engagement with the faith sector.

The last issue of Inter Faith Update contained a report on the National Meeting of the Network in Coventry at which an extensive tribute was given to retiring Director Brian Pearce and it also carried an interview with him.

20th Anniversary of the Inter Faith Network

Subscribers to Inter Faith Update will have received a copy of the recently published brochure marking the 20th anniversary of the establishment of the Inter Faith Network for the UK, together with a copy of the Network's Annual Review for 2006–07. The 20th anniversary special brochure looks at the key milestones across the last twenty years on the journey together of the Inter Faith Network and its member bodies towards greater inter faith understanding and cooperation. The brochure and also the Annual Review can be downloaded from the Network's website www.interfaith.org.uk or requested from the Inter Faith Network office.

Reader survey

Readers of Inter Faith Update were invited to complete a readership survey that was sent out with Issue 33 of the newsletter. The aim of the survey was to find out what readers thought of the present layout; to understand and identify which sections of the Network's newsletter readers find most useful; and to look at whether there are different patterns of interests linked to particular categories of Network membership. The intention is to use this information to improve the layout and content of the newsletter. Thank you to all those who responded to the survey.

Out of the 30+ responses a majority of readers said they liked the current layout but would like to see images used with some of the stories. It was also suggested by some that there should be less on issues connected with Government and more on inter faith initiatives at local level; and that there could perhaps be less information presented in a more user-friendly format.

The sheer amount of activity on the inter faith front has increased astonishingly across the last 12 to 18 months and across the next 6 months the Inter Faith Network will be considering the best ways to share this – both through Inter Faith Update and through other routes such as e-bulletins as well as member circulars.

Government consultation on 'inter faith strategy'

ensure that this activity results in tangible and positive change within local communities in terms of increased cohesion, greater community empowerment and resilience to extremism in all its forms." She says that "in developing this strategy we are not seeking to reinvent 'inter faith'. We are building on a long history of people from different faith communities in the UK working together to build mutual understanding and respect and develop strong and positive relationships with one another and with wider civil society." She sees the consultation as providing "an opportunity to reflect on how Government should support inter faith activity and the circumstances in which inter faith activity is helping to make a positive difference within local communities." The Government's vision is that "inter faith activity will build good relations and break down barriers between people from different backgrounds through 'face-to-face' interactions and 'side-by-side' collaboration in shared activities, with a common purpose and concrete outcome."

The consultation document has sections dealing with "Building cohesive communities: the role of inter faith dialogue and social action"; and "Developing a framework for partnership". It sets out a set of questions which respondents are invited to address. The document and response form can be downloaded from the CLG website at: www.communities.gov.uk/publications/communities/interfaithdialogue. ## NATIONAL UPDATE

Government's response to report of Commission on Integration and Cohesion

The Government's response to the report of the Commission on Integration and Cohesion (published in June of last year, as reported in the last issue of Inter Faith Update) was published on 4 February. The full response can be found at www.communities.gov.uk/publications/communities/governmentresponsecoic.

The response details actions that the Government will take over the coming months and years to support strong cohesive communities:

- Specialist cohesion teams will be established by central Government to provide advice and support to local authorities facing cohesion challenges – particularly those areas facing rapid change or experiencing migration for the first time. The teams will provide advice on conflict resolution, mediation, leadership and on the steps that local leaders might take when new people arrival in their area. Over the coming months central Government will work with local government to determine how these teams can best provide that support.
- Local authority twinning - different areas experience different cohesion challenges. It is therefore practical actions and solutions taken by local areas themselves that will have the biggest impact. The Commission stressed the importance of local authorities mapping their areas in order to understand the character and composition of their communities as part of ensuring they are well placed to anticipate possible tensions. Extensive research by the Commission identified five 'family groups' of areas experiencing comparable cohesion

Inter Faith Update

Inter Faith Update is the newsletter of the Inter Faith Network for the UK. It keeps a wide range of organisations and individuals interested in developing good inter faith relations in the UK in touch with UK events and projects with a significant inter faith component.

challenges. In the future the Government wants to work in partnership to use this data to facilitate 'twinning' between areas of the country experiencing similar issues in order to share ideas and solutions to inspire innovation to respond to these challenges. Burnley and Leicester are already working together on common issues that they have identified.

- New guidance for local authorities on developing Information Packs for migrants. Misunderstandings and conflict can arise when people coming from abroad behave in a way that is out of step with the normal way of doing things or, in extreme cases, against the law. Information packs can be an effective way of providing new arrivals with information that will help them to integrate successfully and understand what is expected of them.
- Consultation on cohesion guidance for funders – analysis of data from the Citizenship Survey shows that cohesion is strongest when people from different backgrounds interact with each other. An annex to the Commission's report suggested that in some contexts where funding is used to support a single group only it can create barriers to cohesion. Alongside its response to the Commission's report the Government has published a consultation document with a view to providing guidance for funders on how they can promote cohesion. This can be found at www.communities.gov.uk/publications/communities/cohesionfundersconsultation). The closing date for consultation on this is 26 May.
- Cohesion impact tests – a tool to assess whether the activities they are planning will have a positive impact on cohesion in their neighbourhoods will be available for access by all local authorities. It will enable them to input information around the activities and events they are planning in order to test whether they are going to have a positive impact on cohesion.

Earlier this year the Government published guidance on how to better balance translation of public materials with supporting more people in gaining the language skills they need to live and work (www.communities.gov.uk/publications/communities/translationguidance). Its new guidance on 'Citizen Days' encourages local authorities to think about the opportunities available in their community for people from different backgrounds come together and to share experiences.

(www.citizenshipfoundation.org.uk/main/resource.php?s367)

Later in the year the Government will publish a Cohesion Delivery Framework to provide further advice for local authorities in delivering cohesion. Local authorities will be able to use this document to analyse the issues of cohesion in their areas and draw up cohesion action plans.

As reported elsewhere in this issue, on 17 December, the Department for Communities and Local Government opened consultation on an inter faith strategy. The consultation is exploring how government can best work in partnership with faith communities, faith and non faith-based organisations, inter faith organisations and wider civil society to increase levels of inter faith dialogue and social action within local communities. The response to the Commission's report in its reference to this consultation notes that research to be carried out by the Local Government Association in partnership with the Inter Faith Network into the role that local authorities play in local inter faith activity and says that these findings, as well as consultation responses, will inform the development of the inter faith strategy.

The response says that the Government believes that a programme to help increase 'religious literacy' on the part of public agencies, as suggested by the Commission, could be valuable but believes that it will be best achieved if faith communities themselves take the lead on this and develop a programme of training which builds on their existing resources in the area. It says that the Government is currently working with faith stakeholders on a specific project which may have the potential to deliver such a programme.

The response also says that the Government will convene a panel of experts to help develop clear guidelines, as recommended by the Commission, to enable local authorities and others to be able to award public service contracts to faith based bodies without fear that there will be issues over whether this will lead to proselytising or pressure on users of services to accept the religious beliefs of the providers. The panel will include representatives from faith communities, the LGA, and Charity Commission. The response says that the Government hopes that this will lead, in 2009, to publication of a standardised version of a charter for excellence in public service delivery by faith communities.

The Government has made £50 million investment available over the next three years to promote community cohesion and support local authorities in preventing and managing community tensions. Local councils will be able to use the money to respond to their own particular cohesion challenges: some focusing on managing new migration, others looking more at how they promote interaction between people from different backgrounds.

EHRC opens its doors for business

The new Equality and Human Rights Commission began to operate on 1 October, providing a single voice on equality and human rights. The steps leading to this significant development have been fully charted in past issues of Inter Faith Update.

On 1 October the three existing equality commissions merged into the new body: the Commission for Racial Equality (CRE); the Disability Rights Commission (DRC); and the Equal Opportunities Commission (EOC). The EHRC also covers new areas of discrimination law including sexual orientation, religion and belief, and age and has human rights within its remit. Also within its remit is the promotion of 'good relations', on which it has a statutory obligation to give priority to race and religion and belief.

In the last issue of Inter Faith Update it was reported that further Commissioner appointments to the new Equality and Human Rights Commission were awaited, including one for which a candidate was being sought with expertise in 'faith and belief' issues. In November it was announced that Rev Joel Edwards, General Director of the Evangelical Alliance, had been appointed a Commissioner, along with Maeve Sherlock, a former Director of the Refugee Council, (who is currently doing a doctorate at Durham University on the subject of the 'interface' between Faith and the State in modern Britain). This brings the number of Commissioners to 15.

The Government's Faith Communities Consultative Council

Meetings of the Government's Faith Communities Consultative Council (FCCC) were held on 20 November and 19 February. The FCCC is serviced by the Cohesion and Faiths Unit within the Department for Communities and Local Government and chaired by Parmjit Dhanda, one of its Ministers. The main item of discussion at both meetings was the Government's forthcoming consultation on its inter faith strategy. At the meeting on 19 February, the Government's proposal to abolish the blasphemy laws was also considered (on which see page 7). FCCC members also met on 8 February to discuss with Lord Goldsmith the review of citizenship which he is taking forward on a personal basis at the request of the Prime Minister.

Faith Communities Forum of the Inter Faith Network

A meeting of the Inter Faith Network's Faith Communities Forum was held on 13 November in London. Forum meetings are a chance for the faith communities with representative bodies in membership of the Network to discuss current issues of concern, including relevant legislation in preparation. Issues discussed on 13 November included the Government's programme on 'Tackling Preventing Violent Extremism'; the report of the Commission on Integration and Cohesion and the Government's preliminary response to it, including its proposal for the development of an 'inter faith strategy'; the Equality and Human Rights Commission and related work of the Religion and Belief Consultative Group; the meeting of the Government's Faith Communities Consultative Council which was to be held on 20 November; the engagement of faith communities with public life issues more generally; and the Forum's future work.

On 14 February, the Faith Communities Forum met in London at Church House prior to the reception and briefing on behalf of the General Synod of the Church of England reported on the first page of this issue. On the agenda were discussion of 'Face to Face and Side by Side': a framework for inter faith dialogue and social action, the consultation document issued by the Department for Communities and Local Government; the Government's proposal for repeal of the blasphemy laws (on which see page 7); a report on the work of Religion and Belief Consultative Group and developments relating to the Equality and Human Rights Commission; and planning for the 2011 Census. There was also brief discussion of the recent observations of the Archbishop of Canterbury on shari'ah law, in the context, of his Temple lecture, (on which see page 12).

National faith community inter faith advisers and leads meet to discuss the inter faith agenda

A growing number of national faith community representative bodies in membership of the Inter Faith Network are appointing individuals with a responsibility for inter faith relations. In some cases these are paid appointments and in other cases voluntary. On 6 November a meeting was held by the Inter Faith Network for personnel to share news of their work and to discuss issues of common concern. The meeting took place at NCVO in London and was chaired by Dr Indarjit Singh, one of the Network's Vice-Chairs. The final session of the meeting was a chance to meet and talk with Anna Cummins and Nicola Speechly of the Department for Communities and Local Government about the Government's consultation document, 'Face to Face and Side by Side: A Framework for Inter Faith Dialogue and Social Action (on which see page 20). Among the issues discussed was the importance of recognising the important role of national faith communities in developing inter faith resources thoroughly rooted in the teaching of their traditions and supporting and encouraging their local members to engage with the inter faith agenda.

Employers Forum on Belief

The Employers Forum on Belief (EFB) held its first public meeting at the House of Lords on 13 February. The Forum, which was established in 2004 by a small group of major employers, provides opportunities for employers to discuss issues relating to the religious or other beliefs of their diverse workforces and offers practical guidance and shares good practice on issues such as dress codes, religious holidays, the inter-relationship between religious belief and other diversity strands and conflict in the workplace. The Chair of the EFB is Caroline Waters, Director of People and Policy at British Telecom, and its Director is Rachel Kryss. It can be contacted at: Employers Forum on Belief, Floor 3, Downstream, 1 London Bridge, London SE1 9BG (tel: 020 7785 6533; email: info@efrb.org.uk)

CRE investigation into regeneration

The Commission for Racial Equality (CRE) has now become part of the new Equality and Human Rights Commission (see above at page 5). Last September, as one of its last acts, the CRE published a report on its formal investigation into regeneration schemes in England, Scotland and Wales, (making use of powers under Section 48 of the Race Relations Act to carry out a general formal investigation into any activity). This was described as one of the most important pieces of work carried out by the CRE in its 30 year history.

Julia Chain, CRE Commissioner, headed the investigation with three individuals chosen for their expertise in regeneration: Sir Howard Bernstein, Chief Executive of Manchester City Council; Lord Victor Adebawale, Chief Executive of Turning Point; and Vincent Wang, an entrepreneur and development consultant. The report's findings were based on research which included a questionnaire sent to all local authorities and development agencies in England, Scotland and Wales; five detailed local case studies; interviews with national and regional stakeholders, including regeneration bodies; and voluntary and community sector groups and an open call for evidence.

The report highlights 'the hidden human cost' of regeneration schemes. These schemes are about shaping the communities of tomorrow and securing social justice and sustainable futures for all with billions of pounds of public money being invested to create brighter futures for some of the most deprived areas in this country. The investigation suggests "that the communities that these schemes are affecting are not being properly involved in the process" and that "organisations involved in spending huge sums to transform communities are often not looking at which groups will benefit and what the impact will be on community relations." The report says that some positive examples were found but that it is clear that there is some way to go before best practice is being applied across the board. The report highlights that new buildings and public spaces must allow for interaction between different communities but the investigation found that often schemes to bring this about create further divisions between groups.

The report can be found at www.equalityhumanrights.com/en/publicationsandresources/pages/default.aspx on the “Final legacy publications” page.

A new framework in England for ‘involvement’

In November the Department for Communities and Local Government published two linked documents. The first was draft statutory guidance on Creating Strong, Safe and Prosperous Communities. This is being developed by the Government following enactment of the Local Government and Public Involvement in Health Act at the end of October. The material, to be found at <http://statutorysurvey.communities.gov.uk>, covers the role of Local Strategic Partnerships; the implications of the new ‘duty to involve’; and the process for establishing Local Area Agreements. The Government sees this statutory guidance as being central to the delivery of a ‘new settlement’ between central government, local government and citizens, as set out in its White Paper on Strong and Prosperous Communities published in the autumn of 2006. The closing date for responses was 12 February.

Linked to this broader consultation on statutory guidance, a separate consultative document, Principles of Representation; A Framework for Effective Third Sector Participation in Local Strategic Partnerships, was also published in November and can be found at www.communities.gov.uk/publications/communities/principlesofrepresentation. This discussion paper was produced in consultation with a working group on which a number of voluntary and community sector organisations were represented, including the office of the Inter Faith Network for the UK. It is not a document which has been agreed with members of the group but results from the process of consultation with them. It offers a guiding set of principles by which third sector bodies can organise themselves to be effectively represented on Local Strategic Partnerships and in local public life more generally and is therefore of particular relevance to voluntary and community sector organisations. Responses to this consultation (to Thirdsector@communities.gsi.gov.uk) were also invited by 12 February.

Abolition of blasphemy law?

In December the High Court rejected an attempt by a Christian evangelical group to prosecute the Director General of the BBC for blasphemy over the screening of the musical “Jerry Springer – The Opera”. The court held that the Theatres Act 1968 and the Broadcasting Act 1990 prevented the prosecution for blasphemous libel of a theatre or broadcaster. Some years ago a House of Lords Select Committee predicted that any future blasphemy prosecution would fail because it would clash with the rights to free speech in the European Convention on Human Rights, now enshrined in UK law through the Human Rights Act 1998.

On 9 January the House of Commons discussed an amendment to the Criminal Justice Bill, tabled by the Liberal Democrat MP Evan Harris, to abolish the blasphemy laws, as had been recommended by the Law Commission in 1985. His amendment was withdrawn after Maria Eagle, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State in the Ministry of Justice, said that subject to ‘short and sharp’ consultations with the Church of England the Government intended to bring forward its own amendments to the Bill in order to abolish the offences of blasphemy and blasphemous libel. Labour MPs had been whipped to oppose the amendment but there had been concerns that there would be a significant backbench revolt on the issue. The Government has also taken steps to consult other faith communities through the mechanism of the Faith Communities Consultative Council.

The Church of England has informed the Government that while it would have wished there to be more time to evaluate the effect of the recent legislation establishing an offence of incitement to religious hatred it does not oppose the repeal of the blasphemy laws if the Government wishes to proceed with this.

Faith and offending

Last November the National Offender Management Service published a consultation document entitled Believing We Can. This explores the contribution which faith based organisations can make to reducing adult and youth re-offending.

In his foreword, David Hanson, Minister of State in the Home Office, says that “faith based organisations have a long and impressive history of working with some of the most challenging and socially excluded young people and adults in our society to help them turn away from crime. Faith can be a great support and a motivator for personal change and can also motivate people from a wide range of backgrounds to help and care for others. Some faith based organisations are large service providers. Many employ staff but most are based in local communities and rely heavily on the contribution of committed volunteers.” The Government wants to overcome the challenges of working in effective partnership with faith based organisations and increase their role in prevention and reducing re-offending.

While the consultation closed on 22 February, the document remains on the Ministry of Justice website at www.noms.homeoffice.gov.uk/news-publications-events/publications/consultations/BWC\_third\_sector\_08/. It contains interesting material exploring the role of faith based organisations, with a series of case studies, and questions relating to future third sector commitments and actions; regional faith and voluntary and community sector alliances; ‘achieving competitive neutrality’; volunteering and mentoring; and chaplaincy.

2011 Census

In 2001 a question was included in the Census, for the first time in modern times, on religious identity. Plans are now well under way for the Census to be carried out in 2011 and a question on religious identity will again be included in the three separate Censuses to be held in England and Wales; in Northern Ireland; and in Scotland.

The Office for National Statistics is working towards the publication of a single White Paper on the Census for England and Wales to be presented at the end of October 2008 both to the UK Parliament at Westminster and the National Assembly for Wales. The White Paper will set out proposals covering the date of the Census; the questions to be included in it; arrangements for carrying out the Census; the processing of the data which is collected; and the dissemination of the Census results. The necessary secondary legislation will be brought forward following public and Parliamentary debate on the White Paper. A similar timetable is being followed for the separate White Papers being prepared by the General Register Office for Scotland and the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency.

The Office for National Statistics published a report last month on the responses which it received to its consultation of ‘users’ on questions in the 2011 Census in England and Wales on ethnicity, national identity, religion and language. There is a summary report together with separate reports in relation to four categories of respondents: Central and Devolved Government; Experts, Community and Special Interest Groups; Local and Regional Government; and Local Service Providers. The reports can be found at www.statistics.gov.uk/census/2011Census/Consultations/ethnicidntconsultation.asp

The Inter Faith Network arranged a meeting on 13 December between faith community representatives and the relevant officials in ONS for a discussion on the handling of the question on religious identity included in the 2011 Census; aspects of the arrangements for the Census itself; and the analysis of the data collected in the course of it.

New Proposals on Citizenship

On 20 February the Border and Immigration Agency in the Home Office published a Green Paper entitled The Path to Citizenship: Next Steps in Reforming the Immigration System. A copy of this paper is available online at www.bia.homeoffice.gov.uk/aboutus/consultations/pathtocitizenship/.

The Green Paper sets out plans for “radical simplification” of the immigration laws. The objective of this “is to make our immigration system clearer, more streamlined and easier to understand, in the process reducing the possibilities for abuse of the system, maximizing the benefits of migration and putting British values at the heart of the system.”

The Green Paper suggests that the current system “does not provide enough of an incentive for a migrant to progress to British citizenship.” The Government wants “to encourage people with the right qualifications and commitment to take up citizenship so that they can become fully integrated into our society.”

The deadline for formal responses to the Green Paper is 14 May.

Entry requirements for Ministers of Religion

The Border and Immigration Agency of the Home Office has put on to its website material explaining how individuals can apply to come to work in the UK as a minister of religion, missionary or a member of a religious order. The website (which contains application forms for individuals to complete) gives details of the admission requirements in terms of qualifications and the need to show that an individual is able to communicate well in English, and also information on how an individual can extend their visa or apply to settle permanently in the UK after they have lived here for five years. This material is available at www.ind.homeoffice.gov.uk/workingintheuk/ministersofreligion.

Charity Commission's Faith and Social Cohesion Unit

The Charity Commission has recently created a new Faith and Social Cohesion Unit, partially funded by a grant from the Department for Communities and Local Government. It says that "faith-based charities form a significant part of the charitable sector. The beneficiaries of these charities can be counted in their millions, and they make a huge contribution to communities across England and Wales."

Over the last two years, following its earlier consultation with independent and black majority Churches, the Commission has run a series of workshops with a wide range of faith-based charities to learn more about the way they work and to help strengthen their governance and effectiveness. It has held a total of fifteen events and met with representatives from over 800 faith-based organisations, including representatives from the Muslim, Jewish, Sikh, Hindu and Buddhist communities, as well delegates from the UK's smaller faiths, such as Baha'i and Zoroastrian. The Commission says that these events have given the Commission a valuable insight into the main issues, concerns and tensions faced by these charities, and a clearer understanding of the benefits they bring to the communities in which they work.

The Commission's new Faith and Social Cohesion

Unit will provide support and advice to faith-based groups through outreach work, capacity building training and guidance. The new Unit is headed by Ghulam Rasool, Chair of the Green Light Muslim Youth Forum in Dudley and formerly Mosques Capacity Building Coordinator for the British Muslim Forum. He can be contacted at: Faith and Social Cohesion Unit, Charity Commission, PO Box 1227, Liverpool L69 3UG tel: 0845 3000 218 or email enquiries@charitycommission.gsi.gov.uk writing 'For the attention of the Faith and Social Cohesion Unit' in the subject box.

The Unit aims to:

- engage with faith communities to identify and support organisations that could be, but are not, currently registered with the Commission;
- assist faith-based charities to improve their standards of governance and accountability and thereby increase their effectiveness;
- work collaboratively to achieve and promote well run and effectively regulated faith-based charities; and
- improve the Commission's and society's understanding of faith-based charities.

The Unit will initially work primarily with Muslim charities and communities. A Project Board including representatives of the Mosques and Imams National Advisory Board (MINAB) has been established to direct the Unit's work and to provide specialist advice.

The Commission is also establishing a Faith Advisory Group with representatives from a variety of faiths to advise it on its work.

Charities and Public Benefit

As reported in earlier issues of Inter Faith Update, under the Charities Act 2006 'public benefit' is now included in the definition of a charitable purpose. This provision is expected to take effect from 1 April. Over past months the Charity Commission has been carrying out consultations prior to issuing formal guidance on the interpretation of this 'public benefit' requirement. Charity trustees will be required to have regard to this guidance and to report on their charity's public benefit in the annual report of their trustees.

In January the Charity Commission published Charities and Public Benefit as its formal guidance. This can be found on the Commission's website at www.charity-commission.gov.uk/publicbenefit/default.asp. A summary of the guidance for Charity trustees is also to be found on the Commission's website together with a document analysing the law underpinning it.

The Commission will shortly be beginning a series of further consultations on supplementary guidance on the public benefit for specific types of charity and among the first to be covered will be public benefit and the advancement of religion. The Commission had an initial informal consultation on this in October.

Holocaust Memorial Day

Holocaust Memorial Day takes place annually on or near the date of 27 January – the anniversary of the liberation of Auschwitz. This year's HMD theme was "Imagine... remember, reflect, react", providing a focus for people to remember the past and reflect on racism and intolerance in society.

Liverpool was the host city for the national event which took place on 27 January. The event featured testimonies by survivors and speeches from senior public figures including the Chief Rabbi and the Archbishop of Canterbury as well as music from the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra and a community choir of 100 voices; a new dance piece on the story of the Sarajevo Romeo and Juliet choreographed by Jenny Rees; and new music and theatre by Brian Abbott and Rick Jukes drawing on the words and voices of young people from Liverpool. Alongside the national event there was also an Anne Frank exhibition, a Roscoe lecture, a play and a film featuring testimonies by survivors of the atrocity living in the city. Merseyside Council of Faiths organised a Walk of Faiths leading to the Liverpool Philharmonic Hall in Hope Street where the national event was held.

Representatives from bodies across the UK attended the event, including faith leaders. These included representatives of the Muslim Council of Britain (MCB), the UK's largest Muslim body, which had voted to end its six-year non-participation in Holocaust Memorial Day.

In Northern Ireland, a Regional Holocaust Memorial Day commemoration was held in the Parliament Buildings on 24 January. The audience included members of the local Jewish Community as well as representatives from local ethnic minority and other groups. Holocaust Remembrance Scotland was hosted by East Renfrewshire Council on 28 January, in Eastwood Theatre. The event was chaired by George Reid, former Scottish Parliament presiding officer. A panel of speakers took questions from the floor on the Holocaust, the lessons to be learned from it and from world events such as the current violence in Kenya. The panel was made up of MSPs Nicola Sturgeon, Annabel Goldie and Ken Macintosh; Dr Stephen Smith, Holocaust Memorial Day Trust chair; and Scott McKay of the Scottish Youth Parliament.

There were many events across the UK to mark Holocaust Memorial Day. Many local inter faith bodies held or participated in HMD events.

Cardiff held its annual service for Holocaust Memorial Day on 24 January at City Hall, organised by Cardiff City Council. Cardiff County and the Vale of Glamorgan Youth Choir gave performances during the service while dignitaries laid official wreaths of remembrance. Mr Alan Schwartz, Chairman of the South Wales Jewish Representative Committee and the Cardiff Interfaith Association along with other members from the group attended.

The Edinburgh Inter-Faith Association (EIFA), in partnership with the City of Edinburgh Council, marked Holocaust Memorial Day on 27 January in Lothian Chambers. The event included short addresses by Lord Provost George Grubb, Council Leader Jenny Dawe and EIFA General Secretary Victor Spence, together with readings of survivor testimonies, poems, music and reflections on recent visits to Auschwitz. Pupils from Forrester High School and Holyrood High School performed poetry and music. After the event the Lord Provost hosted a civic reception.

Medway Inter-Faith Action Forum, in partnership with Medway Council and Rochester Cathedral, held an evening service at Rochester Cathedral with students from local schools and the Rochester Cathedral Choir. An exhibition of work by the students was on display at the cathedral to coincide with this. Nottingham City Council, in association with Nottingham Inter Faith Council, held a Service of Remembrance and Renewal at St Mary's Church, High Pavement, followed by a civic reception at the Council House. Exeter Interfaith Group held a service at the Guildhall, opened by the Mayor. There was an exhibition on display and the service included readings and prayers, the lighting of candles and silence. In East London, an inter faith service was held at the East London Synagogue, Nelson Street, with representatives from the Tower Hamlets Inter Faith Forum. Participants from different faith traditions were invited to give talks on the year's theme. A local Holocaust survivor also joined the service and spoke about his experiences, and the importance of "Imagine... remember, reflect, react".

Leicester Council of faiths organised a memorial event on 27 January with the support of the Leicester City Council, the School Development Support Agency and Leicester University's Stanley Burton Centre For Holocaust Studies. Leicester Council of Faiths chairman, Minou Cortazzi welcomed participants. There was an introduction by Leicester Lord Mayor, Councillor Gary G Hunt, and a talk on the importance of marking Holocaust Memorial Day. Rwandan genocide survivor Beatha Uwazaninka gave a keynote address on the Holocaust Memorial theme for 2008 "IMAGINE ... remember, reflect react", drawing on her personal experience of the horrors of ethnic cleansing.

HMD was marked in many other contexts such as schools. In Northern Ireland, for example, pupils from local schools participated in a special event on 4 February at Derryloran Hall and at the Fermanagh County Museum in Enniskillen, Northern Ireland. One of the youngest Holocaust survivors, Eva Clarke, was invited to tell her personal story.

The Holocaust Memorial Day Trust produced materials specific to this year's theme and resources are available to download on <http://www.hmd.org.uk/>

Under a new Government funded scheme, announced on 4 February by Minister Jim Knight, two sixth-form pupils from every school in England are to visit Auschwitz to learn about the Holocaust. The idea behind the visit programme is for pupils to educate their classmates and communities on their return by drawing on what they have learned.

Hindus condemn Government's lack of engagement with their community

Following a meeting on 3 February at Bhaktivedanta Manor nearly thirty Hindu organisations, including the community's main national representative bodies, sent a message to the Prime Minister condemning "the Government's total lack of engagement with the Hindu community".

The last issue of Inter Faith Update included a report on the decision by the Welsh National Assembly to slaughter Shambo, a bullock kept in the sanctuary of the Skande Vale Temple in South Wales because it tested positive in a routine test for tuberculosis. In January Gangotri, one of the sick cows being treated at Bhaktivedanta Manor, where a Cow Protection Centre is being developed to demonstrate new ways of ethical, compassionate and sustainable farming, was put down by officials from the RSPCA. Gauri das, President of Bhaktivedanta Manor, said that "the RSPCA and police had given assurances that they would not take drastic action and that the temple would be allowed to form a legal case, but they returned to kill the cow at a time when many devotees were praying."

The gathering of Hindu representatives on 3 February took stock of these and other current concerns and adopted a resolution which said:

"We, the undersigned, condemn the Government's total lack of active engagement with the Hindu community. We have come to the conclusion that only those communities who shout the loudest tend to get immediate attention from this Government. Those who make an active contribution to community cohesion and the economic, cultural and social development of Britain get ignored and feel isolated. The unwarranted killing of Gangotri and the Government's indifference to the needs of this peace-loving community is an exhibition of undisguised contempt and utter disregard. We call upon this Government to recognise its responsibilities in engaging equitably with all faith communities and to honour its own commitment to building a cohesive society where all faiths feel included and valued."

Anglican Bishop's comments prompt controversy

An article published in The Sunday Telegraph on 6 January, prompted some controversy. Rt Revd Michael Nazir Ali, Bishop of Rochester wrote that "in fewer than 50 years Britain has changed from being a society with an acknowledged Christian basis to one which is increasingly described by politicians the media as 'multi faith'", as a result of which "it is now less possible for Christianity to be the public faith in Britain", arguing that the existence of chapels and chaplaincies in places such as hospitals, prisons and institutions of higher education is in jeopardy either because of financial cuts or because the authorities want 'multi faith' provision, without regard to the distinctively Christian character of the nation's laws, values, customs and culture.

Much of the attention given to his article focused on his statement that one of the results of "a worldwide resurgence of the ideology of Islamic extremism . . . has been to further alienate the young from the nation in which they are growing up and also to turn already separate communities into 'no-go' areas where adherence to this ideology has become a mark of acceptability. Those of a different faith or race may find it difficult to live or work there because of hostility to them. In many ways, this is but the other side of the coin to far-Right intimidation. Attempts have been made to impose an 'Islamic' character on certain areas, for example by insisting on artificial amplification for the adhan, the call to prayer."

Some of those who reacted to the Bishop's article endorsed his concerns and expressed worries over the extent to which there is now a degree of segregation within particular urban areas. However, others, including Muslim representatives and a number of senior Christian clergy, said that they did not recognise his description of this country and expressed regret that in his article he had disregarded the constructive efforts being made by different communities, including the Muslim community, to promote bridge building and integration. For example, the Church's Bishop for Urban Life and Faith, Rt Rev Stephen Lowe, told BBC Radio 4's Today programme: "I have not seen these sort of areas. There are, no doubt, as there are in all faiths, some people of extreme persuasions. But the vast majority of the Christian and Muslim populations that I know are working happily together" and Rev Arun John, Team Vicar of St Paul's Manningham in Bradford, said that in an area that was the focus of the 2001 riots practising Christians are now in a minority of 5% yet in the three years he had ministered there he had not felt in any way threatened by Muslim dominance. Representatives of Tower Hamlets local authority in London, together with the police, local faith groups and Tower Hamlets Inter Faith Forum said in a joint statement that "... we do not shy away from the problems and challenges to be tackled in this borough – but they relate far more to social deprivation than to religious intolerance or extremism."

A number of Muslim organisations expressed their disquiet over the Bishop's article and were concerned at its potential impact on work being done to take forward the promotion of good relations between the Muslim and other communities in this country. The Muslim Council of Britain said that it deeply regretted "the incendiary comments recently made by the Bishop of Rochester Dr Michael Nazir Ali. His assertion that British Muslims have created 'no go areas' in some parts of Britain is not borne out in any credible research; the remarks are alarming and serve only to benefit the far right. Across the country, British Muslims are seeking common cause with their neighbours, sharing and living with peoples of other faiths. Local inter faith groups are coming together to seek mutual understanding and work for the common good."

In response to the concerns expressed about his newspaper article, Bishop Michael Nazir-Ali issued a statement a few days later pointing out that "the fact of 'separated' communities had already been noted by distinguished commentators..." and that politicians had "also recognised its reality". He said "I deeply regret any hurt and do not wish to cause offence to anyone, let alone my Muslim friends, but unless we diagnose the malaise from which we all suffer we shall not be able to discover the remedy." In a further statement on his website on 1 February, the bishop wrote that the purpose of his article had been 'to point out that the best way for welcoming and integrating newer arrivals in this country should have been a Christian vision of hospitality and not the secular policy of multiculturalism which has led to such disastrous consequences' and he explained further his reference to 'no-go' areas and problems for Christian workers in some areas. He noted that death threats following the publication of his newspaper article illustrated the importance of having freedom of discussion and, perhaps, to have one's views changed, whether in politics, religion or science.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Rowan Williams, in an interview said that the Bishop of Rochester's comments had given "a very unfortunate impression". In his view, relations between the two faiths in Britain were in a "very good place". But he said that there was a problem of "mutual isolation" in some areas with different communities, and that to ask how that could be resolved was "a very good question".

Archbishop of Canterbury's Temple lecture on civil and religious law

On 7 February the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Rowan Williams, gave a lecture on "Civil and Religious Law in England: a Religious Perspective" as the first in a series on "Islam in English Law" under the auspices of the Temple Church and the Centre for Islamic and Middle Eastern Law at the School of Oriental and African Studies. In a lengthy and closely argued lecture he discussed the conceptual basis on which it might be possible to accommodate different aspects of religious conscience within the overall framework of English law drawing on some aspects of shari'ah for illustration. Setting this in a broader context he explored the limits of a unitary, and solely secular, legal system in the presence of an increasingly plural, including religiously plural, society; and ways in which a unitary system might be able to accommodate religious claims within it. The lecture made it clear that he was not proposing the introduction of parallel legal jurisdictions but, rather, consideration of the scope for reasonable accommodation for religious conscience.

Prior to his lecture, the Archbishop gave a radio interview for BBC Radio 4's World At One. Following this and the lecture itself there was widespread media coverage which was highly critical of what the Archbishop was thought to have advocated, even though in a number of cases this seemed to be at odds with his actual remarks.

In a statement the Muslim Council of Britain said that it was grateful for the "thoughtful intervention" of the Archbishop "exploring the possibilities of an accommodation between English law and some aspects of Islamic personal law". The Christian-Muslim Forum said that in the Archbishop's "significant and important" lecture he "had raised the vital issue of how to allow for religious conscience and belief to operate within the overall framework of English and UK law".

When he spoke at the opening of the meeting of the Church of England General Synod on 11 February, the Archbishop was greeted with a standing ovation. In his address he took responsibility for any "unclarity" in his lecture but strongly defended the appropriateness of his addressing issues around the perceived concerns of other religious communities trying to "bring them into better public focus". He said that in his lecture he was not talking about "parallel jurisdictions". The question was whether additional choices should be available under UK law for resolving disputes and regulating transactions, for example in the way that there is already special provision for Islamic mortgage arrangements, which would create a helpful interaction between the courts and the practice of Muslim legal scholars in this country. But he said that much work would have to be done if there were to be a move in that direction.

The lecture, together with subsequent clarifications, can be found on the Lambeth Palace website at www.archbishopofcanterbury.org/1.

Muslims hold vigil outside 10 Downing Street

In the wake of the reaction by the media and others to the remarks by Dr Rowan Williams, the Archbishop of Canterbury, on shari'ah, Muslim representatives held a vigil outside 10 Downing Street on 16 February.

A statement issued beforehand by the Muslim Council of Britain, the British Muslim Forum and other organisations read, in part, as follows:

"We, the British Muslim community, are a rich mosaic bound by the universality of our faith. We have diverse origins, cultures and schools of thought which all strengthen our communities. We are united in the belief that our faith, along with other faiths, can be a force for good for Britain. As British Muslims we reaffirm our conviction in the British values of fair play and the rule of law and we see no incompatibility in these principles with Islam whose fundamental tenets include the pursuit of social justice. The values of fair play should apply when actions of a tiny minority amongst us are used to judge and condemn us as communities and as a faith.

We do not seek parallel legal systems, nor do we aim to enforce on anyone any particular code or way of life. But we do expect a fair discourse free from the current shrill hysteria screaming of impending doom from invading hordes.”

MINAB (Mosques and Imams National Advisory Board)

The Mosques and Imams National Advisory Board (MINAB) launched its draft constitution and draft standards document for consultation on 29 November at the Muslim Cultural Heritage Centre in London. The documents are for mosques and training establishments for imams as part of efforts within the Muslim communities, to improve standards of governance and leadership through self regulation and self assessment. While emphasising that mosques should excel as places of worship, in promoting cohesive communities, and combating all forms of violent extremism in society, other key priorities set out in the documents include increasing the skills and competencies of imams; developing mosques as centres of community cohesion, citizenship and dialogue; strengthening accountability and governance practices/procedures; improving access of women and young people to mosques; and providing advice on the suitability of imams and scholars coming from abroad.

The draft material on constitution and core standards was the work of MINAB’s founding members; Al-Khoei Foundation, the British Muslim Forum (BMF), the Muslim Association of Britain (MAB) and the Muslim Council of Britain (MCB). MINAB is chaired by Dr Manazir Ahsan. For details about the consultation events visit www.minab.org.uk and to obtain more information about the draft constitution and draft standards document.

£1 m to support RE in English schools

In a speech to a conference on 17 January organised jointly by the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority and the National Association of Standing Advisory Councils for RE Jim Knight, Minister for Schools and Learners, announced that the Government is to spend £1 million over three years on methods “to spread best practice in RE across the schools and authorities who need to do more to reach the level set by the best”.

He said that these additional financial resources “will pay for the creation of new online support material, including video case studies and a toolkit of activities [to] support RE as a subject in the revised secondary curriculum. It will also pay for the production of state of the art learning materials on world religions specifically including help with handling the kinds of issues that pupils are increasingly raising – like 9/11 and the issues of hate crimes and religious fundamentalism.”

The Government’s intention is to “rationalise and quality assure the many RE teaching resources that are already available”, which the Minister said “vary enormously in quality and appropriateness”. It is also intended to improve training for RE teachers and to support SACREs through making use of “the experience from last year’s successful pilots to improve training and to increase the diversity of ethnic minority members”. He said that his Department would be working with other Government Departments, including the Department for Communities and Local Government, to raise the profile of SACREs.

He also announced that his Department would begin a consultation soon on updating the current guidance on RE. In doing so, the guidance on RE will be separated from the guidance on collective worship which will not be reviewed in the immediate future so as to focus on RE. The RE guidance will be brought up to date to include references to the non-statutory national framework on RE in England and to support schools in their new duty to promote community cohesion. He said that in time he expected all local authorities to adopt the national framework.

Faith in the System

On 10 September the Department for Children, Schools and Families published Faith in the System: the role of schools with a religious character in English education and society. In this document the Government, alongside Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh faith school providers, set out their ‘shared vision and understanding of the integral part which schools with a religious character play in the publicly funded school system in and in society. They jointly confirmed a “commitment to continue to work together and with schools with and without a religious character to improve the life chances of children, to build bridges to greater mutual trust and understanding and to contribute to a just and cohesive society, while nurturing children in their faith and as engaged citizens.”

The document sets out the history of ‘faith schools’, together with more recent developments which have seen Muslim, Sikh, Seventh Day Adventist and Greek Orthodox schools joining the maintained sector alongside Church of England, Catholic, Methodist, Quaker and Jewish schools. Around one third of the total number of maintained schools in England are schools with a religious character (6,580 out of a total of around 21,000 maintained schools). Out of 47 academies 16 have a faith designation and nearly 2 out of every 5 independent schools in England have a religious character (around 900 out of a total of just over 2,300 independent schools). The document says that “this dual system of voluntary schools supported by faith organisations and schools with a religious character is ... at the heart of the school system in England”.

Among the commitments made by providers of faith schools are to ensure that their schools promote community cohesion; work in a spirit of partnership with the local authority and the Learning and Skills Council; and endeavour to meet the needs of all their pupils whether they are of the faith or not. The document sets out the position in terms of the curriculum in faith schools and of their admissions policies, as well as exploring the way in which faith schools are working collaboratively with other schools and with the wider community.

The document says that “the Government will ... continue to support the establishment of new schools, including faith schools, in the maintained sector where the local decision making process shows that is what parents and the local community want and where the schools is willing and able to comply with the requirements on all maintained schools.” The document can be downloaded from www.dfes.gov.uk/publications/faithinthefsystem/pdfs/FaithInTheSystem.pdf.

Board of Deputies to appoint Muslim adviser for faith school linking project

The Board of Deputies of British Jews is recruiting a Muslim Schools Adviser as part of a major initiative that will create a linking scheme between Jewish and other faith schools or comprehensive schools where a single faith dominates. The ‘Shared Futures’ project aims to promote respect for diversity and to deepen understanding between communities and schools through a broad range of programmes that will appeal to Jewish and Muslim schools. Subsequent phases of the programme will include links between Jewish, Catholic, Sikh, and Hindu schools.

A central aim of the project is to create programmes that enable interaction between students through the participation in ‘hands-on’ projects and it will explore schemes inspired by business ethics groups, sports associations and environmental bodies. One ‘Shared Futures’ team coordinator has been working with the Muslim Police Association to promote both a sports programme and a mentoring programme.

The project was developed following consultation with, among others, the Department for Children, Schools and Families (DCSF) and faith school providers. From September 2008 onwards, the OFSTED inspection framework will be looking specifically at cohesion and linking when inspecting single-faith schools.

Tackling extremism on campus

On 22 January the Department for Innovation, Universities and Skills published new guidance aimed at helping universities and colleges prevent violent extremism and promote good relations on campus. The document is entitled: Promoting good campus relations, fostering shared values and preventing violent extremism in Universities and Higher Education Colleges. It replaces earlier guidance, issued in 2006.

The Government's assessment is that the biggest current threat to the UK is from Al Qa'ida influenced terrorism and it considers that the threat in Higher Education is serious but not widespread. In some of its contents the guidance specifically focuses on this form of violent extremism and elsewhere on all forms of violent extremism. The document says that it reflects the increased knowledge it now has of how violent extremist groups operate, how they recruit and what the scale and nature of this activity is within communities.

The Government recognises that universities face similarly complex issues with regard to the activities of the extreme far right, animal rights activists, anti-Semitism and Islamophobia, as well as wider issues of race, faith, sexual orientation and gender intolerance.

The guidance highlights five key areas, offering practical advice and issues for staff and students to consider. These are:

- Promoting and reinforcing shared values: creating space for free and open debate; and listening to and supporting mainstream voices;
- Breaking down segregation amongst different student communities: supporting inter-faith and inter-cultural dialogue and engaging all students in playing a full and active role in wider engagement with society;
- Ensuring student safety and that campuses are free from bullying, harassment and intimidation;
- Providing support to vulnerable students and offering appropriate advice, guidance and sources of support to all staff and students;
- Ensuring staff and students are aware of their roles in preventing violent extremism.

The guidance emphasises the clear role that universities have in creating spaces for free and open debate to challenge violent extremism. The Government says that academic freedom forms a key strand of its policy in preventing violent extremism in both Higher and Further Education.

A consultation document covering similar ground but directed towards further education colleges was issued by the Department of Innovation, Universities and Skills on 11 February, in association with the Association of Colleges. Its publication follows consultation with a wide range of key stakeholders including College Principals. The document says that the present consultation is "the first time we have debated these issues widely in the FE sector". It is described as being "relevant to all organisations providing Further Education in a dedicated learning environment and the term 'college' is used to refer to these throughout. We are also, therefore, interested in providers offering training within a workplace setting, to consider how the issues we explore relate to their work."

The higher education document can be found at www.dius.gov.uk/publications/extremismhe.pdf and the further education document (on which the consultation process runs until 6 May) at www.dcsf.gov.uk/consultations/conDetails.cfm?consultationId=1521.

Report on chaplaincy in institutions of higher education

A major report commissioned by the Church of England and based on work taken forward with the engagement of a range of faith communities in the UK was launched on 15 January. Researched and written by the Revd Jeremy Clines, Chaplain of York St John University, the report shows how chaplains are active examples of how religious communities can work alongside each other in an environment of mutual respect that promotes dialogue and builds community cohesion. As part of the project, Jeremy Clines undertook a wide-ranging survey among 111 of the 128 higher education institutions in England and Wales, supplemented by seven regional practice workshops. The findings illustrate how chaplaincies assist their institutions in shaping their vision, particularly in relation to internationalisation, widening participation and increasing community engagement.

Examples of good practice highlighted in the report include setting up inter faith societies, organising visits to places of worship, or mounting a 'faith week' to raise awareness about different world faiths. The report points to the key role such projects play in fostering good relations between the future leaders of different faith communities in the UK.

The report calls on higher education institutions and the Government to continue to invest in chaplaincies to help them further their significant contribution to social cohesion, at a time when 43 per cent of young people in England and Wales have experienced higher education. It urges the higher education sector to support the creation of a national 'Faiths in Higher Education Forum', to include senior representatives of faith communities and supported by a working group. It also recommends that training materials and guidance should be produced to assist those working in the sector to navigate this complex subject. The report recommends that with collaboration between national chaplaincy advisors, chaplains, Universities UK, GuildHE, the Equality Challenge Unit, the Association of Managers of Student Services in Higher Education, the National Union of Students and the Inter Faith Network, the working group should aim to offer universities:

- Further advice on how to determine the best provision for a range of faith groups, appropriate to the local context: how 'dynamic equivalence' can be built into provision for the faiths, considering the history, heritage and location of the institution as well as the constituency of the student body and what provision they really need. While space is still at a premium for universities and colleges seeking to offer facilities to a range of faith communities, 95 per cent of chaplaincies report some provision for prayer spaces at their institution. While this is important, the report suggests that people with religious beliefs are more likely to feel that their identity is respected and affirmed through having their needs met in relation to a variety of issues including prayer space, accommodation, catering arrangements, opportunities to celebrate religious festivals and flexibility in the academic timetable.
- Advice on possibilities for increasing the number of salaried religious professionals working in chaplaincies from all the faith communities, and resources to help chaplaincies manage the implications of the large number of volunteers helping to run their services. The survey found that 78 per cent of all chaplaincy staff are Christian, while 19 per cent of chaplaincy staff come from the Baha'i, Buddhist, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim, and Sikh faiths. With 95 per cent of all salaried staff having a Christian role in their chaplaincy team, the report raises the issue of how other faith groups can explore opportunities for resourcing chaplaincy provision, perhaps through collaborative joint bids.

The report, funded by the Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund, is being sent to vice-chancellors, principals and chaplaincies across the country. Copies can be downloaded from: <http://www.cofe.anglican.org/news/pr0508.html>

Conference focuses on 'chaplaincy for all' in higher and further education

On 15 January, a conference took place at Church House, London on 'Chaplaincy for All: Meeting Students' Spiritual Needs in the Multi-Faith Context of Further and Higher Education'. It was organised by the Church of England Board of Education and in association with the Methodist Church, the National Council of Faith and Beliefs in Further Education (fbfe) and the Churches' Higher Education Liaison Group).

Hindu students discuss inter faith issues at anniversary conference

National Hindu Students Forum (NHSF) celebrated their 15th anniversary by hosting, on 2-4 November at Imperial College, a conference: "Dynamic Spirit 2007: A Meeting With Yourself". At the conference two workshops were run on inter faith issues by Nitin Palan of the Swaminaryan Mission and Inter Faith Network Trustee with Harriet Crabtree, Director of the Inter Faith Network. Bijal Bhagwan of NHSF organised and oversaw the workshops at which there were contributions from young Hindus from universities across the UK. Inter Faith Network Project Officer Urmi Raval ran a stall during part of the event.

Undergraduate 'Parliamentors' programme launched by 3FF and Faith Matters

Three Faiths Forum's youth programme 3ff and Faith Matters launched an 'Undergraduate Parliamentors Programme in the House of Commons on 31 January 2008. Through this programme, politicians are invited to act as mentors for existing university students studying in the political field. Mentors will meet at least once per month with an 'Abrahamic Trio' of Muslim, Christian, and Jewish students who will be working on a project together. The nature of the project will be decided by the mentor and their group together, and the Three Faiths Forum office will co-ordinate delivery of the project with the mentees on an on-going basis. The option will be offered to each group to link with a non faith-based NGO or think tank in order to further promote the action aspect of the programme. Students are in their second year of a bachelor's degree in politics or a related subject, and are offered the chance to enter the UP programme through the relevant university department. MPs involved are: John Battle MP (Labour); Peter Bottomley MP (Conservative); Louise Ellman MP (Labour); Lynne Featherstone MP (Liberal Democrat); Dominic Grieve MP (Conservative); Simon Hughes MP (Liberal Democrat); Syed Kamall MEP (Conservative); Sadiq Khan MP (Labour); and Susan Kramer MP (Liberal Democrat).

The Culture Faith and Youth Connective

The Culture Faith and Youth Connective is a new network, under development, of organisations delivering faith and cultural programmes to schools, colleges, universities and youth groups to encourage young people to engage with each other, in a process that allows them to explore their own as well as each other's identity. Organisations within the Connective use a variety of methods to break down barriers, such as cultural events, social action, and exploring religious texts. By offering a 'menu' of programmes, the Connective aims to empower users to choose the ones that best suit their needs. Currently the Connective links: Alif Aleph UK; Council for Christians and Jews; Encompass Trust; London Youth; Interfaith Action; Minorities of Europe; Polygon Arts; St Ethelburga's Centre for Reconciliation and Peace; the Diversity and Dialogue programme at the Citizenship Foundation; and 3FF (the youth division of Three Faiths Forum). The current focus is mainly London but the hope is to widen the focus to the UK more widely. ## Events for chaplains in the North East and London

The Council of Christians and Jews has held two events on the theme "Faith Versus Fear: Managing inter faith conflict on campus" for University Chaplains in Northern England and in London. At the first of these, in North Shields on 4 December, speakers included Revd Hugh Shilson-Thomas, National Advisor for Higher Education Chaplaincy; Jonathan Freeman, Violent Extremism Unit, DCLG; and Imam Ibrahim Mogra, Chair of the Muslim Council of Britain's Inter Faith Relations Committee and a member of the Christian Muslim Forum. The second, on 29 January, took place at St Ethelburga's Centre For Peace and Reconciliation and was facilitated by Simon Keyes, Director of St Ethelburga's, with speakers including Imam Admani, London Metropolitan University; Imam Rajput, Brunel University; Rabbi Ian Broder, London University Chaplain; and Samuel McBratney, Christian Chaplain and Lecturer, City University. For further information about the issues covered during the conference contact council of Christians and Jews at chaplainsprojects@ccj.org.uk

Faiths and Beliefs in Further Education

NEAFE National Council and the Faith in FE Forum have agreed an amalgamation and have formed a new body called the National Council of Faiths and Beliefs in Further Education (fbfe). fbfe is a national independent inter faith charity working with the learning and skills sector, faith and local communities and national and local faith/belief based groups. The new website address is www.fbfe.org

Muslim Christian youth dialogue

A Youth Dialogue Event was held on 19 January where Christian teenagers from Kenilworth met with up with Muslim teenagers from Aston at Aston Church Centre, Birmingham. This was the third time the groups had met. The focus of the day was on discussing 'A Common Word between Us and You' the open letter sent to Christian.

The intention is for the young people to take their findings and turn them into song, pictures, and a letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Rowan Williams. The project is a joint partnership between Youth Encounter of Scripture Union and The Christian Muslim Forum's Youth Specialist Group.

Hindu-Christian Relations

Meetings between Christian representatives and members of a number of Hindu organisations took place in January. These addressed issues that had arisen in the work of the Hindu Christian Forum and its Listening Exercise. In the constructive discussions various issues were highlighted as opportunities and obstacles to the development of good Hindu-Christian relations and it was agreed that proposals would be made about future Hindu representation on the Forum.

New Churches' Inter-religious Network at CTBI

A new 'Churches' Inter-religious Network' (CIN) within Churches Together in Britain and Ireland will succeed the Churches' Commission for Inter Faith Relations of CTBI. The proposed Network will be a forum for the Churches and National Ecumenical Instruments to meet on Inter Faith matters. The representatives to the Network will be appointed in due course.

For further information about CTBI and about its work on inter faith issues see www.ctbi.org.uk or contact Revd Peter Colwell, Secretary for Church and Life and Inter Faith Relations (peter.colwell@ctbi.org.uk).

Funding inter faith work in Wales

On 28 November the Inter Faith Council for Wales held a networking event in Cardiff, in partnership with the Community Development Foundation (CDF) Wales, that focused on funding for inter faith work in Wales. Representatives from various inter faith bodies around the country attended the meeting. Urmi Raval, Inter Faith Network's Local and Regional Project Officer, was in attendance and spoke briefly about the Inter Faith Network and its work. Nigel Anthony of the Inter-Faith Council for Wales spoke about a mapping exercise to identify local inter faith bodies and projects. Other speakers included Asim Hafeez, Social Cohesion Project at the Welsh Assembly Government; Chris Myant, Director of the Equality and Human Rights Commission; Liz Court, CDF Wales; Rev Aled Edwards, General Secretary of Churches Together in Wales and a member of the Inter-Faith Council for Wales; and Pam Evans from the inter faith project Peace Mala. CDF associate Martin Shaw was at hand to give funding surgery sessions to members of the groups who attended.

Launch of Interfaith Legal advisers network

On 7 December an inaugural meeting of the Interfaith Legal Advisers Network took place at Cardiff University. It brought together, for the first time, advisers to a wide range of religious groups to share their experiences and to address contemporary themes at the interface between religious law and State law. Discussion topics ranged from the use of religious symbols in public to impartiality in relation to religion. The Centre for Law and Religion at Cardiff University has developed the Network to provide members with a greater understanding of their respective religious legal systems. Professor Norman Doe, Director of the Centre, said: "The establishment of the network is particularly timely given the large number of recent high profile court cases involving religion, including cases concerning religious dress, sacred animals, and faith schools. Discussions will be ongoing providing members with a greater understanding of their respective religious legal systems and the common legal issues they face."

Irish Inter-Religious Council considered

Senior religious leaders from the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland met on 31 October in Dundalk, County Louth for a meeting to consider the establishment of a Council of Religious Leaders, the Irish Inter Religious Council (IIRC). Most religious communities on the island – including Roman Catholic, Church of Ireland and Presbyterian Christians as well as Buddhists, Muslims and Sikhs – were represented at the meeting. Positive support was also forthcoming from the Hindu and Jewish communities. Participants emphasised the symbolic value of the IIRC bringing together leaders from both North and South of the island. Mr. Jehangir Sarosh, the President of Religions for Peace (Europe), facilitated this initiative.

At the meeting, senior representatives of the religious communities agreed that a formal structure for inter-religious cooperation may be established, and appointed a working group to bring the process forward. The group was mandated to explore the objectives of the proposed Irish Inter Religious Council (IIRC) as well as to propose a possible constitution. It is hoped that this further work can be completed by the spring of 2008 so that the proposal can then be presented to the respective General Assemblies for ratification.

During the meeting, the religious leaders highlighted a number of matters of common concern, which the Inter Religious Council might address in more detail later, such as issues of violence, poverty and education. Jehangir Sarosh, a Zoroastrian, and Dr Brian Walker, Director of Religions for Peace (UK), shared their experience with similar structures in other parts of Europe. Religions for Peace (Europe) was asked to continue the initiative of facilitating the process of considering a Council of Religious Leaders in Ireland.

Scottish Inter Faith Week

Scotland's First Minister, Alex Salmond, launched the fourth Scottish Inter Faith Week in the James MacKay Hall at the University of Aberdeen on 25 November. The launch event was organised by the Scottish Inter Faith Council, Aberdeen Inter Faith and the University of Aberdeen. The occasion also marked the launch of an NHS booklet Religion and Belief Matter, produced by Dr Geoff Lachlan on behalf of the Scottish Inter Faith Council and the Scottish Government's Health and Wellbeing "Fair for All" initiative.

Scottish Inter Faith Week is an annual week of events that see people of all faiths, across Scotland actively creating opportunities to build understanding and co-operation between religious communities.

SIFC holds women's meeting

On 22 January Scottish Inter Faith Council (SIFC) held a first meeting with women to begin to plan a strategy for developing women's role in inter faith activity throughout Scotland. This year's SIFC seminar for women is planned for 17 June in Discovery Point, Dundee. Links have been made with the European Women of Faith Network, and the Global Women of Faith Network.

FaithAction Conference

The first FaithAction National Conference, 'Money Well Spent', took place at Westminster Central Hall. Government Ministers spoke about their experience of working with faith-based organisations and there were opportunities to discuss partnership funding opportunities with a range of Central Government departments including the Department for Communities and Local Government, Health, International Development and Children, Schools and Families.

English Regional Faith Forums Network

A meeting of the new English Regional Faith Forums Network (ERFFN) was held at the offices of the Inter Faith Network on 31 January. ERFFN enables the regional faith forums to discuss issues of common interest and concern and to share news and good practice. It is facilitated by the Inter Faith Network for the UK and the Faith Based Regeneration Network, reflecting the fact that a number of the regional faith forums' work spans both inter faith and faith based social action work.

A special focus at the January meeting was how the forums might wish, jointly, to give input to the Government's consultation document Face to Face and Side by Side: A Framework for Inter Faith Dialogue and Social Action. Anna Cummins and Nicola Speechly of the Department for Communities and Local Government came to a session of the meeting to discuss the consultation with members. This discussion built an earlier meeting of ERFFN on 18 September which had included an extended joint session with CLG's Cohesion and Faiths Unit and 'cohesion leads' of the Government Offices for the Regions at which early input on a number of issues relating to a possible Government inter faith strategy and resourcing for regional faith forums had been given by the forums.

Guidelines to support development workers in local inter faith organisations

The Inter Faith Network is working with the Community Development Foundation (CDF) to develop some short, web-based, guidelines to support development workers in local inter faith organisations as well as those hiring and supporting these.

Most local inter faith bodies continue to be run by their members on a voluntary basis. However, there is a growing trend towards appointing a development worker to take forward increasingly wide ranging programmes. This received a boost with the Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund (administered by CDF) which across the last two years enabled a number of groups to employ such a worker for the first time.

Development workers coming new to the field of inter faith work find that although there is continuity with community development work in other fields, inter faith work has some very distinctive features and particular challenges. In response to suggestions from development workers and also from inter faith organisations looking to create development posts and manage workers for the first time, the Inter Faith Network and the Community Development Foundation are undertaking a joint project to develop some short web based guidelines on these issues.

A working group was formed in the autumn to advise on process, with membership reflecting the Inter Faith Network's local and regional membership and development workers. As part of this project a joint consultation meeting, organised by the Network and CDF, took place in Sandwell, West Midlands on 11 February. 35 development workers and trustees from local inter faith bodies around England and Wales came together to discuss the areas the guidelines could most helpfully cover. The Scottish Inter Faith Council, which links local inter faith bodies in Scotland, was also represented at the meeting. Presentations were made by Rabbi Maurice

Michaels of Redbridge Faith Forum, Steve Sparrow of Dudley Inter Faith Network and Naila Shaukat and Taiba Yaseem of Inter Faith Forum Rotherham. For further information please contact Stella Opoku-Owusu at stella.opoku-owusu@interfaith.org.uk

New course on inter faith work at LSJS

As a result of a joint venture of the London School of Jewish Studies, the Office of the Chief Rabbi and the United Synagogue a six week course was held at LSJS during the Autumn looking at a range of issues connected with inter faith dialogue and living in multi faith society.

Conference for imams and ministers

The Christian Muslim Forum held a conference for imams and ministers on 28 and 29 November at High Leigh Christian Conference Centre, Broxbourne, with the theme of 'Spiritual Leadership'. The programme included scripture studies, leadership workshops, a film screening of The Imam and the Pastor, and presentations and workshops.

The Joseph Interfaith Foundation

The Joseph Interfaith Foundation held a meeting on 6 December at the University of Manchester on 'Textual Encounters; How to move forward' and also explored how to move towards integrated citizenship of a cohesive and multi faith society by understanding the positive and negative perceptions of the 'other' in religious texts.

Inter faith service for peace

World Congress of Faiths held an inter faith service for peace on 28 October at Golders Green Unitarian Church, Hoop Lane, Golders Green. There were representatives of the world faiths and a speaker from Neve Shalom – Wahat al-Salam (Oasis of Peace), which is a village, jointly established by Jewish and Palestinian Arab citizens of Israel, that is engaged in educational work for peace, equality and understanding between the two peoples. Funds raised on the day went towards the School for Peace at Neve Shalom – Wahat al-Salam.

Week of Prayer for World Peace

This year's event for the Week of Prayer for World Peace took place on 21 October at Global Co-operation House in Brent, London (the International Centre of the Brahma Kumaris World Spiritual University (UK)). For over 30 years, following its inauguration on 19th October 1974 in Westminster Abbey, people of all faiths have honoured this special week by coming together to pray for peace in different locations. The committee and the sponsoring body include members of the Baha'i, Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jain, Jewish, Muslim, Sikh and Zoroastrian faiths.

One World Week: 21–28 October 2007

One World Week (OWW) is an annual opportunity for people from diverse backgrounds to come together to learn about global justice, to spread that learning and to use it to take action for justice locally and globally. OWW has recently broadened its approach formally to include people from all backgrounds and faiths. As part of One World Week 2007, a new website was launched reflecting OWW's new approach to include people from all backgrounds and faiths. The Inter Faith Network helped One World Week in this development with information and guidelines for organising inter faith activities during the week. The 'Resources' page of One World Week's website provides information on different types of inter faith activities, including faith trails and events involving young people.

The theme for One World Week 2007 was "All Together Now", and events took place from 21 to 28 October 2007. Events happened in many areas around the country. Two examples are an event held by West Wiltshire Interfaith Group on 21 October which looked at issues of respect and living in harmony and discussed justice and economic prosperity in the global world; and an inter faith walk on 28 October organised jointly with the Portsmouth Interfaith Forum, Interfusion, Portsmouth Racial Equality Network, WDM, Portsmouth Climate Action Network and Portsmouth City Council, which started in Somerstown and ended in Southsea Community Centre, visiting various places of worship and hearing what different faiths had to say about caring for the world.

One World Week's 2008 theme is "Growing Together", with a focus on human rights in relation to climate change, fair-trade, poverty and the millennium goals, while stressing the Ubuntu concept of responsibility for one another.

Islam Awareness Week launch

Islam Awareness Week (IAW) was launched on 16 November at The British Library at an event with an inter faith dimension. This year's theme was 'One World, Our Children, Our Future'. The IAW web page for schools was launched at the event. The webpage will enable teachers and students can download basic information about Islam and Muslims. Speakers at the event included IAW National Coordinator Tahmina Saleem, Heather Norman, Head of Public Regional Marketing at The British Library, Dr Zahoor Qurashi, President of the Islamic Society of Britain, Sir Sigmund Sternberg, Chair of the Three Faiths Forum, and Ruth Watson from the children's project Hamara. Denise Chaplin, the Chair of NASACRE, held an afternoon workshop.

INTERVIEW WITH AVIVA DAUTCH

The Board of Deputies has, across the last two years, been developing a broad programme of work in the inter faith field, as its Interfaith Officer, Aviva Dautch, explains.

Q First, Aviva, can you tell us a bit about the Board of Deputies of British Jews?

The Board of Deputies is the democratically elected national representative body of the British Jewish community, whose welfare it exists to protect and promote on a cross-community basis. It was established in 1760 when seven Deputies were appointed by the elders of the Spanish and Portuguese Congregations to form a standing committee to pay homage to George III on his accession to the throne. In the 1830s it received official recognition from Parliament. Parliament had no sitting Jewish members until the second half of the nineteenth century so the Board played an important political role.

Today the Board is constituted of 300 Deputies elected by synagogue congregations (of several different denominations including the United Synagogue and regional Orthodox synagogues, the Sephardi Spanish and Portuguese congregations, the Assembly of Masorti Synagogues, the Movement for Reform Judaism and the Liberal Movement) and other communal and cross-communal organisations. The Board continues to represent the perspective of the Jewish community to Government, as well as working on policy, research, education and civil society issues which affect British Jews.

Q How did the Board of Deputies get involved in inter faith work?

The first national inter faith organisation in the UK was the Council of Christians and Jews. This was formed in 1942 as a response to the Holocaust. Through involvement with CCJ the British Jewish community has been engaged in inter faith work for a long time. The Board of Deputies has been a member body of the Inter Faith Network for the UK since that was founded in 1987. In 2005, the Board decided to formalise and extend its engagement in inter faith issues by creating a staff position. Miriam Kaye was the first Interfaith Officer and when she left to work for the Three Faiths Forum, I took over the role. I had worked for the Board previously as part of the education team so my appointment has enabled the inter faith and education departments to work together with a particular focus on projects to encourage cohesion in schools, Further Education and Higher Education.

Q What kind of inter faith projects is the Board taking forward?

Thanks to the support of all the synagogue movements who are members of the Board, as well as the Office of the Chief Rabbi, we are carrying out a piece of research on Jewish involvement in inter faith activities. We have sent questionnaires to all the synagogues, youth and cultural organisations; held focus groups for students, grassroots activists and community leaders; done an audit of articles in the Jewish press; and are now in the process of writing up our findings for publication this summer. We think it's important to map what is already happening and find out what people on the ground need so that we can then help them in the most appropriate way.

Many synagogues are already participating in inter faith work. The Masorti, Reform and Liberal movements have been involved in dialogue for a number of years and, under the aegis of the Chief Rabbi, the London School of Jewish Studies are running training seminars for orthodox Jews who wish to engage in inter faith activities. The Board has also received an Faith Communities Capacity Building Fund grant to expand its regional infrastructure and run regional training seminars and dialogue days

On the education front, we've recently launched 'Shared Futures', a schools-linking programme to run joint activities between Jewish faith schools and schools for students of other faiths and in the process of appointing a Muslim Schools Advisor to work with us to help facilitate the links. We also run the Jewish Way of Life Exhibition which travels around the country to schools, libraries and museums providing opportunities for people in local communities to meet and learn more about their Jewish neighbours and encourage them to interact.

There is an amazing amount going on – as there is now on the inter faith front in the UK generally!

PEOPLE AND PLACES

New Year's Honours

The following individuals whose work includes engagement with inter faith and multi faith issues received awards in the New Year's Honours List. Kiran Bali, JP, Director, of the Yorkshire and Humber Faiths Forum, received an OBE for her services to community relations in West Yorkshire; Revd David Coffey, President, Baptist World Alliance, received an OBE for services to inter faith relations; Moulana M Shahid Raza, General Secretary of the Imams and Mosques Council, Head Imam of Leicester Central Mosque and a member of the Inter Faith Network's Executive Committee was awarded an OBE for his services to the Muslim community in Leicester; Revd Donald Reeves, a former rector of St James' Piccadilly in London, received an MBE for his services to inter faith work; and Revd David Wilkes, Chaplain General of HM Land Forces, was made a Commander of the Order of the Bath.

Revd Dr David Cornick

Revd Dr David Cornick has been appointed General Secretary of Churches Together in England. He has been General Secretary of the United Reformed Church since 2001. Prior to that he was Principal of Westminster College, Cambridge, one of the United Reformed Church's ministerial training colleges, and this included a period as Vice-President of the Cambridge Theological Federation. He will take up the appointment in April after the current General Secretary, Revd Bill Snelson retires.

Christian-Muslim Forum

Dr Musharraf Hussain and Rt Revd Richard Cheetham, Bishop of Kingston, have recently become the Chair and Vice-Chair, respectively, of the Christian-Muslim Forum.

Steven Longden has been appointed as the new Muslim Director of Programmes and Project Development for the Christian Muslim Forum and will work alongside the Christian Director of Management and Communication, Julian Bond.

New role for Dr Maureen Sier

In August 2007 Dr Maureen Sier (of the Scottish Interfaith Council) began a 2 year secondment with the Scottish Government. The key remit of the secondment is to work with the local inter faith groups of Scotland in strengthening inter faith relations at a local level. It is also hoped that during the period of the secondment a Scottish Government Strategy for inter faith development will be put in place. Dr Sier will be working closely with the Equality Unit of the Scottish Government, the Scottish Inter Faith Council and local inter faith groups in Scotland during her secondment.

Changing faces at Scottish Inter Faith Council

In October Dianna Wolfson stood down after three years as Convenor of the Scottish Inter Faith Council. Dr Salah Beltagui serves as Convener for the next three years, Carrie Varjavandi and Frances Hume have been appointed, on a job share basis, as Development and Education Officers for the Scottish Inter Faith Council during the period of Maureen's secondment to the Scottish Government. Aside from generic work to support the SIFC office, Frances Hume's remit is focussed on young people and Carrie Varjavandi has responsibility for working with women.

OBITUARIES

Maryam Badawi

Mrs Maryam Badawi died on 1 February. A chartered educational psychologist with wide knowledge of Muslim societies in Singapore, Malaysia, Nigeria and the UK, she had lectured and worked in educational institutions from universities in the Far East and West Africa to the Schools Psychological Service in the Inner London Education Authority (ILEA). Brought up in a family which had wide contact with people of many faiths and origins, she had latterly helped her late husband, Sheikh Dr Zaki Badawi, in his work as Principal of the Muslim College in London. She was, like her late husband, very much involved in the work of the Three Faiths Forum and, after his death, served as a member of its Advisory Board.

Lalage Fair

Mrs Lalage Fair, a longstanding promoter of local inter faith work in the Salisbury area, died in October. Contributions raised at her funeral were kindly donated to the Inter Faith Network.

Brother Daniel Faivre

The founder of Westminster Interfaith, Brother Daniel Faivre died on 10 September. A funeral service was held at St Anselm's Catholic Church, The Green, Southall on 17 September and a memorial service on 25 November at Westminster Cathedral Hall. Both were attended by his friends of many faiths as well as by members of the Catholic community of St Gabriel to which Brother Daniel belonged.

He founded Westminster Interfaith, a Roman Catholic initiative, in 1986 with the support of Rt Revd Gerald Mahon. Cardinal Basil Hume made Westminster Interfaith an agency of the diocese in the early 1990s. Brother Daniel was an adviser to the Bishops' Conference in England and Wales on inter faith relations and for many years a member of the Committee for other Faiths. He made the teachings of the Vatican Council II on inter faith dialogue readily accessible to people in the diocese and nationally. He authored a number of books on inter faith matters, on prayer, liturgy and multi faith services, including Transcendence, Prayer of People of Faith and Resources for Multifaith Celebrations. He also pioneered the annual multi faith Pilgrimage for Peace in London which is today in its 23rd year, as well as leading multi faith delegations to Rome to meet Pope John Paul II.

Jodie Higgs

Jody Higgs, Honorary President of the Edinburgh Inter Faith Association died on 3 February.

She was a founder member of the Association when it came into being in 1986, serving as a Buddhist representative and for a period as its Co-Convenor. She also served as the EIFA representative on the Scottish Inter-Faith Council.

Father Gordian Marshall OP

A pioneer of inter faith work in Scotland, Father Gordian Marshall, died on 14 December aged 69. He was a member of the Dominican order. Having studied philosophy and theology he went on to teach, then to work in Leicester, as chaplain to the university. In 1990 he was assigned, as superior, to the Dominican house in Glasgow. There he taught religious studies at St Andrew's College, Bearsden, and later at the department of Religious Education at the University of Glasgow, from which he retired recently. In Scotland he served on the Churches' Agency for Interfaith Relations, the Scottish Inter Faith Council (which he helped establish), Action of Churches Together in Scotland, and the Council of Religious Superiors in Scotland. For much of his life Father Gordian was involved with inter faith dialogue, initially with the Council of Jews and Christians, and then with the Council of Christians, Jews and Muslims. Until recently he attended and lectured at the annual conference of Christians, Jews and Muslims at Benendorf in Germany; his knowledge of the Hebrew Scriptures and the Qur'an enabled him to make important contributions to discussion and debate. In 2005 the Dominican community moved to St Columba's Parish, Woodside, Glasgow, and it was there that Father Gordian died.

Sidney Shipton OBE

Sidney Shipton, Co-ordinator of the Three Faiths Forum since it began in 1997, died on 11 January, aged 78. He was buried in Israel and a memorial service was held at the New North London Synagogue on 19 February.

Three Faiths Forum's Co-Founder Sir Sigmund Sternberg paid tribute to his long-time colleague, saying: "Sidney Shipton's passing is a great loss for the whole world of inter faith endeavour. Whether at home or abroad – he travelled extensively – he was an ambassador for good relations between the faith communities, establishing dialogue groups wherever the opportunity presented itself. He was tireless and never spared himself, especially in the promotion of friendship with the Muslim community.”

Sidney Shipton was awarded an OBE in 2004 for services to inter faith work. He was a member of the Council of the Wyndham Place Charlemagne Trust, of the Executive of United Religions Initiative and of the Royal Institute for International Affairs (Chatham House). At various times he held executive positions in his local United Nations Association branch, and in the London Civic Forum, Business Against Drugs, the Board of Deputies of British Jews, and the Jewish fraternal organisation B'nai Brith.

Tom Gulliver

Tom Gulliver died on 1 December aged 87. He had been elected as a Vice-President of the World Congress of Faiths earlier in 2007. He made a significant contribution, particularly after his retirement from ToCH, (for which he worked after a career in the civil service), to inter faith work in this country.

He was a member of the Religious Society of Friends (Quakers) and was very active in inter faith work on their behalf. He was a member of the WCF Executive Committee for many years and in the late 1980s was the organisation's General Secretary. He represented WCF in the planning of the Inter Faith Network for the UK and served on the Network's Executive Committee from 1987 to 1990.

He had a particular interest in the relationship between the Christian and Buddhist traditions and in the mid 1980s he launched, and facilitated for around 15 years, a 'by invitation' Buddhist-Christian dialogue group which was valued greatly by all those who attended its meetings.

Dr L M Singhvi

Dr L M Singhvi, India's longest serving High Commissioner to the United Kingdom (from early 1991 to the end of 1997) died on 6 October aged 76.

Dr Singhvi was a constitutional expert and supporter of the secular tradition in the Indian Constitution. Among his writings were Towards Global Togetherness, Democracy and the Rule of the Law, Freedom on trial, and Jurisprudence of Non-Violence. He was a strong supporter of inter faith work. He was an Honorary Graduate at the University of Leicester where he inaugurated the Dr L M Singhvi Lecture Series on Pluralism.

Dr Singhvi was a member of the Jain tradition and the Institute of Jainology, in association with Bharatiya Vidhya Bhavan, held a condolence and prayer meeting in London in his memory on 22 October.

Rabbi Leonard Tann

Birmingham Hebrew Congregation's Chief Minister for nearly 20 years, Rabbi Leonard Tann, died aged 62 on 12 November. He was involved with many church groups and faith leaders through his passion for inter-faith work. The day after the attacks in the US on September 11 2001, Rabbi Tann visited the Birmingham Central Mosque to visit its leaders as a pledge of solidarity in response to the verbal attacks and daubing it had received. Other faith leaders came as well and out of this emerged the Birmingham Faith Leaders Group, which now has regular meetings. Rabbi Tann received an honorary doctorate from Birmingham's Aston University in July, 2005 in recognition of his inter faith work in Birmingham.

REGIONAL AND LOCAL UPDATES FROM SCOTLAND, NORTHERN IRELAND, WALES AND ENGLAND

This section contains updates on a range of regional and local activities within each of the nations of the UK.

SCOTLAND

Edinburgh

In November the Edinburgh Inter Faith Association ran a series of workshops for the 'Identity Projects' for Muslim and Sikh men aimed at exploring what it means to be young, male, Muslim or Sikh and living in Scotland. Participants were encouraged to use photography, film, sound, the internet and other means to explore questions of identity. They also had the opportunity to meet and talk with members of the Scottish Parliament, Edinburgh city councillors and council officials. The work created by those taking part in the workshops is going to be displayed in a public exhibition. There will also be a booklet created as part of the project to help other people understand more about what life is like for young Muslim and Sikh men.

Cardinal Keith O'Brien, visited Annandale Street Mosque on 2 December as part of a series of events marking Edinburgh Inter Faith Week. Some other Inter Faith Week events in Edinburgh included 'The Imam and the Bishop: A Muslim Christian Dialogue and A Meeting of Hearts and Mind' meeting on 5 December in St John's Church, Princes Street. This meeting involved Rt Revd Brian Smith, the Episcopal Bishop of Edinburgh, in conversation with Shaykh Ibrahim Mogra, an Imam from Leicester and Chair of the Inter Faith Committee of the Muslim Council of Britain.

Fife

Fife Interfaith Group celebrated Scottish Interfaith Week with an exhibition in the atrium of Adam Smith College. The exhibition had an environmental theme which highlighted the respect which all faiths share for the earth. Many of the faiths practised in Fife took part in the exhibition and representatives from different faiths were on hand to provide information and answer questions on the links between religious and environmental issues. During the week a draw was held of the environmental quiz organised by the Fife Interfaith Group for Fife schools.

Glasgow

'Faith to Faith' is the title of a series of meetings being held by St Mungo Museum in Glasgow. The first event was held on 18 November and the meetings run through until June. 'Faith to Faith' provides an opportunity to listen, debate and discuss issues relating to religion in Scotland today. The first meeting was held to mark Islam Awareness Week. It explored a Muslim perspective and looked at understanding the Shia-Sunni divide. For more details about future meetings visit www.glasgowmuseums.com

North Lanarkshire

An inter faith food celebration took place in November in Old Monkland Community Centre organised by the Abrahamic Roots Group and North Lanarkshire Muslim Women and Family Alliance. Christian and Muslim women shared the afternoon in an effort to better understand each others beliefs and traditions.

Shetland

During Scottish Interfaith Week at the end of November, Shetland Inter Faith held a civic reception, breaking new ground and heightening the profile of inter faith work in that area.

WALES

Swansea

Interfaith Swansea held a meeting on 18 February at St Benedict's Roman Catholic Church, Llythrid Avenue, Swansea. This was hosted by the Catholic community and there was a presentation from members.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Northern Ireland Inter-Faith Forum hosts 'Faiths and Music' event

The Northern Ireland Inter-Faith Forum held a Forum meeting on the evening of 27 November at the Belfast Indian Community Centre. The event focused on the theme of 'Faiths and Music' and included examples of music from different traditions. There were contributions from members of the local Hindu mandir and from members of the Muslim community, a Baha'i choir and a choir from St Peter's Cathedral. Those who attended the meeting had the opportunity to explore and learn about the roles that music plays in various faith traditions.

ENGLAND

EAST

East of England Faiths Council

East of England Faiths Council (EEFC) held its quarterly Council meeting on 12 December at St John's Innovation Centre, Cambridge. Topics on the agenda included discussion and information exchange about reports on the business of the East of England Regional Assembly; a presentation on the work of the Equalities and Human Rights Commission in the region by its Regional Director James Doubleday; faith representation on Local Strategic Partnerships; and engaging faith groups in consultation on the Environment Agency's Committees. There was also a report on an employment and skills pilot project. At the meeting Rabbi Daniela Thau from Bedford Council of Faiths gave a presentation about a young people's event held on 5 November called 'Mind the Gap' in which five young people were invited to speak on the theme 'How young people's approaches to faith differ from those of their parents', in which young people from Hindu, Buddhist and Baha'i faiths had participated.

Cambridge

Cambridge Inter-Faith Group held a seventh Civic Celebration of Community on 18 November at the Guildhall, Cambridge. This year's celebration theme was called 'The Meaning of Life'. It was sponsored by Cambridge City Council Community Development. Mayor Jenny Bailey gave a welcome address. There were short contributions from various Cambridge faith groups, including poetry and music, followed by refreshments and a chance to socialise. The event was to encourage faith groups to remember and speak about values and to celebrate diversity. The civic celebrations in Cambridge aim to bring members of different faith groups together in the spirit of co-operation and mutual acceptance.

Luton

Luton Council of Faiths, in conjunction with Grassroots (a Christian ecumenical organisation), held a One World Week faith and citizenship evening on 27 October. There was a musical performance by Berakah at Sir Ian Dixon Theatre, University of Bedfordshire, Park Square in Luton. Berakah is an Arabic and Hebrew word meaning 'blessing of grace'. The band members of the group are from the Jewish, Muslim and Christian faith traditions.

On November 9, members of different faith communities from Luton Council of Faiths and Grassroots made two visits to join in Diwali celebrations. They visited the Guru Ravidassia Bhawan in Cardigan Street and then the Hindu Mandir Cen-Sanatan, in Hereford Road. Greetings were given by the visitors to their hosts. At the Mandir, young children enacted the story of the Ramayana, telling the story of Rama's return from exile to the kingdom after defeating king Ravana, which underlies the Diwali celebrations.

Young people in Luton were invited to join in an event on 1 December to SPEAKOUT at a Luton Council Of Faiths (LCOF) event held in the town hall to explore the subjects of identity, citizenship, diversity, faith, and human values amongst young people. The event, funded by Luton Borough Council's Stronger Communities, aimed to explore differences, opinions and break down barriers between groups of young people aged from 13 to 19 years of age. More than 60 young people attended the event. Debates that were held focused on themes that young people had chosen, which included global and local effects, different but united; inspiration and identity and views and values.

Peterborough

Young people from faith communities were the focus for Peterborough Inter Faith Council's celebration of UN Day with a Praying for Peace Together event on 15 November. Children and young people of all ages from the Hindu, Sikh, Muslim, Buddhist, Christian and Jewish faith communities participated in various activities including singing hymns, readings from the Guru Granth Sahib, as well as from the Hebrew Scriptures and the Qur'an. There were also prayers said for world peace including a mantra, the prayer of Saint Francis of Assisi, and a supplication was made by Muslim students. The event was held at Peterborough Cathedral and was attended by members of various faith traditions. The compère was Canon Jonathan Baker, and the Dean of Peterborough Cathedral, the Very Revd Charles Taylor, welcomed those present and opened the programme. The United Nations Association was also represented by Mrs Devinder Kaur-Suali. A candle was lit to demonstrate the coming together of different faiths to pray for world peace. The closing prayer was read by all participants and Jaspal Singh, Chairman of Peterborough Inter Faith Council gave the vote of thanks.

Watford

Watford Interfaith Association (WIA) celebrated its 30th anniversary at the Week of Prayer for World Peace gathering at Friends Meeting House, Church Road on 28 October. Members of nine different faiths lit candles at the event. Short speeches were given by special guests Mayor Dorothy Thornhill and Lord Tom McNally and there was a sit-down buffet. On 28 November WIA explored the subject of faiths' perspectives on family values with a panel of four speakers from different faith traditions.

North West

Faiths4Change is a new regional multi-faith environmental transformation project, to be carried out in urban areas within Merseyside, Manchester, Burnley and Preston. It has been funded for three years with just over £1 million, principally by the Northwest Regional Development Agency (NWDA), the Environment Agency and local authorities and is supported by faith communities in the region.

Faiths4Change aims to support and enable people to work together to develop their ideas to transform their neighbourhoods and enhance their own skills. It is based on learning from the successful, Merseyside-based pilot project Operation EDEN that was inspired by the Anglican Bishop of Liverpool, the Rt Revd James Jones. Operation EDEN encouraged volunteers from faith communities to work in partnership with other local residents to create small scale environmental projects that transformed Merseyside communities.

Bolton

In Bolton a group from St Catherine's Church, in Highfield Road, Farnworth took part on 8 January in a 'faith trail', visiting the Veda Mandir in Thomas Holden Street and to the Zakariyya Central Masjid, in Peace Street. ### Liverpool

Liverpool Community Spirit (LCS) offers adult learner courses called Community Spirit for community members and those from voluntary organisations in Liverpool. These courses are a longer version of Liverpool Community Spirit's Faith Diversity Training that explores the six major world faiths including Buddhism, Christianity, Hinduism, Islam, Judaism and Sikhism. Participants take part in interactive classroom sessions about each faith, which includes tasting traditional foods and is followed by a visit to a place of worship or an opportunity for the group to meet with a member of that faith and have a discussion. The Faith Diversity training was last held in the autumn, with one session exploring the Abrahamic faiths and another exploring Sikhism, Hinduism and Buddhism. The training was held at the conference facilities of the Kuumba Imani Millennium Centre in the Millennium Centre and NOVAS. Participants visited the Princes Road Synagogue and the Ar Rahma Mosque both in Toxteth. A classroom discussion with a member of the Sikh community also took place, which included a demonstration in turban tying. This year LCS plans to run five Community Spirit courses and to has been asked to deliver bespoke in-house Faith Diversity Training to organisations in the city.

A consultation meeting was held 15 November in Oxford Town Hall to discuss the setting up of an Oxford Council of Faiths. David Paterson, a steering group member, welcomed the participants from different faith communities to the meeting which was chaired by the Sheriff of Oxford, Councillor Mary Clarkson. Brief talks were given by Councillor Altaf Khan, the Cabinet Member for Safer City, and Urmi Raval, Local and Regional Project Officer from the Inter Faith Network. Oxford Council’s Community Cohesion Officer, Nisha Prakash, who has been working with the steering group on the development of Oxford Council of Faiths for the last 18 months, gave a presentation about the work that has been carried out so far. This was followed by focus group discussions looking aspects of setting the council of faiths.

The next steps for the steering group, with the support of the council, will be looking at the election and nomination of members; working on the constitution or terms of reference; and fundraising to get Oxford Council of Faiths launched. Further information can be obtained by contacting Nisha Prakash Nprakash@oxford.gov.uk or by telephoning 01865 252373.

Dispute over plan for broadcast call to prayer

A dispute has broken out over a plan by Oxford Central Mosque to seek permission from the local council to broadcast a two minute adhan, the traditional Muslim call to prayer, through loudspeakers in the minaret. Initially there were suggestions that the request would be for the call to prayer to be made three times a day, but Imam Munir Christi subsequently said that the intention was for it to be broadcast once a week at the time of jummah prayer on Friday lunchtimes.

Opinion in Oxford is divided. The Anglican Bishop of Oxford, Rt Revd John Pritchard, called for tolerance urging people to “enjoy our community diversity” and to be “as respectful to others as you would hope they would be to you”. He said “I believe we have good relationships with the Muslim community here in Oxford and I am personally very happy for the mosque to call the faithful to prayer in East Oxford. Faith is a very important factor in the lives of 80 per cent of the world’s population and a public expression of that faith is both natural and reasonable.” Bishop John said practical issues over the number of times the call went out, the volume and whether a trial period would be required would need to be ironed out, but said in principle it was “entirely reasonable” proposal.

However, Rev Charles Cleverly, Rector of St Aldate’s Church in Oxford, called on the mosque to drop its plans, while saying that he welcomed Muslims in Oxford and hoped a local dialogue between the faiths could be established. Many others also protested at the plans.

The newly elected management committee of the Oxford Central Mosque is reported to be reviewing plans for the use of a loudspeaker. Its Secretary General, Altaf Hussain, said that the proposals had emerged “without proper consultation with our neighbours” and that this had caused “anxiety and misunderstandings”.

SOUTH WEST

Faith community representatives on local and regional strategic bodies and networks attended 'Representing Faith', a regional seminar held by Faithnetsouthwest at Albemarle Centre, Albemarle Road, Taunton on 27 February.

Bath

Work is underway to establish a Bath and North East Somerset Faith Forum. The aim of the Forum is to encourage communication between faith communities and public bodies on social and community issues. It will have a particular focus in providing faith community representatives to sit on the Local Strategic Partnership committee of Bath and North East Somerset Faith Forum Council. Members currently sitting on the steering group have had four meetings and a draft terms of reference has been developed. This fourth edition of Inter Faith Organisations in the UK: A Directory, published July 2007, lists more than 250 inter faith bodies promoting good relations. The directory is a valuable resource for all those engaged in the work of developing mutual respect, understanding and encouraging good relations between faith communities of the UK. It lists contact names, addresses, telephone numbers, websites and email addresses for 217 local, 14 regional and 25 national inter faith groups as well as brief information about the activities of each of them. Over recent years, there has been a steady increase in the establishment of local inter faith groups and this year alone, there are 27 new additions among those listed in the directory. There are also 11 other new entries, among them academic centres focusing on inter faith relations which is a category of listing new to this edition.

EUROPE AND INTERNATIONAL

Inter Faith Update has a primary focus on the UK but carries information on selected European and international events or projects with a particular bearing on the work of inter faith organisations in the UK.

EUROPE

European Fundamental Rights Agency

In March 2007 a new European Union Fundamental Rights Agency was launched in order to provide the European community and its member states, when implementing community law, with assistance and expertise relating to fundamental rights.

The FRA succeeds the European Monitoring Centre on Racism and Xenophobia (EUMC) but within its enlarged scope, will continue with its work on racism, xenophobia, anti-Semitism and related intolerance issues. The new agency will build on the EUMC's experience of data collection mechanisms and cooperation with Government and international organisations. However, its work will give more emphasis than the EUMC to two dimensions: raising public awareness and cooperation with civil society.

The European Commission Against Racism and Intolerance which operates within the framework of the Council of Europe is continuing its work. Mr Mohammed Aziz, a Muslim from the UK active in the inter faith field, has recently been elected as its new Chairman.

INTERNATIONAL

The fifth meeting of the International Interreligious Organisations Network was held from 26 to 28 November in Nuneham Courtenay near Oxford. The meeting was attended by delegates from the United States, Australia, India and Europe, representing the Council for the Parliament for the World Religions; the International Association for Religious Freedom; the North American Inter Faith Network; the Temple of Understanding (New York); the World Congress of Faiths (UK based), the World Federation of Interreligious Councils (India); and the International Interfaith Centre (Oxford). A representative from the Inter Faith Network for the UK was in attendance.

The topics discussed at the conference included recent developments in inter faith work at the United Nations; plans for the meeting in Melbourne in 2009 of the next Parliament of the World's Religions; inter faith work with young people; overcoming difficulties in inter faith communications; how to respond to hateful speeches and violent action; and future plans for the IION itself, including the issue of participation in it by regional and national 'networks'.

IION is serviced by the International Interfaith Centre based in Oxford

Religions for Peace International

The Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Rowan Williams, has become a Co-President of Religions for Peace. Dr Williams joins a World Council comprising eminent religious leaders representing the world's diverse faith communities to lead the global Religions for Peace network, which seeks "to advance just and harmonious societies by working to stop war, end poverty and protect the earth".

2009 Parliament of the World's Religions

The Council for a Parliament of the World's Religions, based in Chicago, has announced that the next Parliament will be held from 3 to 9 December 2009 in Melbourne, Australia. Full details of the plans will be found at www.parliamentofreligions2009.org. The last Parliament was held in Barcelona in 2004.

'A Common Word'

'A Common Word Between Us and You', an open letter signed by 138 leading Muslim scholars, clerics, and intellectuals from around the world, was sent on 13 October to Pope Benedict XVI, Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Rowan Williams, twenty five other named Christian leaders and to "leaders of Christian Churches everywhere. The final form of the letter was presented at a conference in September 2007 held under the theme of "Love in the Quran", by the Royal Academy of The Royal Aal al-Bayt Institute for Islamic Thought in Jordan, under the Patronage of HM King Abdullah II. The letter identifies some common ground between Christianity and Islam and seeks to promote world peace through embracing two theological commitments made by Muslims and Christians rooted in the teaching "love of the One God" "and love of the neighbour" The letter says that it is time that Muslims and Christians recognised the similarities between them because world peace hinges on greater understanding between the two faiths.

The letter followed an earlier response to Pope Benedict XVI's 12 September 2006 lecture at the University of Regensburg

Muslim scholars and leaders call for action to improve Muslim-Jewish Relations

Muslim religious scholars and Muslim leaders from around the world have issued a statement to the world's Jewish Community. The letter describes itself as a call "in the face of the negative and destructive tensions in the Middle East" ... "to positive and constructive action that aims to improve Muslim-Jewish relations". It contends that the community are faced not with a "clash of civilizations" but with a "clash of misunderstandings". It closes with a call for "wider dialogue between all faiths and communities, including the non-Abrahmic ones". The initiative behind the statement came from the Muslim scholars of the Centre for the Study of Muslim – Jewish Relations (CMJR), Cambridge, Dr Amineh Hoti (Director) and Sheikh Michael Mumisa (Lecturer). The letter was formally launched following the Centre's annual Stone-Ashdown lecture given by Professor Tariq Ramadan on 25 February.

Inter faith issues at the UN

On 4 and 5 October last year, in pursuance of earlier resolutions (A/RES/61/221) on “Promotion of interreligious and intercultural dialogue, understanding and cooperation for peace”, the General Assembly undertook its first ever formal, High-Level Dialogue on issues of interreligious and intercultural understanding and cooperation for peace, including freedom of religion and belief and the need for respect for a diversity of religions and cultures. The High-level Dialogue was opened by the President of the General Assembly on 4 October in the General Assembly Hall and the Secretary-General, Ban Ki-Moon, addressed the meeting. The informal interactive hearing with civil society representatives held in conjunction with this High-level Dialogue provided a platform for an exchange of views among Member States and civil society, including NGOs and the private sector. In the course of this, leading academics, religious leaders and other civil society representatives offered their reflections on the challenges and best practices of interreligious and intercultural cooperation.

The High Representative of the Secretary-General for the Alliance of Civilisation, Jorge Sampaio, addressed the hearing and representatives of 74 members contributed to it during the two days. It was in 2006, responding to proposals from Spain and Turkey, that the UN Secretary General commissioned a high-level study group that resulted in the formation of the Alliance of Civilisations, aiming to reduce cross cultural polarisation between Islam and the West and Jorge Sampaio, a former President of Portugal, was invited to oversee this initiative. He has subsequently set out the challenges facing it as being how to: live together in a globalizing world; avoid clashes of civilization; bridge cultural and religious fault lines that divide society; improve mutual respect and understanding between different communities and societies.

Commonwealth Foundation report launched

Two years ago when Commonwealth Heads of Governments met in Malta they commissioned work “to explore initiatives to promote mutual understanding and respect among all faiths and communities in the Commonwealth.”

Since then the Commonwealth Foundation has been working with faith organisations to promote partnerships that help use mutual respect and understanding as a basis for collaboration to achieve effective development. A number of activities have been taking place, enabling examination of the role that faith-based organisations and co-operation between different faith communities can play in delivering effective development. Many of these are documented in a recent Commonwealth Foundation report, Engaging with Faith, prepared for the 2007 Commonwealth People’s Forum and Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (CHOGM).

The report, launched on 23 November, concludes that there is a need to understand and engage with faith communities, and make connections between faith communities and non-faith structures to promote successful development. It recommends in particular that strategies be developed to include the marginalised, particularly young people and women and a move beyond dialogues between religious leaders to build direct links and partnerships between communities which can be seen to lead to improvements in people’s lives.

The report was endorsed by the Commonwealth People’s Forum in their Kampala Civil Society Statement to CHOGM, when they urged Commonwealth governments to commit to implementing its recommendations and to support a programme of practical inter faith exchange and co-operation. It can be downloaded at http://www.commonwealthfoundation.com/uploads/documents/faithreport\_final.pdf

The Commonwealth Foundation’s work has been carried out alongside, and complementary to, research carried out by the Commonwealth’s High Level Commission on Respect and Understanding, whose report Civil Paths to Peace, prior to its presentation at the CHOGM in Kampala, was launched on 9 November, at Marlborough House in London. See www.thecommonwealth.org for further information. The Inter Faith Network made a submission to the Commonwealth Foundation on patterns of inter faith activity in the UK.

3 April–8 May, London. Cardinal's Lectures – six public lectures on faith and life in Britain. What is the role of Christianity in a multi-cultural Britain and how can we collaborate with our neighbours of other religions for the common good? Are there outstanding examples from history which might illustrate the importance of faith in public life and the role of Parliament? There are many challenges that face religious communities in presenting their message in the secular society and the role of religion in the media is an important aspect of our life today. There is also the wider role Britain plays in world politics and how faith and culture will influence peace-building and conflict resolution at a global level. A series of distinguished speakers address these questions and themes on Thursdays at 7pm from 3 April to 8 May at Westminster Cathedral. Mark Thompson, Director General of the BBC (10 April); Most Rev and Rt Hon Dr Rowan Williams (17 April); William Hague MP (24 April); Rabbi Dame Julia Neuberger (1 May); and Cardinal Cormac Murphy-O'Connor (8 May). In collaboration with the Faith and Citizenship Programme, London Metropolitan University and Cambridge University's Interfaith Programme, the Forum is organising a conference on the theme of faith and citizenship. This conference will explore the possibility that in contemporary European cities, and most particularly London, active religious communities and citizenship are mutually supportive. This conference will be divided into three sections. The first will explore the academic debate concerning the historical, theological and philosophical relationship between faith and citizenship. The second will look at education and the relationship between the two in schools. The third will look at political action and most particularly community organising as a means of reconciling faith and citizenship. For further details contact: Clare Keefe email c.keefe@londonmet.ac.uk tel. 0207 320 1161

Special 'weeks' and 'days'

10–17 March Commonwealth Week Festival "A Festival of Culture and Celebration from the Contemporary Commonwealth" is a new initiative from the Friends of the Commonwealth, in association with the Commonwealth Foundation. The festival will draw together events with a Commonwealth connection under a common Commonwealth Week brand, thus creating a virtual festival, mostly by offering a comprehensive listings service, which will market activities to diverse communities and networks, including wide-ranging Commonwealth networks, in the hope that this will encourage increased and broad participation in events. Events will be displayed on interactive web pages, to be launched in early 2008, emails, posters and flyers. If you are planning a suitable event, please get in touch with Emma D'Costa, e.dcosta@commonwealth.int.

RESOURCES

Cities in Transition

The report has recently been published of the Global Exchange Forum meeting held in December 2006 in Birmingham. The Forum was organised jointly by the Barrow Cadbury Trust, the Young Foundation and the German Marshall Fund of the United States. Delegates came from four of the most diverse cities in the world: Birmingham, Los Angeles, Marseille and Toronto. As the report says, the meeting was held in a context in which there are 'cities in transition' which are globally connected and where the population has rapidly changed its colour, age and origins in the last 30 years to the point where minority communities – ethnic, faith and/or cultural are becoming the majority; and in which these emerging 'plural' cities are at the forefront of negotiating the challenges of globalisation and encapsulate the key questions about migration, integration, equality and identity that are pertinent to many cities around the world. The report is available on the website of the Barrow Cadbury Trust at www.bctrust.org.uk/programmes/gex-cities-in-transition.php. Copies of it can also be obtained from the Trust at: Barrow Cadbury Trust, 25–31 Tavistock Place, London WC1H 9SF.

The Inter Faith Network

The Inter Faith Network was founded in 1987. It works with its member bodies to promote good relations between the faith communities in the UK, to combat inter religious prejudice and intolerance and to help make the UK a country marked by mutual understanding and respect between religions where all can practise their faith with integrity. The Network:

- provides information on faith and inter faith issues;
- advises on multi faith projects and inter faith issues;
- publishes materials to aid work in the religious and inter faith sectors;
- fosters inter faith co-operation on social issues;
- holds regular meetings where social and religious questions of concern to the different faith communities can be examined together;
- links 150 member organisations including: representative bodies from the different faith communities; inter faith organisations; local inter faith groups; and educational and academic bodies

Scottish Inter Faith Week – 22 to 29 November

The launch of Scottish Inter Faith Week will take place on the afternoon of Sunday 29 November at the University of Dundee from 2.30—5.30pm at the University of Dundee in the Dalhousie Building. Full details about the Week including a list of events taking place across Scotland can be found at www.scottishinterfaithcouncil.org/22.html. It is supported by local inter faith groups, the Scottish Government and Scotland's religious leaders. The theme of Scottish Inter Faith Week this year is 'A Place of Home and Welcome'.

IFN Officers' statement

Following this month's meeting of IFN's Executive Committee, the Chairs and Co-Chairs issued a statement on responding to divisive and extreme developments which can drive a wedge between communities. The full text of this can be found at www.interfaith.org.uk/newsrelease09October2009.pdf.

DfID Community linking project

IFN is part of the consortium which is delivering a Department for International Development (DfID) 'community linking project'. This will be offering funding and learning opportunities to community groups in the UK that have a link with a community group in a developing country. The first stage is a baseline survey to find out about different types of community linking already going on. Faith and inter faith groups are being encouraged to participate in the survey on this as DfID is very keen to see involvement from faith communities. So if you are involved in a community link haven't already done so, please do complete the survey at www.dfid.gov.uk/DCLP.

2009 Parliament of the Worlds Religions

The Parliament of the Worlds Religions takes place every five years and this year is taking place in Melbourne, Australia, from 3 to 9 December. Full details on the Parliament, including a list of events and details on registration can be found at www.parliamentofreligions.org/index.cfm. The IFN office has had a number of queries from bodies keen to know about other UK bodies planning to attend. If you are going, please let us know if you would like to put in touch with others attending.

The International Interfaith Centre and the World Congress of Faiths have a stall at the Parliament and is happy for it to be used as a rendez vous point for people from UK organisations.

The International Interfaith Organisations Network (IION) is inviting bodies attending the Parliament to list their programmes at the Parliament on the website www.interfaithorganisations.net Please send the information to Sandy Bharat at iic@interfaith-centre.org The IION site is a useful resource for finding out about international inter faith developments.

Inter Faith Focus: Details on work of national and regional inter faith bodies

IFN has recently published Inter Faith Focus, a full colour booklet showcasing the work of national and regional inter faith organisations in its membership. Hard copies can be ordered free of charge from the IFN office ifnet@interfaith.org.uk or a pdf can be downloaded from the IFN website at www.interfaith.org.uk/publications.

Faiths Act Fellowship

The application process for the 2009-10 Faiths Act Fellowship programme, an initiative of the Tony Blair Faith Foundation and the Interfaith Youth Core, has now closed. Thirty young leaders aged between 18-25 drawn from the different faiths from the US, UK, and Canada have been selected to mobilise young people of faith to raise awareness and resources to promote the Millennium Development Goals. In the UK, the Fellows are being hosted by two of IFN's member bodies, the St Philip's Centre in Leicester and the Christian Muslim Forum. Full details of the programme can be found at www.tonyblairfaithfoundation.org/projects/faiths-act/fellows

Assisted suicide

The Director of Public Prosecutions has recently published, as a basis for public consultation, his interim policy for prosecutors on assisted suicide. The text can be found at www.cps.gov.uk/consultations/as\_policy.html The closing date for the consultation is 16 December.

Census 2011

Following publication last December of its White Paper on arrangements for the 2011 Census in England and Wales, which it is planned to hold on Sunday 27 March 2011, the Government undertook further testing and consultation on the form of the voluntary question to be used on religious identity. The Draft Census (England and Wales) Order 2009 was laid before Parliament on 21 October (News release - <http://2011mc.census.gov.uk/index.php?module=documents&action=view&id=503>) The Government have decided to maintain the position set out in the White Paper and to use a question on religious identity which is in almost identical terms to that used in the 2001 Census. The text can be found on page 5 of this document www.ons.gov.uk/census/2011-census/2011-census-questionnaire-content/recommended-questions---religion.pdf which sets out the background to the development of the question.

BBC Trust review

The BBC Trust – the governing body of the BBC – carries out an in-depth review at least once every five years of its services. It has recently launched a review into BBC One, BBC Two, BBC Four and the BBC Red Button. The Trust has also just launched a consultation on the BBC's Editorial Guidelines in order “that the BBC's standards reflect the expectations of the public”. Full details of both the review and how you can take part in the consultation can be found at www.bbc.co.uk/bbctrust.

EHRC funding programme

Applicants to the EHRC's Strategic Funding Programme (Priority One and Priority Two) have now been informed of the outcome of their first stage application. The applications for Priority Three (legal advice) are being considered.

Council of Dharmic Faiths UK

At a meeting on the 30 March in London leaders of national faith organisations of the Buddhist, Hindu, Jain, Sikh, and Zoroastrian communities met together to facilitate the formation of the Council of Dharmic Faiths UK. The aim of the Council is to encourage friendship, goodwill, respect, equality and understanding between the Dharmic Faiths. On the basis of a shared cultural tradition, the participating faith leaders and organisations agreed to cooperate in advancing the public knowledge of these faiths and their communities in Britain, including the understanding of their teachings, traditions and practices. There will be an official launch in due course.

For more information please contact the Chair of the Council, Dr Natubhai Shah at natubhaishah@aol.com or the Secretary of the Council, Mr Ramesh Pattni at rameshpattni@hotmail.com.

Meeting God in Friend and Stranger

The Catholic Church in England and Wales has published a new teaching document on inter-religious relations entitled Meeting God in Friend and Stranger: Fostering Respect and Mutual Understanding Between the Religions. The document stresses that inter-religious dialogue is not restricted to academics but also takes place where everyday life is shared in an atmosphere of respect and openness. A copy of the document can be downloaded free from

The Government's Prevent programme

On 30 March, the Communities and Local Government Select Committee of the House of Commons published its report on Prevent. It contains a lengthy list of recommendations. In its report the Committee says that the Government's Preventing Violent Extremism programme is "a complex and sensitive agenda which has met with widely varying perceptions as to what the programme stands for and what it aims to deliver on the ground"; and that its inquiry "has shown that the current overall approach to Prevent is contentious and unlikely ever to be fully accepted in its existing form by those it is most important to engage." The Select Committee's report can be found at www.publications.parliament.uk/pa/cm/cmcomloc.htm. A background note on Prevent is available on the IFN website at www.interfaith.org.uk/briefingnotes.htm.

ELECTION RELATED NEWS

Churches election guidelines and hustings events

Churches Together in Britain and Ireland has produced a document entitled Faith in Politics: Preparing Churches for the General Election 2010, a 16-page guide to some of the key policy areas likely to be debated in the run up to polling day. This document, together with other materials on the forthcoming elections, can be found at www.ctbi.org.uk/CFH/427. They do not support a 'Church' view or party line, but aim to help people engage with a range of important issues facing the country, however they may decide to vote.

Many Churches across the UK are now working in partnership with other local faith communities to hold hustings events. The online hustings registration system and database, where you can advertise your meeting or see what is happening in your constituency, is now working, with plenty of events already entered. To search for a hustings in your constituency, go to: www.ctbi.org.uk/428. If you are interested in organising a hustings, please register your details at: www.ctbi.org.uk/444.

Hope not Hate Election pledge

The Board of Deputies of British Jews, Jewish Council for Racial Equality and Three Faiths Forum, have facilitated the issuing of the following election pledge: "With the approach of the General Election we are all too aware of those political forces who would seek to divide our country by promoting ideologies of racism and prejudice. We are immensely proud of the fundamentally British characteristics of equality, respect and fairness and of British society's uncompromising rejection of the demonisation of any group, whether religious, ethnic or otherwise. We therefore urge every British citizen to use their vote to support any party of their choice which stands opposed to the destructive politics of hatred, to vote for freedom not fear, partnerships not prejudice, and hope not hate." A list of those who have signed up to the pledge to date can be found at www.threefaithsforum.org.uk/electionpledge.html. Organisations which wish to sign up to it can email either stephen@threefaithsforum.org.uk, edie@jcore.org.uk or philip.rosenberg@bod.org.uk.

Muslim Council of Britain statement on voting

A range of leading Muslim scholars, from Islam's diverse theological traditions, have signed a joint statement saying that Muslims have an obligation to join hands with others to elect those who will seek the common good. The joint statement observes that the forthcoming General Election is an ideal opportunity for voters to reconnect and hold to account their representatives. The Muslim Council of Britain (MCB) has urged mosques to convey this message to Muslim congregations at Friday prayers until polling day. With this statement, MCB kicks off a programme of activities ahead of the General Election. While maintaining its non-partisan stand on politics, the MCB will be encouraging British Muslims to play a full part in the democratic and civic life of the country. The MCB will also highlight those public policy issues that will affect Muslims in the next few years. The Muslim Council of Britain has launched a website for the elections at www.muslimvote.org.uk.

Hindu Forum of Britain encourages Hindu community to vote

The Hindu Forum of Britain is implementing a campaign to encourage the Hindu community to engage with their prospective parliamentary candidates and to air their views before making an informed decision as to which party to vote for. As part of the campaign it is organising local hustings and distributing information through temples, community centres and other mediums to raise awareness about the importance of voting. Further information can be found at www.hinduforum.org/Default.aspx?slD=45&clD=443&ctID=43&IID=0.

Charity Commission guidance on elections

The Charity Commission has recently updated its guidance on elections and politics. This guidance is for use by charities during the period between the announcement of an election, and the date on which an election is held and applies to both national and local elections. The guidance sits alongside other requirements, such as electoral law, which apply to charities and non-charities alike. A full copy of the updated guidance on Charities and Elections can be downloaded at www.charity-commission.gov.uk/supportingcharities/elect.asp.

The Charity Commission's website says: "The independent nature of the charitable sector is of fundamental importance to society, and is greatly valued by the public. The guiding principle of charity law in terms of elections is that charities should be, and be seen to be, independent from party politics. This guidance contains legal and good practice advice to charities to help ensure that they are able both to: retain the essential quality of independence; and use their voice effectively at election times."

This brief updated guidance should be read in conjunction with the Charity Commission's more detailed guidance on the wider subject of Speaking Out: Guidance on campaigning and political activities by charities (www.charity-commission.gov.uk/publications/cc9.asp). The principles described in this continue to apply during an election period.

The Sanctuary Pledge

In the run-up to the General Election, faith groups and other organisations can ask politicians to sign the 'Sanctuary Pledge' (<http://sanctuarypledge.org.uk>). The Pledge calls on Parliamentarians to:

- Campaign responsibly, positively and sensitively in the 2010 election
- Use the term 'sanctuary' instead of 'asylum' when communicating with the public
- Support policies that will end the detention of children and families for immigration reasons
- Promote tolerance and neighbourliness between local communities
- Safeguard the long-term future of sanctuary
- Meet with the Sanctuary Pledge organisers six months after they are elected to review progress

A full list of those who have signed up to the pledge can be found at <http://sanctuarypledge.org.uk/#/supporters/4536536994>. Those wishing to be added as supporters, can contact support@sanctuarypledge.org.uk.

Inter Faith Week 2010

The second national Inter Faith Week in England and Wales is taking place from Sunday 21 to Saturday 27 November 2010. The aims of the Week are: to strengthen good inter faith relations at all levels; to increase awareness of the different and distinct faith communities in the UK, in particular celebrating and building on the contribution which their members make to their neighbourhoods and to wider society; and to increase understanding between people of religious and non-religious belief.

For any enquiries about Inter Faith Week in England, please email: enquiries@interfaithweek.org.uk. The Inter Faith Week website www.interfaithweek.org.uk will be further developed across the coming weeks to provide further resources (including a report on last year's Week) and event and project ideas.

An Inter Faith Week is currently under consideration in Northern Ireland.

Scottish Inter Faith Week is taking place from 28 November to 5 December. Further details can be found at www.scottishinterfaithcouncil.org.

The Big Lunch – 18 July

The Big Lunch is an Eden Project initiative which takes place across the UK on 18 July and aims to build and strengthen communities by encouraging people to have lunch with their neighbours, as a simple, fun and inclusive act of community. The Big Lunch took place for the first time last year with 730,000 people eating at 8,000 Lunches all across the UK – the biggest set of street parties since the Golden Jubilee.

The Big Lunch aims to be as inclusive as possible and the team are working with many organisations (including the Inter Faith Network) to help spread the word. Inter faith initiatives often use food as an essential part of their activities to encourage dialogue and networking between people of different faiths. The Big Lunch is a great opportunity to reach out and start conversations in an informal way in your neighbourhood.

If you are interested in holding a Big Lunch in your own community you can find free Big Lunch tips and resources at www.thebiglunch.com, where you can also register your Big Lunch on the special map. For further information please contact Claire Crook on 020 7307 3144 or at claire.crook@thebiglunch.com.

Inter Faith Week in England and Wales

An Inter Faith Week will take place across England and Wales from Sunday 21 to Saturday 27 November 2010.

The aims of the Week are: to strengthen good inter faith relations at all levels; to increase awareness of the different and distinct faith communities in the UK, in particular celebrating and building on the contribution which their members make to their neighbourhoods and to wider society; and to increase understanding between people of religious and non-religious belief.

This will be the second time that such a Week has taken place in England and Wales. It builds on the very successful pattern of events held last November which ranged from social action events, to discussions and dialogues, inter faith football matches, meals, inter faith walks and pilgrimages, festivals and celebrations, tree plantings, exhibitions, concerts, film festivals, activities in schools and in FE and HE and other institutions.

The Week is being led by the Inter Faith Network for the UK, working with its member bodies, in consultation with the Department for Communities and Local Government and also with the Department for Children, Schools and Families, the Local Government Association and the Equality and Human Rights Commission. Regional Faith Forums in England will again play a key role in supporting and making known the pattern of events in their regions. In Wales, the lead on the Week is being taken by the Inter Faith Council for Wales in consultation with relevant statutory and other bodies.

For any enquiries about Inter Faith Week in England, please email: enquiries@interfaithweek.org.uk. The Inter Faith Week website www.interfaithweek.org.uk will be further developed across the coming weeks to provide further resources (including a report on last year's Week) and event and project ideas.

An Inter Faith Week is currently under consideration in Northern Ireland.

Equality Bill

The Report stage in the House of Lords of the Equality Bill was completed on 2 March and Third Reading took place on 23 March. A full briefing note on the Bill was placed on IFN's website last month. The Bill now returns to the House of Commons for it to consider the amendments made to the Bill by the House of Lords in Committee, on Report and on Third Reading.

During the Report stage the House of Lords voted to accept an amendment to the Bill in order to remove the prohibition on civil partnerships taking place in religious buildings, while placing no obligations on religious organisations to host civil partnerships if they do not wish to do so. The amendment enables Liberal Judaism, the Quakers and Unitarians to do so, which is what they wish. On Third Reading some consequential amendments were agreed without a vote. The relevant provisions will be brought into force by a commencement order. The Government made it clear that it would consult fully about the details of the implementation of these new arrangements, including the new regulations which will be required in due course.

Another amendment to the Bill, which was agreed at the Report stage without a vote, was to confer powers on 'a Minister of the Crown' to amend, by order, the section describing the protected characteristic of 'race' "so as to provide for caste to be an aspect of race". The Government has commissioned the National Institute of Economic and Social Research to explore the nature, extent and severity of caste prejudice and discrimination in Britain, and its associated implications for future Government policy; and, on this basis, accepted the inclusion of a power in the Bill which could be exercised or not in the light of the research and consultation on it.

You can follow the progress of the Bill at <http://services.parliament.uk/bills/2009-10/equality.html>.

Faiths in Action Round 2 and 'Faith Matters'

Faiths in Action is a £4 million grant programme being administered by the Community Development Foundation (CDF). The fund is being distributed over two years in two rounds of funding. In the first round, 216 organisations were offered grants of up to £12,000, totalling over £2.43 million.

Applications have now opened for the second round of funding.

Grants of up to £6,000 are being offered. There is no formal deadline for applications. It is a rolling programme and applications will be accepted in the date and time order that they are received by CDF until the total value of the eligible relevant applications equals the overall value of the fund.

More information on the funding programme and how to apply, together with a PowerPoint briefing presentation and pdf leaflet can be found at www.cdf.org.uk/web/guest/faiths-in-action.

You can also telephone the helpline on 01223 406533 or e-mail CDF at fundingadmin@cdf.org.uk.

CDF's new publication, 'Faith Matters' is a collection of 19 in-depth case studies of projects funded by the Faiths in Action grant programme. Looking specifically at projects dealing with the environment, dialogue, young people and social action, 'Faith Matters' offers faith practitioners evidence to inform their projects and to prove the importance of faith work to policy-makers. Voluntary and community sector workers will benefit from good practice drawn from case studies in running local projects and attracting funding.

A free pdf of the book can be downloaded from www.cdf.org.uk/web/guest/news-headline?id=222269. Hard copies are available at £15.95 and can be purchased online.

Secretary of State announcements at Faith and Social Action conference

At a CLG conference on faith and social action on 17 March Mr John Denham, Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government, announced a new Faith Leadership in Government Fund worth £1.2m, designed to increase the capacity to engage of national faith community bodies which work with Government; a £50,000 Innovation in Faith-Based Social Action Prize to help publicise and reward faith based projects which have not yet received the recognition they deserve which are finding new ways to meet local problems, bring people together and meet the needs of local communities; and 'mythbusting' guidance for local authorities to remove confusion affecting commissioning of faith based bodies to deliver services. ## Visible - quality assurance and faith based organisations

The Faith based Regeneration Network (FbRN) is working with the Community Matters, the Church Urban Fund and the Faith and Civil Society department of Goldsmith's College to develop a quality assurance framework for faith based organisations. This will build on the VISIBLE framework (www.visiblecommunities.org.uk/) which Community Matters has been using for some years and which is currently being revised. As part of the process, they will be piloting the quality assurance framework with six faith based organisations. If you would like to be considered as a pilot project or to learn more about the project please contact Jane: 07734 962140; janewinter@fbrn.org.uk by 31 March.

Two EHRC research reports

The EHRC has published two reports in its Research Report series.

The first was Good Relations: a conceptual analysis by Nick Johnson and John Tatam of the Institute of Community Cohesion.

This report examines what is actually meant by good relations and how this reflects, or stems from, theoretical approaches and public policy, and begins to suggest ways in which good relations might be measured. It therefore forms the initial output from the Commission's programme of work on good relations that will result in the establishment of a Good Relations Measurement Framework (GRMF). The report can be found at:

www.equalityhumanrights.com/uploaded\_files/research/research\_report\_42\_-\_good\_relations\_a\_conceptual\_analysis.pdf.

The second report, Religion or belief: identifying issues and priorities, was produced by Linda Woodhead (with the assistance of Rebecca Catto) who is Professor of Sociology and Religion at Lancaster University and Director of the Religion and Society Programme of the Arts and Humanities Research Council and the Economic Research Council.

In April and May 2009 three seminars were held in London, Lancaster and Glasgow. Each seminar had around thirty participants, all experts in the field, including academics, policymakers and practitioners. The London seminar focused particularly on the situation in England; the Lancaster seminar on England and Wales, and the Glasgow seminar on Scotland. After these three seminars, a final one was held at the Commission's offices in Manchester, at which preliminary findings were discussed with Commission staff. The purpose of the seminars was to assist the Commission in the early stages of thinking about its responsibility for 'religion or belief', and associated issues of religious equality and discrimination, fairness and good relations, with a particular focus on developing the evidence base for this mandate. This report completes this seminar-based research project. It summarises the aims, methodology and context of the research, offers an overview of the papers presented at the seminars, analyses the main themes arising from the seminars, and draws out research and policy implications. The report can be found at: http://www.equalityhumanrights.com/uploaded\_files/research/research\_report\_48\_religion\_or\_belief.pdf.

National Policing Improvement Agency guidance

The Citizen Focus and Neighbourhood Policing Programme Team of the National Policing Improvement Agency (NPIA) has recently produced an interactive guide for neighbourhood policing teams and partners on Working with Faith Communities.

This guide is one in a series produced by the Citizen Focus and Neighbourhood Policing Programme Team aimed at increasing engagement with the public. The guide includes information on visiting places of worship and is designed to support Neighbourhood Policing Teams and partners to work more closely with faith communities at a local level. Its aim is to help them in identifying and addressing the specific needs and priorities identified by faith communities within a wider neighbourhood policing engagement strategy.

A copy of the guide can be downloaded from www.npiadocuments.co.uk/faithguidance.pdf.

Counter Terrorism in Places of Worship

The National Counter Terrorism Security Office (NaCTSO) has researched and produced a guide intended to give protective security advice to those who are responsible for security in places of worship. Whilst the document concentrates on measures to counter terrorism, it is hoped that these will also work against other threats, such as theft, burglary and arson (which remain the greatest threats to places of worship). The NaCTSO press release says “It is accepted that the concept of absolute security is almost impossible to achieve in combating the threat of terrorism, but it is possible, through the use of this guidance, to reduce the risk to as low as reasonably practicable.”

A copy of the guide can be downloaded from www.nactso.gov.uk/placesofworship.php.

Charity Commission guidance on elections

The Charity Commission has recently updated its guidance on elections and politics. This guidance is for use by charities during the period between the announcement of an election, and the date on which an election is held and applies to both national and local elections. The guidance sits alongside other requirements, such as electoral law, which apply to charities and non-charities alike. A full copy of the updated guidance on Charities and Elections can be downloaded at www.charity-commission.gov.uk/supportingcharities/elect.asp.

The Charity Commission’s website says: “The independent nature of the charitable sector is of fundamental importance to society, and is greatly valued by the public. The guiding principle of charity law in terms of elections is that charities should be, and be seen to be, independent from party politics. This guidance contains legal and good practice advice to charities to help ensure that they are able both to: retain the essential quality of independence; and use their voice effectively at election times.”

This brief updated guidance should be read in conjunction with the Charity Commission’s more detailed guidance on the wider subject of Speaking Out: Guidance on campaigning and political activities by charities (www.charity-commission.gov.uk/publications/cc9.asp). The principles described in this continue to apply during an election period.

New model constitution for very small charities

The Charity Commission, in partnership with a number of umbrella bodies across the charity sector, has launched a new, simplified constitution which is designed for very small charities with an annual income of under £5,000 (which do not need to register with the Charity Commission, but are still subject to charity law) and which do not own land or employ staff. The template constitution uses clear, direct language and is just 700 words long. For more information, including the downloadable constitution, go to www.charitycommission.gov.uk/registration/smallcharity.asp. (Please note that if a charity’s income exceeds £5,000, it will need to register with the Charity Commission and will then need a more comprehensive governing document.)

Charity Commission good practice guide for faith-based organisations

The Charity Commission has published Faith in Good Governance, a new guide to good practice for the 30,000 faith-based organisations in the third sector. It is hoped that the guidance, released by the Commission's Faith and Social Cohesion Unit, will help trustees, staff and volunteers of faith-based charities, including places of worship, comply with charity law, and equip them to work even better, whilst recognising that maintenance of their faith-identity, core aims and mission is key. The guidance is primarily aimed at the trustees, staff and volunteers of those charities established with a religious purpose whose primary focus is religious worship and associated activities, rather than wider social or pastoral activity. A full copy of Faith in Good Governance can be downloaded at www.charity-commission.gov.uk/tcc/faithgov.asp#fore.

Public benefit assessments for charities

Charities are required to submit to the Charity Commission as part of their report for financial years commencing on or after 1 April 2008 a report on how their activities achieved their aims for the public benefit.

Guidance about the public benefit requirements specifically for religious charities is contained in the Commission's document on The Advancement of Religion for the Public Benefit which can be found at www.charity-commission.gov.uk/publicbenefit/pbreligion.asp.

The Commission has placed on its website a report on the emerging findings for charity trustees of its public benefit assessment work so far. The report contains case studies relating to 12 charities (including four charities 'advancing religion'). (www.charity-commission.gov.uk/publicbenefit/default.asp)

The Commission has also placed on its website some illustrative (fictitious) examples of reporting on public benefit including one for a mosque. These can be found under its website section on Public Benefit Reporting. ### 'Refreshed' Compact published

A refreshed version of the 'Compact' between the Government and the voluntary sector has been developed.

A 'Compact' between the Government and the voluntary sector was established in England in November 1998, inspired by recommendations in the earlier Deakin Commission report on the Future of the Voluntary Sector. The Compact provides an overall framework for promoting effective partnership working between the Government and the third sector. A new version has now been developed following extensive debate and consultation.

The refreshed Compact retains all the key points of the original but takes into account recent developments in law, policy and practice and subsumes material previously covered in separate Codes of Practice. It is divided into three key areas covering involvement in policy development, allocating resources and advancing equality. The agreement reaffirms the Government's and the third sector's commitments to 12-week consultation and three-year funding. In addition, it recognises that volunteering is a defining characteristic of the third sector and this cross-cutting theme is acknowledged throughout the shared principles and commitments. It highlights the shared principles which Compact partners should follow when engaging in partnership working, and records all the Compact commitments. These commitments cover three key areas: involvement in policy development; allocating resources; and advancing equality

The revised Compact has been signed by the Prime Minister and by the Chair of Compact Voice and on behalf of the third sector.

The 'refreshed' Compact is accompanied by a smaller publication entitled 'An introduction to the Compact', containing general information about the Compact, explaining to whom it applies to and how to implement it and resolve differences. Both this and the Compact itself can be found on the website of the Commission for the Compact at www.thecomcompact.org.uk.

Places of Worship risk survey and VAT refunds

English Heritage, as part of its Heritage at Risk programme, is researching the physical condition of places of worship. On 30 June it will announce the results of a sample survey that offers an insight into the condition of England's listed faith buildings, revealing how many are likely to be at serious risk of decay and explore what is happening in others to maintain these national treasures for the future. English Heritage's press release can be found at www.english-heritage.org.uk/server/show/ConWebDoc.17689. To widen its research and to improve its understanding of how it can best help congregations to help themselves, English Heritage invites anyone with an interest in their local historic church or other place of worship to tell them of their challenges and successes and answer a few simple questions on its website www.english-heritage.org.uk/server/show/nav.21499.

A large number of historic church buildings are under threat because they will soon lose the right to a special refund. The refund, which allows historic churches and other places of worship to claim back the VAT on the cost of repairs and maintenance, is due to end in March 2011. An online petition to save the refund has been set up at www.savetherefund.info.

Revised guidance for RE

Updated guidance on RE provision for primary and secondary schools and local authorities to support the delivery of good RE in schools in England by the Department for Children, Schools and Families was published at the end of January following a consultation exercise last summer. The guidance was produced in consultation with faith groups, RE professional bodies, representatives of the Standing Advisory Council for Religious Education (SACRE) and partners within the Religious Education Council. It replaces the guidance on RE (but not collective worship) contained in Circular 1/94 issued in 1994 by the then Department for Education.

The guidance takes into account significant changes in types of schools and the curriculum, and to set out the Government's views on the importance of RE in the early 21st century. It reflects the multi-ethnic and multi-faith nature of our society and the Government's emphasis on community cohesion, which schools have a new duty to promote.

It also includes:

- A greater emphasis on personalising learning to help pupils to better develop socially and emotionally as well as in their studies
- Information on how different types of schools – from Academies to voluntary aided faith schools – should provide RE
- More guidance on how to link RE to other subjects in line with the new, more flexible and coherent primary and secondary curriculum
- Case studies and practical information on how teachers can work with local faith groups and can use RE to support community cohesion.

Alongside this updated guidance, DCSF published the first ever programme of learning for primary religious education (RE). The new non-statutory programme of learning and updated RE guidance will give local authorities and schools more ideas and support on how to develop their local RE curriculum. This will also make RE teaching consistent with the rest of the new primary curriculum, which is intended for first teaching in September 2011.

The relevant DCSF Press Notice can be found at http://www.dcsf.gov.uk/pns/DisplayPN.cgi?pn\_id=2010\_0027 and links to the two documents can be found at <http://www.teachernet.gov.uk/teachingandlearning/subjects/re/guidance/> and <http://curriculum.qcda.gov.uk/new-primary-curriculum/areas-of-learning/religious-education/index.aspx>.
